ALHAMBRA SEEN AT SUNSET

Through Alameda Park—Visits Granada—The Moorish Mosque at Cordova—The Cathedral at Seville—The Alcazar—Embarking at Tangiers a Novelty—Back Again to Gibraltar.

GRAND HOTEL,
GIBRALTAR, May 28, 1904.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

Thinking our friends in the G. P. O. might like to hear of the travels of two of the membership of No. 101, I take the liberty of sending you a brief account to date:

Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Roderick and my wife and self departed from New York on May 7 on the Princess Irene of the North German Lloyd, and after an uneventful voyage of seven days passed the island of San Miguel of the Azore group, where, in answer to the whistle of our steamer, a tug put out from the town of Porta Delgada and picked up a cask containing mail, which had been thrown overboard by the purser.

On the morning of the 16th we sighted the Spanish coast at 8 o'clock, and a few minutes later the mountains of Africa and the town of Tangiers hove in sight. The view is very fine coming through the Straits of Gibraltar, the mountains and villages of Spain and Morocco being plainly seen with the naked eye. At 10 a. m. we anchored in the harbor of Gibraltar and were conveyed to the dock by a steam tender. Driving to the Grand Hotel and securing rooms and luncheon, we secured British and Spanish money, and then called a cab and drove to the barracks, registered, and an officer conducted us through many of the tunneled chambers of the famous Rock of Gibraltar, after which we drove the entire length of the rock to Europa Point, the southernmost point of Europe, passing the governor's summer and winter palaces. On our return we drove through the Alameda, a wonderfully fine park filled with tropical plants and a profusion of beautiful flowers, oranges, lemon, and fig trees.

The streets of Gibraltar are rather narrow but well paved, and are filled with a moving throng of the natives of the world. The gaily-turbaned Moors can be seen on every thoroughfare. Tommy Atkins is here in force, some 12,000 of them at present.

Tuesday morning, the 17th, we boarded a steamer and crossed the bay to the city of Algeciras, where we boarded the train for Granada, passing through scenery that can not be excelled in the world. At 3 o'clock we arrived at Bobadilla and changed cars. At this point a company of Spanish soldiers got on the train, the first lieutenant riding in our compartment. We found him an extremely pleasant gentleman. As he could speak French and a little English, we enjoyed a conversation with him, in which he gave us to understand that Americans were not only popular in Spain, but were most welcome. He pointed out the various places of interest on our trip and did all he could to show his friendliness. When we arrived at Granada he bid us a gracious "Adios," and offered to conduct us through the Alhambra the next day.

We put up at the Washington Irving Hotel, which is located in close proximity to the Alhambra, situated 2,500 feet above the sea. Granada has a population of 65,000, but under the Moors it was more than half a million. The houses are brilliantly painted, but the streets are narrow and not very clean. It is intersected by the rivers Darro and Genil and built in the shape of an ampitheatre around the hill crowned by the famous palace of the Moorish kings. I shall not try to tell of the wondrous beauties of this magnificent pile, but rather refer our friends to the "Arabian Nights" and Washington Irving's "Tales of the Alhambra," but these volumes do not tell one-half of the wonderful creations of the Moors.

We visited the palace time and time again, each visit resulting in finding some new point of interest. We spent each evening in one of the battlements watching the sun set, a sight that can not be described in cold type, but must be seen to be realized. No painter can put on canvas the landscape that spreads out for miles and miles. In our rear we can see the ever snow-capped mountains of the Sierra Nevada, on our right the magnificent summer palace of the Moorish princes, Generalife, which means the "garden of the architect."

We visited the Cathedral and gazed upon the tombs of Ferdinand and Isabella, of their crazy daughter Joanna and her husband, Philip of Burgundy. Their sepulchres are said to be the most magnificent in the world. We went down in the crypt and saw their caskets and felt we had seen the tombs of two persons more closely identified with the history of America than anyone else.

We had an amusing time in engaging a carriage when we left the Cathedral. The driver could not understand what we wanted and a large crowd gathered around us, including a number of policemen, each one offering some suggestion. In desperation we managed to make the driver start. As we departed from the throng we lifted our hats and shouted "Adios," to which the crowd gave a like reply.

After a stay of three days in the Garden of the Gods, where we had the pleasure of meeting Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Beale, of Washington, we took a train for Cordova. It was the time of their annual fair, and after visiting all the hotels could not find accommodation. After learning that no train would depart for Seville until 2.30 the next morning, we became desperate and, returning to the largest hotel, informed them we were Americans and must have a room for the ladies, at least. After much talking and gesticulating they said they would let us have the parlor with four beds in it for 100 pesetas, providing we would vacate the room at 11 a. m. the next day. We jumped at the offer and felt like telling them we were sorry Dewey and Schley had used their fleets so badly. After dinner we called a carriage and drove through the brilliantly-illuminated streets, thronged with a moving mass of happy Dons. The next day we visited the famous Moorish Mosque, one of the finest illustrations of Moorish architecture. This pile is so marvelous that I will only give your readers an idea of its extent. A thousand columns of marble, porphyry, jasper, etc., brought from Carthage, Constantinople, Alexandria, and other cities, support the roof and divide the Cathedral into nineteen principal and thirty-six lesser aisles. The double arches are wonders in themselves and a thousand of them almost stupefies one in amazement.

In the afternoon we went to Seville, the largest city in Southern Spain, and noted for its beauty. We visited the Cathedral and saw the tomb of Columbus and many other interesting sights in this, the second largest cathedral in the world. The Alcazar was our next surprise. The building and gardens are beyond my power of description, and I will again refer our friends to some volume descriptive of the beauties of these marvelous palaces of the Moors.

We spent a pleasant hour in the house of Pilate, a building in imitation of the one that existed at one time in Jerusalem. We visited the cigar factory, a government institution, where several thousand women are employed, the bull ring, and many other places of interest, and then took our departure for Cadiz, a city that is losing its commercial greatness and fast decaying, although there are many beautiful parks and buildings. We left this city by steamer at 6 o'clock in the morning, and after a rough passage down the coast of Spain, arrived in the harbor of Tangiers at 1 o'clock. As there is no pier we were compelled to go off in small boats, and the experience is a novel one. We walked down the steps at the side of the ship, and as the small boat would bob up and down like corks it is a difficult feat to get in them. At a favorable opportunity a big, strong-armed Moor would grab one of us around the waist and pull us in and set us down on a seat. It was amusing to watch the ladies, but they took their medicine like veterans.

After lunch we engaged Mustapha, a well-known Moorish guide, to take us through the streets of this truly Oriental city—Oriental in people and architecture as well as odors. He took us to the market, where we saw caravans of camels, donkeys, and mules bringing in food, wood, and everything imaginable from the hills surrounding Tangiers. The windows of our hotels looked down on the harbor, where a scene could be witnessed that I doubt can be duplicated in the world.

The next day we started out on mules, accompanied with our guide and two men, all gaily costumed in burnoose and turban, and rode through the city and surrounding hills, obtaining many beautiful views of the sea and land.

Yesterday we took ship for Gibraltar, where we arrived in four hours after a very pleasant voyage along the African and Spanish coast.

To-day we witnessed, from a vantage point 500 feet up the rock, the Channel and Mediterranean fleet of seventy men-of-war enter the bay, a sight worth going 5,000 miles to see.

Monday we resume our journey to Naples, where we arrive Thursday.

Wishing our many friends in the G. P. O. were here with us, and promising to send a continuation of this, I am,

Yours, etc.,

F. E. BUCKLAND.

Bindery Notes.

Ask George Wright if he found what he went out for.

"Pop" Burns has some very nice pocketbooks to give away. Get posted how to get one.

There is no doubt but what George Reynolds is as good a cowboy as he ever was. He demonstrated it three days last week.

We are glad to hear that our friend Pye has inherited a mansion, and hope he may spend the greater portion of his time in his wine celler, where the choicest wines will be in abundance.

John Motherhead has kindly consented to keep his window closed for the summer for the benefit of Harry Willis. A bad cold with Harry's temper would make things hot around his alley.

A cordial invitation is extended to all those interested in trades unions to attend the services of the Fletcher M. E. Church, New York avenue and Fourth street northwest, Sunday June 19, at 11 a. m. An interesting sermon will be preached by the Rev. J. B. McLoughlin on the subject of "Relations of Capital and Labor as Taught by the Word of God." Sunday school at 9. a. m.; preaching in the evening by the pastor Rev. J. Edgar Smith, at 8 p. m.

About forty bookbinders made up the party to Dickey's under the leadership of Jake Wiedman on Sunday last. The run was made in record-breaking time, as there was but one chance on the way, but MANY at the end of the trip. The following is a partial list of the party: Miller, Dwyer, Keizer, Powell, Schlick, Stark, Siversten, Belair, Bergeson, Parry, Metcalf, Hope, McClane, Dreis, Hickey, Warren, Perkins, Webster, Grenacker, Emerson, Goldthwait, Fox, Adams, Benker, Nevins, Stack, Harmon, Donohue, Chute, Holbrook, Amos, Conroy, Holt, Dufty, Lendy, White, Weidman. HEAD BANDS.

Whispering Bill Brady is now writing a song entitled "The Freaks we Meet Everyday."

Jack Walsh visited Colonial Beach and will break ground shortly for a new hotel.

Joe McManus is now a graduate of the Georgetown Law School. We wish him success and big fees.

Last Saturday night Captain White fell from a tree on the Bladensburg Road, where he had a free seat and was watching the fireworks.

John Atkins visited one of the large hotels and treated himself to a swell dinner, and if it was not for the five-mile walk his trainer, John O'Brien, gave him, he would died of indigestion.

Under the Star Spangled Banner the patriots in the Bindery, G. P. O., assembled on Flag Day in the finishing room and paid tribute to Old Glory. The celebration was held dinner hour and continued at 4.30 p. m. The program consisted of the National Anthem; oration, Mr. Thomas Songster; song, Wm. B. Hyde; solo, Miss Smith; recitation, Wm. Reese; tenor solo, F. A. Seyfferth. All joined in singing the Star Spangled Banner. Wm. C. Connor acted as chairman.

The Poet's Guerdon

WILLIAM TIPTON TALBOTT

The poet's guerdon e'er must lie
In noble scorn of wordly jeers
And glimpses of the good and true
Through inspiration's mist of tears.

That singer merits scarce the name
Of poet who within the mart
Trills idle lays. On heights remote
Are heard song's wizards of the heart.

The under-thought of Shakspere scarce
Can reach heart-depths of this far day;
His world recked not thought's rapier thrust,
But craved the coarser cudgel-play.

A brother spirit here and there
Yielded his heart to Shakspere's touch;
But in that loud, stout-hearted world
Of lusty men, how many such?

Where Burns made music in the soul
Of one choice spirit from the throng,
A thousand tongues gave vapid praise,
Moved by the jingle of his song.

Our own sad singer of the night,
The rapt high priest of beauty, Poe,
To unresponsive hearts shall seem
But a fantastic child of woe.

Still he shall count it gain who thinks
His song may soften pain and strife,
Though down his wayside path he goes
Unnoticed in the rush of life.

Within himself the bard must find
Reward beyond all earthly dole;
The song's best temple e'er shall be
The silence of the singer's soul.

THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION

Carpenters Matter Finally Settled on Report of Committee.

LABOR DAY AT BENNINGS TRACK

Resolutions Adopted on Labor Conditions in Colorado—Half Holiday to Navy-Yard Employees Practically Assured—The Lafayette Theater Receiving Attention from the Affiliated Unions.

The regular weekly meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8 p. m. on Monday evening, President Sherman in the chair.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

From Horseshoers' Union, No. 17, certifying Daniel Whalen, L. Jones, J. Droney, and George Neal.

The credentials were approved and delegates seated.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Bottlers' Union, No. 251, noting change of time of meeting of that union. Placed on file.

From Carriage and Wagon Workers' Union, No. 72, stating that they agree to parade on Labor Day, in carriages, 100 strong. Referred to Labor Day Committee.

From E. J. Ratigan, secretary of Council of Allied Building Trades, inclosing copy of letter from Local No. 368, Painters, withdrawing its delegates from the Council of Allied Building Trades. The secretary was directed to notify No. 368 to return its delegates to the Council of Allied Building Trades or they will be expelled from the Central Labor Union.

From John G. Schmidt, secretary of Allied Label League and Miscellaneous Trades Council, asking for enforcement of the decision of the president of the Central Labor Union of section 1, Article III, that Locals must affiliate with the section they belong to, and requesting that all unions eligible to membership in the Allied Label League and Miscellaneous Trades Council be directed to affiliate therewith. The request was granted.

From Engineers, No. 99, stating that the action of the Central Labor Union in placing Lafayette Theater on unfair list was indorsed. Filed.

A bill for $2.25 for typewriting for Contract Committee was ordered paid.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Bottlers stated that their contract had not been signed.

Stationary Firemen presented a form of contract, and, on favorable report, was indorsed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The Labor Day Committee reported that the Bennings race course, the property of the Washington Jockey Club, had been secured for the Labor Day outing, through the kindness of Mr. Samuel Ross, of Barber & Ross, of this city, acting for the Jockey Club. A vote of thanks, under seal of the Council, was passed, and extended to Mr. Ross for his interest in the matter.

The special committee on Woodward & Lothrop matter reported progress.

The special committee appointed to visit the President of the United States in the interest of Government employes not affected by the recent order giving a half holiday on Saturday during July, August, and September reported that they had hopes that the request to have the order of the President further extended would be granted. The committee was discharged, with thanks.

The special committee on Carpenters' differences with the Council of Allied Building Trades submitted a report, with certain recommendations, which was concurred in and referred to Council of Allied Building Trades.

Grievance Committee reported progress.

On motion, the Executive Board was directed to inquire into the advisability of purchasing twenty five shares of stock in Workmen's Bank.

The following resolution was passed, and a copy ordered sent to the President of the United States:

WHEREAS, The present deplorable condition of affairs existing in Cripple Creek, Colo.—the Telluride mines, in Teller County, of the State of Colorado—has been brought about by the organization known as the "Merchants' Law and Order League."

WHEREAS, The action on the part of the State military in deporting union miners from the State of Colorado into the arid district of Kansas, leaving them without food or water, was inhuman to the last degree, and stamps both the military, State officials, and self-appointed "Law and Order League" as the real anarchists; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Central Labor Union of Washington, D. C., denounces in unmeasured terms the action of the militia, the State officials of Colorado, and the anarchists known as the "Law and Order League" of Cripple Creek, Colo., and holds them up to the scorn and contempt of all law-abiding and peaceful citizens of the United States; be it

Resolved, further, That we pledge our moral and financial support to the members of organized labor of the State of Colorado as a further mark of our condemnation of the action of the said "Law and Order League" in securing the resignation of those officials favorable to organized labor by threats of lynching; and be it further

Resolved, That the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia request the President of the United States to interest himself in the state of affairs in the State of Colorado, and to see that justice is done.

Adjourned.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

A striking scene, that presented in the G. P. O. during the noon hour Tuesday, with six terraces—stairways—of humanity singing patriotic songs in commemoration of Flag Day. The girlish treble of a fair-haired daughter of Virginia rose heavenward in unison with the bass of a lusty-lunged negro laborer. Of a quartet whose voices mingled for the moment, one was born where the Creek and Cherokee stamped their nomenclature; another hailed from where the Susquehanna seeks the sea; another sung his sweetheart song by the side of the Sangamon, and the last was a son of that recumbent member of the sisterhood of States whose head lies pillowed in the bosom of the Alleghanies and whose feet are washed by the Fathers of Waters, kindling anew the fires of patriotism in the heart.

Washington is the home office of "the panhandler." From the proficiency attained by the misses in their early teens, they teach it in the schools. I own a brick in every church in the town; in some of them two. It doesn't do any good to change your route; they are working H as well as I street. To yield once is fatal. "Why, you gave that other girl a vote last week" is ample argument. Contiguous territory is infected. I was doing the Mount Vernon "guide act" for some Western newspaper friends on one occasion. During the stop of the trolley in Alexandria and while the pickaninnies were scrambling for pennies, a half-grown negro, better dressed than I was, lounged up to the car with, "Mister, give me a dime." Of course he got it. Seriously, the practice is a pernicious one. It breeds in the child, particularly the female, a degree of "freshness" far from desirable. One-half of the propositions, I feel safe in saying, are of a purely personal nature, and the whole serves to constitute a crime little short of highway robbery.

Volume IX, No. 1.

With this issue of THE TRADES UNIONIST we pass into the ninth year of its existence. From an experimental proposition, having a struggle for maintenance, it has developed into a substantial business property. While many of our readers have kindly endeavored to aid the management in advising its policy, though without success, the paper has finally made its way to public favor. To our friends and patrons we extend our thanks for past favors and pledge ourselves to the interest of organized labor and its future work.

"Fight or Get Off the Earth!"

Only the stupid or insensible ones have yet to learn of the advantages of organization to workingmen as a help in securing employment and the establishment of the uniform number of hours which shall constitute a "reasonable service" at reasonable remuneration. These are the essentials of trades unionism the world over, and those who belong to the wage class and are trying to weave an excuse to justify an objection are lending themselves to an interest antagonistic to the welfare of wage-earners everywhere.

It is an unfortunate phase of the situation that self-interest with the wealth producers is so often lacking, and that with these the opportunity for betterment of conditions is lost sight of or retarded by the sophistry of those whose whole aim and object it is to extort from labor the greatest possible amount of service for the least possible remuneration.

The old custom, and which still prevails outside of trade organization, contemplated labor as a thing to be had at such valuation as the purchaser in the exercise of a selfish discrimination might impose. This was regarded as the proper relation which should exist between capital and labor—a degree of justice instituted and conferred by those whose discernment admitted of no suggestion other than to crowd as much of man into the dollar as possible; and now, even under somewhat improved conditions, the dollar has grown to be so much bigger than the man that the capitalistic barons are arranging for the coronation in recognition of the fulfillment of the "divine plan," to which we have finally evoluted. The agencies of this plan having been established, there seems to be no alternative for the workers except to fight or take the medicine—starve or be shot to death for assuming to know too much of their own needs or suffer deportation by the military for alleged infidelity to the powers that be.

The struggle grows in intensity, but the victory will be the more lasting by reason of the obstacles encountered, the hardships endured, the sacrifices made, and points of vantage gained. Finally, it will come to pass that man is recognized as of greater value than the dollar, but for the present it is "fight or get off the earth." The challenge is accepted.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

The war on organized labor in what is called "Cripple Creek district," in Colorado, is one of the strongest exhibitions of corporate greed and brutal disregard of law that the world has ever seen. Beginning in a struggle for an eight-hour day, which the people of the State had voted for in the shape of a constitutional amendment and which a bribed legislature and courts refused to carry into effect, every effort that human depravity is capable of has been resorted to to break down the miners' organization, even to deporting them and all in sympathy with unionism in any way from the county and State. It is impossible that the American people can permit such outrages to succeed in the enslavement of workingmen. The wage-earners have had such a taste of liberty in this country that if the union crushers are successful in breaking the unions up, as the Parrys threaten, they will exist as secret societies, and without the responsibility to society which they now have. As it would be impossible, with all the machinery of Government, to re-enslave the black man, at this day, so it is impossible to so re-enslave the unionist of the present day that he will work for wages in the fixing of which he has no hand. When the workingman learns the value of his ballot and to refuse it to the man who is not his friend, he will have made a long step toward working out his own salvation. It has come to be the custom, when the militia of a State are called out to quell disorder, to use them to break a strike, instead of leaving the antagonists to settle their dispute by their own resources. The thinking workingmen are getting restive at seeing the authorities always taking sides with the employers. The example of President Cleveland in sending United States troops into Illinois to quell a railroad strike, after Governor Altgeld had refused to call out the militia for the same purpose, has been quoted with great approbation by the enemies of labor. Mr. Cleveland's excuse was that the strikers interfered with the transportation of the United States mails, whereas the truth was that the railroad companies used the mails as a subterfuge, insisting on running heavy trains of Pullmans with each mail car. The strikers were willing to haul all mail cars, if nothing else was in the train. Let us stop prating about this being a free country when a workingman can be driven from his home for belonging to a union.

Just how this correspondence got into my hands does not matter. It is good reading matter, and that is the mission of THE TRADES UNIONIST to furnish:

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES U. S.,
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 28, 1904.

Hon. F. W. PALMER,
Public Printer, City.

DEAR SIR: At the close of this second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, which has been a very busy one indeed, I can not refrain from complimenting the competent executive management of the Printing Office. In my capacity as chairman of the House Committee on Enrolled Bills, it became my duty to carefully examine the bills after their final print on parchment, and so impressed have I been with the thorough accuracy and nature of the work at your office that it impels me to indite these few lines in testimony of my appreciation of conditions that have been exceptional by the absence of errors and mistakes.

With great respect, I am, very truly,
FRANK C. WACHTER,
Chairman Committee on Enrolled Bills, H. of R.

I heartily concur.
A. MCDOWELL,
Clerk H. of R.

I join with gratitude.
C. R. MCKENNEY,
Enrolling Clerk, H. of R.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
May 19, 1904.

Hon. F. W. PALMER,
Public Printer, Washington, D. C.

SIR: During the first and second sessions of the Fifty-eighth Congress a larger amount of business was transacted by this office than for any corresponding period of time within the memory of those longest in the service of the Senate. As an inevitable consequence, there was a greater demand upon the resources of the Government Printing Office. The conditions were the more trying in that there were not the usual adjournments from Thursday to Monday, to give your office an occasional opportunity to get abreast with the work. At no time did the public business suffer from any delay at the Printing Office, and the undersigned feel that in simple justice to you and your employees, especially Mr. Ricketts and Mr. Dierken, we should make this attempt to express our appreciation of the efforts of the two gentlemen named, as well as other assistants, to do all in their power to facilitate the transaction of the public business. The demands upon them were unceasing, and at all hours, day and night, they responded willingly and cheerfully.

Very sincerely, yours,
H. B. MCDONALD,
Journal Clerk.
B. S. PLATT,
Enrolling Clerk.
E. L. GIVENS,
Bill Clerk.
CLARENCE JOHNSON,
Executive Clerk.
J. W. BARTLETT,
Index Clerk.
WM. B. TURNER,
Printing Clerk.

As the daily publication of the Congessional Record during the two sessions was one continuous success also, everybody has greater reason than ever to be proud of the great Government Printing Office.

* * * *

Last Tuesday was Flag Day, and the Record room was gay with the national colors, that being the only room decorated, so far as I know. In obedience to an invitation generally extended, originating with whom I do not know, all the singers of the office collected in the front halls on the various floors, connected by stairways, for a song service. They first sang "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and in response to an encore gave that grand anthem, "America." Being further encouraged by generous applause they sang a patriotic hymn having the same air as "God Save the King," and again rendered "My County, 'Tis of Thee" as a wind-up. It is said there were many good voices in the aggregation, but that the others drowned them. The incident went to show that we are full of patriotism.

Rev. Charles Alvin Smith, pastor of the Peck Memorial Presbyterian Church, of Georgetown, preached a National Union sermon last Sunday evening on "The Flag, Home, and Charity," as a part of the series of observances in honor of the founding of the order. Rev. Mr. Smith is the sitting ex-president of Dahlgren Council, No. 1003, National Union. Among those seated on the platform were Charles T. Hendler, president of the District of Columbia Cabinet; Capt. H. T. Brian, ex-president of the Senate, and Leonard Nachman, president of Dahlgren Council, the sermon being particularly for the benefit of this Council, and in the audience were many prominent members of the order. The sermon was an able one and all were delighted with the mode of observance.

The following sensible words are an extract from a recent editorial in the Chicago Inter Ocean:

The cost of labor is one of the principal items that enter into competition between business men. No one can deny this. Then is it not a decided advantage to deal with an organization of labor that guarantees to the business man that his competitor is paying the same wages that he does? And besides, there is not a union in existence which places minimum wages above what a man can afford to support a family upon comfortably. Union wages are always reasonable wages.

Employers of labor who object to the strictly union shops do so simply because union regulations require a standard of justice to the workmen that most employers want to violate in the interests of profits.

What a cultured set of fellows those in the Library Branch are! A. J. Ward recently graduated in law at Columbia University. Battles and Murphy are medical students. Nelgner and Bisbee are delving into philology. S. C. Koons is studying mechanical drawing and has exhibited specimens of his handiwork. William McMullin graduated from the Bliss Electric School last year. Bolton is a linguist and a close student of history. Ramsperger is a scholar in German, Greek, and other European languages. It must be in the air of the Library—this studiousness.

* * * *

The Association of Ex-Delegates at their meeting last Sunday augmented their convention committee until it numbers fifteen, talked convention awhile, and went home. The number present over a quorum was not considerable.

* * * *

Already plans are being made and measurements taken for the installation of the linotypes, according to common rumor, which has apportioned thirty to the Record, seven to the Job Room, and three to the Library Branch. There are many skilled operators already employed in the office, and if I had anything like a complete list of them I would publish it, but an incomplete one would only be productive of sour stomachs.

* * * *

Columbia Union did not have one-tenth of the trouble selecting a vice-president that the Republican party has. But then we did not insist on forcing the office on somebody who did not want it. We have Armstrongs, Herzingers, and Loves as against Cannons. Happy thought: Why not let the Republican convention select a candidate?

If you want to live awhile and have good health, stop your infernal rushing. Take life cool and as though you had time to do everything you have to do. Don't go to and from the office as though you were going to a fire. If you have occasion to go anywhere in the room, don't imagine you are a race-horse. When the quitting whistle blows, remember that the elevators and stairways will be there at least five minutes longer. IF you want to do some rushing that counts, do it in front of your frame or desk. There is where it amounts to something. Nervous prostration catches the rushers sooner or later.

"Mose" Holbruner has been in Boston ever since Congress adjourned, a part of the time in the hospital.

It has been a great wonder to me whether Shelby Smith will warm up the Philadelphians or whether they will cool him off. Of course he is fighting against great odds, but then Shelby is generally doing that. I haven't seen his Trades Union News, but I'll bet that it is indulging in a caloric infancy.

Carlos Tomlin was sufficiently recovered early in last week to sit up, since when I haven't heard from him.

There is only one successful way to do things in this world, and that is to go and do them and get ready afterwards. Nine-tenths of those who put off doing until they get ready never get ready.

R. M. Cheshire, of the Third Division, had a splendid article in last Sunday's Times on the great seal of Confederate States, with an interview with James M. Jones, now an employe of the U. S. Senate, who was Jefferson Davis's body servant. Mr. Cheshire has facsimiles of the seal for sale.

I think that as soon as Jay Herbert Broderick gets used to his new garret we will hear from him. He is not the kind of a man who can keep still long. But Little Willey, of the Post, failed us last week.

I don't think it was the intention of Adam Bugg to drive J. W. Belcher off the reservation entirely, but it seems to have done so.

A. F. BLOOMER.

There is much to commend in the advice of the editor to union men that they should cultivate kindly feelings toward each other and be ever ready to extend the Glad Hand. By all means let us quit knocking.

In the June number of the Typographical Journal, J. Monroe Kreiter falls into error in stating that "most of the probationary compositors in the Government Printing Office were let out at the end of the six months." He doubtless referred to the temporary and emergency men, the former of whom are limited to six months' employment.

R. L. Townsend, after locating on frame 101 and remaining a few days with us at the time of the general transfer from the night force, was taken sick and went from his home to the hospital to undergo an operation. He is now slowly recovering, and hopes to return to work in a few weeks if there is no further set-back. Mr. Townsend has the sympathy and good wishes of the division.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

Union meeting next Sunday. Installation of officers.

Post Chapel.

That fishing club is too busy waiting for the waters of the Potomac to become clear to give out news. "Nothin' doin'" says John Behrle.

John McCormick received a cordial welcome back to the fold last week after an enforced absence of two weeks caused by being badly bruised in falling from a street car near his home in Hyattsville.

Say, isn't that Monday morning feature of the Post immense? I refer to the "knockers'" corner. What a good old paradise this world would be if those fellows could rule things for a few short months!

There is a postal in the mail box for "Ethiopia" Bland. We have been looking in vain for Bill to drop in ever since the card arrived two weeks ago, but have about decided he has given Washington the go-by.

A Post editorial writer asks: "Were an irresistible body of sound to collide with an irresistible body of silence what would happen?" I can't say, but the P. E. W. might come down stairs to the composing room and take observations. Peter Embser and Warner Denham are employed there.

M. E. Mehrten, after printing around in several of the departments for the past six months, is back with us once more, subbing in the ad. room. We are all sorry, however, to learn that he is not to stay long, but hope that he may succeed beyond his greatest expectation in the vaudeville house undertaking he expects to embark in at Steubenville, Ohio, next fall. Vaudeville management is not new to Mehrten, nor is Steubenville a new field, as he successfully conducted a theatre there a few years ago.

A recent fad with the boys of this chapel is bowling. Almost any afternoon now you can find them at a nearby bowling alley, and some of the tales they tell of high scores leads me to believe they are top-notchers or else—but let it go at that. Warner and Perkins and Deloe tell great things about Embser.

M. L. Statler went to Colonial Beach on Sunday, and votes the trip "great." C. T. Hutchinson and W. M. Byerley were to have gone also, but were held in the arms of Morpheus until too late to catch the Arrowsmith. "Jake" says the waters of the Potomac at the Beach are not fit to drink, but he found them all right to swim in barring a little chilliness.

I heartily second the call for a Star letter from the pen of J. Herbert Broderick. However, I have every reason to believe the call is in vain, just at present, at least. Herbert visits with his old associates frequently, and tells me he is enjoying every minute of the new experience of "day work." His health is much improved since he left us, in which we all rejoice with him.

Fred. Decker cashed in last Sunday, shook hands all around, and departed Monday morning for Anaconda, Mont., where he has accepted a situation as reader on the Standard. Fred had but recently returned from a pilgrimage to "the Coast," and we had every reason to expect he would remain with us for a while, but we all wish him abundant success and contentment in his new field.

I met King Marks in Judiciary Square last Monday. King at one time subbed on the Post, but for several months he has dropped out of sight, therefore I was unprepared for the shock of seeing him looking so bad. He has been a sufferer with pulmonary trouble for nearly a year, and the doctors have ordered him away from Washington. He left Tuesday morning for the mountains of Virginio, to stay indefinitely.

Guess A. F. Bloomer does not know me. "Little Willey," indeed! But it's all right, Pard; I am not acquainted with you, either, but I have long been a reader of your entertaining "Flotsam and Jetsam" in THE TRADES UNIONIST as well as your equally interesting Washington Gossip in The Typographical Journal, so you see I have a little bit the advantage of you. Here's to a better acquaintance. Long may your versatile pen be wielded for our entertainment and the upbuilding of unionism.

I am now glad to believe all I have heard about the Post chapel's "pull" with President Lynch, and this is why I am glad: One day last week a "tourist" found his way into the composing room about half an hour before "time," when only a few of the force had arrived. He asked for the chairman, and was told he need not look for that individual before 7.15. Says Mr. Tourist: "I don't propose to wait any longer for your chairman; I shall pass my card myself." He was not very successful in his quest for cash, and did not hesitate to express his feelings. Exposing the few coins he had gathered, he said: "This is a d—d outrage; I shall report this chapel to the International President," and disappeared down the stairs.

The Post composing room was favored with a call by two of the Filipino commissioners last Saturday. Foreman Thompson was absent at the time, but Assistant Foreman Lerch explained things to them, and they were greatly impressed with the operation of the "Mergs." Don Murray printed their names on the head-letter machine in his own inimitable style, presenting each of the visitors with a "slug," which they carried away as mementoes. Asked afterward for the names Don said: "The fellow with the derby hat is editor of El Comercio at Manila, but as for the names they are too much for me." He could not recall even the first letter, but said there was a surfeit of y's and z's. The two commissioners were accompanied by a third Filipino, a young native of Manila, who is attending school in Washington.

There is a decided decrease in the membership of the "Joshers' Club,": that has so long met in the Post composing room on Sunday evenings. The falling off is no doubt caused by the "Positively no Smoking" signs posted on our walls by the insurance people soon after the Baltimore fire. However, a goodly number of the old guard congregate as usual, and goes after the reputations of absentees hot foot. Once a member of that bunch a fellow should be too wise to desert, knowing what's coming to them if they do. Editor Patton has not been on hand for about three meetings, but his interests are looked after by a capable "sub," Sam Hinwood, who sees to it that "Pat" gets fair play.

William Lawlor, slug 9, is off duty on account of illness.

Glen W. Buckingham is again on duty after an illness of two weeks.

Dan Miller, slug 144, and John Green, jr., are at present taking a two weeks' dose of June breezes.

The distribution of the little flags on Tuesday by our esteemed timekeeper was an act greatly appreciated by all.

In stating that Geo. H. Sehorn was transferred to the Treasury last week I must confess I erred. Mr. Sehorn merely changed frames.

Gardiner Green Hubbard's collection of birds may be all right, but the compositors are pretty well satisfied the description part of it is over with.

The machine rumor continues to grow. At the rate it traveled last week there will soon be more machines ordered than compositors employed.

If you have noticed any change in Thos. Burns, of the Y proof press recently, it's because he is the grandfather of a new boy. He now wears a "smile that won't come off."

John A. Onyon, slug 76, is at his home in Peoria, Ill. The recent burning of a large distillery out there worried John, and he hastened out to see how much of the contents thereof was saved.

J. Fred Gambrill, an ex-employe of this division, now of Wilmington, Del., was recently married in this city to Miss Ruth Ida Emmons, the ceremony taking place at the Church of the Epiphany.

Everybody in this room will be pleased to learn that J. R. Charles, who worked here last winter, is making a success of base ball. He is now captain of the Piedmont, W. Va., baseball team, and pulls down a good salary for having fun.

Everybody should attend next Sunday's meeting of the Union. By so doing you can show your appreciation of President Joe Johnson's past administration, at the same time encourage President-elect Berg.

The following problem was handed me with a request that I publish the answer. Not being good at arithmetic, I turn it over to the bunch. Here it is: "How much wood would a woodpecker peck, if a woodpecker would peck wood?"

Morris L. Phillips, who worked in this division last winter when not in the hospital, left on Monday for his home in Illinois, where he will undergo an operation for appendicitis. He has the sympathy of all, for his efforts to overcome hard luck have been commendable.

From the I. T. U. Journal I learn that Miss Teresa McDonald, of the Post, will attend the St. Louis convention. Miss McDonald is one of the brighest little women connected with Washington Union, and her presence will add greatly to the personal Washington delegation.

R. L. Mabrey, formerly of this division, writes from St. Louis that he is pleasantly quartered near the Fair grounds, and prepared to receive guests. Those desiring to secure quarters in advance may do so by writing the Judge at 1204 Goodfellow avenue, or applying to Phil. Nachman, of this division.

One of the sad affairs connected with this life took place last Saturday when the friends of James Harris, who was reported as recovering two weeks ago, assembled at the depot to bid him good-bye. It had been the intention to send him to the Home, but realizing that the spark of life was almost extinct, he preferred to go to his home in North Carolina. At the depot he bade the boys an effectionate good-bye, remarking on the kindness and generosity of his Washington friends. At this writing I have not heard whether he still survives, but the chances are he has crossed the Great Divide.

Flag day was appropriately observed by the members of this chapel. Everybody wore miniature American flags, and joined in the patriotic song service held in the front hall at noon time. Many of the leaders from different departments joined in the singing, and the service in every respect was most creditable.

Ed. Heidingsfeld recently took a trip to New York. On the way up an ordinary looking chap tried to get acquainted with him and presented his card. Ed. placed the card in his pocket without paying any particular attention to the name. On examination later he discovered the card bore the name of one of the best known men in the United States, an ex-cabinet officer. Now "Heidy" wishes he had told him funny stories.

Messrs. Tom L. Jones and Ben A. Lineback led the singing.

Mr. M. M. Mitchell returned to work after having been laid up two weeks with inflammatory rheumatism in his knee.

Assistant Foreman Heslet and his wife are visiting at their home in Topeka, Kans. They took in the World's Fair en route.

Mr. Thos. E. Doty, slug 27, will take a fishing trip in the mountains of West Virginia, returning July 1. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Doty.

Mr. J. Fred Orth is spending three days' leave in Pennsylvania at the commencement of Lehigh University, where his son graduates this year.

The machine rumors were a little disquieting this week to some. Yet many believe they will be installed gradually and make little or no difference in the force.

Unofficial statements say we will work till 1 p. m. Saturdays, and have the balance of the day as a holiday during the next three months, commencing in July.

Titus F. Ellis enjoyed himself Sunday, as the guest of Mr. Newcombe, of Anacostia, formerly of this division. His palate was delighted with spring chicken (and they are 30 cents a pound too).

Flag day was appropriately celebrated in this room by profuse decorations of the national emblem. Through the efforts of Mr. B. A. Lineback, of the job room, the employees of the various floors assembled in the main hallways at 12.20, and sang "The Star Spangled Banner," and "America" with much patriotic enthusiasm. Over 1,000 voices participated.

That is a pretty low order of unionism which is offered in job lots.

Claude McDonald has been called from this division to the Job Room.

Mrs. Copenharve subbed for Captain Smoot on Monday as proof messenger.

The Spess people respond liberally to all worthy appeals for charity and the like.

Mr. Hutchinson has been called in as clerk during the temporary absence of Mr. McBride.

About thirteen are wandering about town, or in one way or another appropriating the balance of their leave.

Miss Spencer was the recipient of hearty congratulations as a result of her election as delegate to St. Louis by the Ladies Auxiliary.

Tuesday being Flag Day was observed at its close by singing of the "Star Spangled Banner," which was rendered in happy style by a quartette, led by Mr. Purvis.

The very liberal announcement that the office of the THE TRADES UNIONIST will be closed to business each Saturday at 12 o'clock during the months of June, July, and August is a step in advocacy of the concession by Uncle Samuel, who may take pattern next year; or better, make Saturday a full legal holiday.

J. R. McBride, clerk to Foreman Ramsey, has been ill at his home, 64 I street, the past two weeks, but is now on the road to recovery, a fact most gratifying to his many friends.

Billy O'Brien tells this story concerning a neighbor of his who was recently called to the police court for an altercation, and which is explained by the answer brought about by a question from the Judge: "Your Honor, I told him to get out before he came in."

"All hands" acknowledged receipt of a new and improved rubber-capped lead pencil, from the head of Charley Leeds, which promoted a desire to patronize the down-river excursion that we might be on the eligible list for another visit from Leeds—and another pencil.

George Wyatte, messenger to Captain Ramsey, resigned yesterday and will soon return to Little Rock, Ark., where his mother resides and where he will enter upon the practice of his profession as lawyer. George graduated with honors from Howard University some five or six years ago, but owing to impaired health at the time, continued here where he has won all as friends, and in departing bears with him to his new field the good wishes of every member of this force.

C. C. Ferguson, of Pennsylvania, employed as temporary on the Night Force during the last session of Congress, and who entered Sibley Hospital for treatment of erysipelas of the foot, recently submitted to the amputation of the right leg below the knee. Mr. Ferguson has been a patient sufferer, and his condition has elicited not only the fraternal interest of friends here but the sympathy of family and friends elsewhere. It is confidently expected that Mr. Ferguson will be able to be out in a few days.

Only a board fence separates the properties of Tom Collins and his neighbor Walsmith at Brightwood. Both these gentleman indulge a flock of fowls, which visit back and forth so promiscously that the owners find it not an easy matter to tell "tother from which." A few evenings since the roosters of the two flocks had a misunderstanding, and were settling the matter between themselves when Collins appeared upon the scene. After it was all over he returned to the house and with very great pride described the battle, concluding with the remarks that his neighbor Walsmith would hardly be able to recognize his property. Just then a member of the Collins household made the discovery that the much-disfigured fowl belonged to Collins. We are very sure the joke never would have been known if we had waited for Tom to tell it.

F. C. Barker, copy-holder, is on leave of absence.

Miss Hattie M. Jewett is visiting her mother in Boston, Mass.

J. G. Hickock, temporary employe, has been dropped from the roll in this division.

James E. Hoes has returned to work after an absence of about a week, due to an attack of malaria.

L. O. Knowles is on the sick list and is unable to leave the house. He has been away from the office for about a week.

Jed Shaw dropped in on us on Tuesday and received quite an ovation. The girls especially were pleased to see "Uncle" Jed able to get about again. He expects to return to work in a few days.

G. P. O. Council, National Union, distributed a number of small flags on Flag Day, which contributed largely to the commemoration of the day. They were very much sought after, and the supply was not equal to the demand.

There were two matrimonial happenings of interest to members of the Gazette chapel last week. Miss Lizzie Whitmee, who is well known and generally liked, being one, and Miss Myrtle A. Jacoby, daughter of Mrs. Callie Jacoby, the other of the ladies to change their estate.

Mike Molan is absent for the remainder of the fiscal year on leave.

Harry Hughes was absent last week taking the remainder of his leave.

Wm. M. (Judge) Holeman was a welcome visitor this week. He is on leave, and dropped in to pay his respects.

Horatio Barnum, for about ten years an employee of the State Branch, was assigned to this division Monday of last week.

Aven Pearson, foreman of this division, is on a month's leave. He is spending the time with his son in New York City.

Miss Lizzie Schaefer, forelady of the folding room, returned from her annual vacation recently. She reports a jolly good time.

John R. Brown, Will L. Mattocks, W. H. Moss and M. N. Serrano were transferred here about ten days ago to help out on the bonds.

Frank Fraser, foreman of the press room, is on leave. He spent the time putting in window and door screens at his new home in Mount Pleasant.

James B. Williamson (Uncle Jummie) returned to work Monday after an absence of about six months on account of sickness. He is looking remarkably well, notwithstanding the fact that he will be 86 years old on the Fourth of July next.

Several of our young ladies have taken in the excursions to Marshall Hall and River View. They report a splendid time, dancing, etc., but notwithstanding the cool nights they declare that they succeeded in returning home without having "river chills."

Arthur P. Ferl, who resigned from this division two years ago last February, to accept a position in the Government Printing Office, Manila, P. I., returned to Washington last week, and was a welcome visitor among his former associates. He returned via San Francisco and took in the St. Louis Fair and other points of interest en route here. Arthur remembered this force each Christmas during his absence by sending fancy work made by the natives to the ladies and cigars to the boys, which we highly appreciated. He will spend the summer in Washington. Further than this he has made no plans. All wish him a pleasant vacation.

John P. Morton & Co., F. C. Nunemacher, and the Courier Journal Job Printing Company have sued Louisville Typographical Union No. 10 for an injunction to restrain its members from "picketing," or in any way interfering with the men who have filled the places made vacant by the printers who went out last March. Evidently it must be getting interesting when the injunction must be called in to assist the advocates of the "open shop."

ELMER JOHNSON,
Secretary, 231 Elm St. N. W.

Third Division.

Just step on that Bugg!

My readers will not see much about the Third Division this week. Been sick a week and cut off from my base of supplies, as it were.

The latest intelligence from the bedside of George C. Sparks is of an unfavorable character, and there does not seem to be much hope of his recovery.

I have been casually informed that our old friend, Warner L. Wilmeth, is sick in the Sibley Hospital, but did not find out the nature of his complaint. Hope it is nothing serious.

There is more truth than poetry in the following from the Typographical Journal: "The Chicago News, referring to those who complain of high dues in labor organizations, says: 'You can get more wind out of a 10-cent fan than you can get out of a $10 one, and the same may be said of a 10-cent union man.'"

People have been trying ever since I first arrived in Washington to scare me into the belief that the summers here are hot. My experience, on the contrary, has been to the effect that Washington is an ideal summer resort. Certainly this month of June has been cool enough so far, and the heat last summer was "conspicuous by its absence."

C. C. Ferguson, late of the Second Division Night Force, to whose case our attention has been called, has been under treatment at Sibley Hospital for several months with a diseased bone in his left leg. Amputation at the knee took place two weeks ago, since which time Mr. Ferguson has been improving rapidly, with every prospect of going to his home in Pennsylvania the latter part of the month.

The Nonpariel Mining and Developing Company has at last struck "pay dirt." At least you would have thought so if you had seen the enthusiastic handshakes and good wishes bestowed upon its secretary, Robert W. Piehoff, on the afternoon of Wednesday, June 1. Investigation revealed the fact that Brother Piehoff had just received a special delivery letter announcing the birth of twins (consisting of one boy and one girl) at his home that same morning. It is needless to say that although the congratulations were envious in some cases they were none the less hearty, and all united in the hope that the career of the "Nonpareil" would now be one of unexampled and continuous prosperity.

Public band concerts will be given as follows during the week ending Thursday, June 23:

Thursday, June 16—Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Franklin Park.
Friday, June 17—Engineer Band, Washington Barracks and Lincoln Park.
Saturday, June 18—Marine Band, White House Grounds.
Monday, June 20—Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Dupont Circle.
Tuesday, June 21—Engineer Band, Washington Barracks and Judiciary Park.
Wednesday, June 22—Marine Band, Capitol Grounds.
Thursday, June 23—Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Iowa Circle.

There seems to be a community of interest, so to speak, among several of the talented gentiemen who write things for this paper. Unconsciously or otherwise, they have united in merciless criticism of the undersigned for having ventured an original opinion of Mr. William Tipton Talbott's efforts in verse. I thank these gentlemen, one and all, as much for their undoubtedly well-meant strictures upon what must have seemed to them my reprehensible conduct in daring to differ with them, as for the noble example they have set to the world in rising as one man to the defense of their fellow-worker in the realm of literature, which last would seem to indicate that I am at least worthy to be labored with. It is a compliment which they did not intend, but of which, nevertheless, I am duly appreciative. Mr. Bloomer frankly says he thinks my remarks in "very bad taste." That is as it may be. Mr. Sutton (in order to avoid mistakes, I suppose), promptly classifies himself by saying, "Possibly Brother Belcher's vision is narrow—that he has not, as yet, ascended to that elevated intellectual plateau—to be able to properly appreciate the majestic serenity of the poetic thought of Brother Talbott." It will be noticed that Mr. Sutton doesn't seem to have any doubts about his own breadth of vision, or as to having himself "ascended to that elevated individual plateau," from whose dizzy heights one may get a proper mental view of just what is what in poetry, etc. However, I will admit without further delay that I have not yet mounted the heights to which Brother Sutton refers. I will even agree with Brother Bloomer so far as to say that I never pretended to have any intelligent idea of what good taste consists of, so far as it refers to Brother Talbott's poetry. I will merely say that I have heretofore labored under the impression (perhaps a mistaken one) that it took more than a row of lines of varying lengths lined up on the left according to rhyme or meter to make poetry; that good poetry, like good prose, should be intelligible, not obscure; that poetry should flow free from the poet's pen and not convey an impression as, for instance, of one sawing wood. But Bloomer and Sutton ought to know. There is no gainsaying the verdict of that giant intellect whose "Flotsam and Jetsam" contributes so much to the delectation of all printerdom, and the Man who Pressed his Face Against the Pane is no imitation; he is a real poet, and his opinion is weighty. As for Adam Bugg, the third champion of Mr. Talbott, it may at least be said that he is candid in referring to himself, for he styles his productions "bughouse boluses," and then admits by inference that he is one of the people who leave dirty water in the wash bowls for others to clean up. Like Setebos he makes things out of mud, and unlike him delights in throwing mud at others. Allow me to suggest that he devote himself to his original conception of the bughouse renaissance in literature; he will find it an agreeable occupation, and one well calculated to absorb all his energies. And finally, let me suggest that he sign his effusions "Adam al Bughouse, Defender of the Filthy." And when excessive mental effort produces a feeling of relaxation let him retire to his bath. As the muddy waters of the Potomac lave his exhausted frame he will cry exultantly, "They can't pull the plug on me now!"

J. W. BELCHER.

Two or three applications for leave have already been filed.

The bowlers were out en masse Thursday night at their match game.

Johnnie Hooper and Chas. R. Shelton were transferred to the Spess Friday.

J. G. Hickok and Dale C. Sheriff, temporaries, were dropped last week.

R. L. Townsend, who has been sick and in the hospital for near two months, returned to work Friday.

There is Slug 13—Bennie Reed—high up on the water wagon. That's all a hoax about 13 being a Jonah.

G. P. O. correspondents will soon be signing themselves as "spaceband," "Merg.," "Operator," "Linotype," etc.

Fletcher Bowden has moved his frame from 64 down to 92 near the desk. Don't know whether he can see the box or not.

Samuel G. Wise was transferred from this division to the Fifth last week by request, he having gone from the Fifth last fall to night work.

Percy Wallace still entertains the boys by his unique position at the case. He says the floor is too high, he has to stoop to reach the case.

C. J. McMurray and Edgar Whitman, who have been doing a stunt on Spess the past six weeks, were returned to this division last Thursday.

Geo. L. Sherman, assistant foreman of this Division went on leave Thursday and will return the 27th. In his absence E. C. Saltzman is at the copy box, while Daniel B. Hallock and Will E. Soult attend the bank. In the absence of J. M. Lenhart, J. C. Sowers takes up the time, and Edward J. Wood has charge of the ring alley. Mr. Goodkey has also been assigned to the ring alley.

R. L. S. Halpenny has recently been returned from the Spess. A. P. E. Doyle and Chas. O. Doten are among the boys who haven't finished the job at the Spess yet.

Robert Piehoff, Secretary of the Nonpariel Mining and Developing Company, has a couple of 9-pound nuggets at his house—a boy and a girl. Bob is all smiles.

Talk about "13"—well, you just ought to see Alley 13. Six men, all married; all have children; all under 35 years of age. Two sets of twins; a total of twenty children. We think this alley would pass muster before the President.

James B. Harris, whose recent illness has turned into consumption, resigned last Thursday and went to his home at Hickory, N. C. Jimmie is a nice fellow, well liked by all, and his friends regret the serious condition of his health. An effort is being made to get him in the Printers' Home at Colorado Springs, Colo.

Joe Lenhart, our genial timekeeper, on last Wednesday hied himself away and took unto himself a bride, in the person of Miss Lizzie Whitmee. The bride is well and favorably known to many of the members of this chapel. As a token of the high regard held for Mr. Lenhart, the members of this chapel presented the newly wed couple with a beautiful 112-piece dinner set. A nice box of cake was sent the boys. Long life to Mr. and Mrs. Lenhart, and may their happiness but increase as the years roll by.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of June 14, 1904.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8.10 p. m. by the secretary. In the absence of the chairman, Delegate Nothnagel was chosen to preside.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

A communication from Mrs. Catherine Huff, acknowledging receipt of the resolutions adopted by the Council on the death of her husband, was read and ordered placed on file, and the secretary directed to forward copy of letter to Hoisting Engineers.

A bill from TRADES UNIONIST for $6.25 for printing was read, approved, and referred to Central Labor Union for payment.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Delegate Ratigan reported action of Central Labor Union on Carpenters and Painters. Also that the Labor Day outing would be held at the Benning race track.

Committee on By-Laws reported that only an impromptu meeting had been held to consider suggestions submitted by the different unions. The report was received as progress.

The committee to whom had been referred correspondence from Master Builders Association, stated that they had carefully inspected all correspondence passing between the Master Builders Association, the Council, and Hod Carriers Union; that they had found one letter from Hod Carriers Union to the Master Builders Association under date of February 7, 1904, which, from records, it would seem should have been dated March 7; that it was a mistake of the typewriter for which the Hod Carriers or Council of Allied Building Trades was not responsible. The report was received, the committee discharged, and the secretary directed to forward to Employing Contractors Association a copy of the report of committee.

The resolution referred to Council by Central Labor Union under date of June 6—

WHEREAS, The real estate interests of this city have persistently ignored organized labor in building dwelling houses; and

WHEREAS, Said dwelling houses are usually constructed for rent to persons of moderate circumstances and laboring people; be it

Resolved, That a list of nonunion built houses and apartments be made up and furnished to all Locals affiliated with the Central Labor Union of Washington, D. C.;

And further, That all Locals be requested to place a fine of $1 per day on all members of those organizations who rent or reside in said nonunion built houses—was read and ordered placed on file.

The minutes of the meetings of the committee appointed to investigate the charges of the Council of Allied Building Trades against Local Unions 884 and 1651, Union Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America and the First and Second Branches, Amalgamated Society of Carpenters, submitted to the Central Labor Union; also the recommendations—

1. The committee recommend that the Building Trades Section furnish cards to the Joint District Council of Washington and vicinity, as follows:

CARPENTERS' JOINT DISTRICT COUNCIL PER
UNITED BROTHERHOOD LOCALS AND AMALGAMATED BRANCHES OF WASHINGTON, D. C., AND VICINITY,

and that the extra cost of printing of said cards shall be paid by the Joint District Council.

2. The committee further recommend that the Central Labor Union insist that the Carpenters' Joint District Council of Washington, D. C., and vicinity, shall obey the mandates of the Allied Council of Building Trades of the Central Labor Union as pertaining to strikes, provided that each representative upon the committees empowered to order same shall have been notified to be present at the meeting of said committee when a strike upon any building is contemplated.

The committee further recommend that the Central Labor Union and the Allied Council of Building Trades of the same do not concede to the Joint District Council of Washington, D. C., and vicinity, the right to be represented through delegates from the same to either body herein named, but shall have representation through delegates from local unions only.

4. The Building Trades Section is hereby ordered to reinstate all local unions of Carpenters now suspended in order that we may maintain harmony in the ranks of organized labor—was read.

The action of the Central Labor Union was concurred in and the secretary directed to spread the recommendations on the minutes, and notify the Central Labor Union of our action, and that the Carpenters Unions mentioned would be seated when they conformed to the laws of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union.

ROLL CALL

Under roll call of unions to submit business thirty delegates from eighteen unions were marked present.

Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers stated that employees of the District repair shop were receiving a lower rate of wages for their services as tinners, and asked that the secretary be directed to take the matter up with the Commissioners and endeavor to have the wages adjusted to the same rate as paid by the employers of members of Sheet Metal Workers' Union.

Hod Carriers asked that Business Agent endeavor to secure the signature of Thompson & Starrett Company to their contract. After discussion the request was withdrawn.

Elevator Constructors asked if the Machinists and Elevator Constructors had come to any agreement.

Delegate McGuire stated that the Labor Lyceum was growing, and extended an invitation to all members of labor unions to be present at the Lyceum meeting, June 19.

There being nothing further brought to the attention of the delegates the Council adjourned.

Painters: That they had reconsidered their former action, and had returned their delegates to Council of Allied Building Trades.

Retail Clerks: Called attention to their Union card, and requested all union men and women to call for same when making purchases.

Grocery Clerks: Called attention to their excursion on the 29th instant.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Executive Committee reported favorably on purchase of twenty-five shares of stock of Workmen and Mechanics' Bank.

Special Committee on Woodward & Lothrop case reported progress.

Contract Committee reported progress.

NEW BUSINESS.

The following resolution, introduced under instructions from Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, was adopted,

WHEREAS, The Philadelphia Inquirer has been declared unfair; and

WHEREAS, The members of Philadelphia Typographical Union, No. 2, have been called out; therefore be it

Resolved, That all members of trades unions are requested to refrain from purchasing said Philadelphia Inquirer and dissuade others from buying it.

Resolved, further, That trades unionists are requested not to patronize newsdealers who handle said Philadelphia Inquirer.

Delegate Ratigan tendered his resignation as organizer, and Delegate Dietrich was unanimously elected to fill the vacancy.

The following resolution was adopted:

WHEREAS, In his report to the Boston convention of the American Federation of Labor, President Samuel Gompers said: "We can not be unmindful of the splendid work done in advancing our cause by our official journals and the labor press generally. Often, under most adverse circumstances, under great effort and sacrifices, is the cause of labor defended and maintained. Though some have fallen by the way, others have stepped into the breach and proclaimed the doctrine of justice and fair dealing for labor and enmity toward none. Despite the fact that ours is one among the youngest of industrial countries, and that our labor movement is therefore of comparatively recent growth and development, yet no country can proudly boast of so large a number of magazines, official journals, and labor papers, or so ably conducted as is the labor press of America. Not merely as a platonic declaration, but as an earnest appreciation of the splendid service rendered our cause, our fellow-unionists, our fellow-workmen, friends, and sympathizers everywhere, should give the labor press unstinted support;" and

WHEREAS, In the opinion of the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia, this language of the president of the American Federation of Labor portrays in a forcible manner the necessity of maintaining a labor press of influence and power in defending the workers of our country in their just and equitable demands for better conditions of labor and their rights as citizens, extolling the virtues of trade unionism, creating and maintaining a healthy sentiment in its favor and defending it against its enemies; therefore be it

Resolved by the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia, That for the purpose of encouragement to the labor press here and elsewhere, and as a means to insure its perpetuation, that it will favor those merchants and business concerns whose friendliness to organized labor have prompted them to advertise through labor papers, thereby rendering it possible for them to exist, and it hereby calls upon all local unions affiliated to do likewise and show their appreciation for the work the labor press has accomplished in their behalf and will accomplish if properly supported; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary be, and he is hereby, directed to forward a copy of these resolutions to all locals affiliated with this Central Labor Union.

On motion, a committee of five was created to prepare the Constitution of the Central Labor Union for publication. The chair stated that he would announce the committee at the next meeting.

Sam Childs can be seen any evening giving little "Henry Clay" Childs a constitutional in Floods Park.

The convention of Bookbinders have adjourned at St. Paul, Minn. All the old officers have been re-elected.

J. A. B. Espey, of Washington, has been elected International Secretary-Treasurer, and Wm. Kelly, a member of the Council.

The baseball game between Mike Dunn's "Conquerors" and the Cowboys has been declared off. The president of Mahone grounds refused to let the Conquerors play on his grounds because he didn't like their manager.

The anonymous letter writer, vicious at heart, is again busy, but as usual without any success. This contemptible low creature, who always helps the man he trys to defame, may as well save his ink and paper, for our chief is too long in public service to be interested in any statements not signed by these squealing little Jackals who are afraid of the man they abuse.

Grocery Clerks' Union, No. 533.

The excursion of Grocery Clerks' Union to River View, Wednesday next, bids fair to be a success. The committee in charge have worked well, and a good attendance on the excursion is assured.

At the last regular meeting the following officers were elected:

John C. Rogers, president; J. Frank Smith, first vice-president; A. A. Swing, second vice-president; Joseph F. A. O'Brien, treasurer; M. C. Graves, financial secretary; John D. Schamel, recording and corresponding secretary; William J. Sheehan, guide; G. A. Watkins, guardian; C. A. Pfau, business agent.

COLUMBIA UNION MEETING

The Philadelphia Inquirer Receives Attention at Hands of No. 101.

THE NEW OFFICERS INSTALLED

Protest Against Admission in Baltimore of One De Viney—The Pierce Case Has an Ex Parte Hearing—Hugh Everett Elected Trustee, vice Leavitt—The Cummings Memorial Committee Makes Report.

The regular monthly meeting of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, was called to order at 2 30 p. m. on Sunday by President Johnson.

The minutes of the last stated meeting were read and approved.

Traveling cards deposited with the secretary since the last meeting were read and received.

The Nominations Committee having made a favorable report on the applications of E. B. Limpus and E. Robert Lewis for full membership and C. B. Whipple for reinstatement, the applicants were duly elected.

Inquiry having been made for the status of one De Viney as an applicant to Baltimore Union, it was agreed that the Union protest against his admission in Baltimore.

Bills for printing, advertising, and stationery, amounting to $149.75, were read and ordered paid.

A communication was received from Louisville Union, No. 10, tendering thanks for substantial relief extended to them in their fight now in progress in Louisville.

A communication was received from W. M. Leavitt, who was elected a trustee at the recent election, declining to serve, as he failed to qualify to be eligible on the ballot, and whose election was invalid.

A communication was received from James M. Lynch, president of the International Typographical Union, dismissing the appeal of one J. W. Pickett against action of this Union in rejecting his application for reinstatement.

Mr. Dickman, from the Central Labor Union, having reported the A. Loeffler Sausage and Provision Company had been taken from the unfair list, it was ordered that said firm be taken from the unfair list of Columbia Union.

Mr. Ennis, from Committee on Codification and Revision of the Laws, made report of progress, and asked that the Union pass upon an amendment having for its purpose the reduction of the trustees' bond from $5,000 to $3,000, which was agreed to.

Mr. Ring, from Committee on Pierce Circular, submitted a report of a majority of the committee and the report of a minority of the committee, with transcript of minutes of the Union and correspondence.

Mr. Pierce was recognized, and discussed the report of the committee at length, claiming that it was not legally constituted.

After some further discussion, on motion, the whole matter was laid on the table.

Mr. Bynum, from Cummings Memorial Committee, made a report of its progress, and moved a rising vote of thanks be extended to the Baltimore printers who participated in the benefit baseball game on Decoration day, which was unanimously adopted.

Mr. Roberts, from Eight-hour Day Committee, made a report, and asked for a referendum vote of the men now employed in nine-hour offices on the change to an eight-hour day. Agreed to.

The president announced that the sergeant-at-arms refused to qualify, and that it would be necessary to nominate a member for that position.

The president also reported that the Union would have to act on the election of a trustee, vice W. M. Leavitt, resigned. Mr. Hugh Everett, being the next highest on the ticket, was declared duly elected.

He also reported that C. C. Ferguson, a member of the Union, was convalescent from a severe illness, and was in need of assistance. An appropriation of $75 was made for the relief of Mr. Ferguson.

Mr. Radley, from the Board of Auditors, asked permission to have a supplemental report of the Board of Auditors printed for distribution among the members. Agreed to.

The president announced the result of the recent election of officers, and the officers-elect were called to the front of the rostrum and duly obligated.

The retiring president then called President Berg to the rostrum, surrendered the gavel to him, and in a few well-chosen words to the Union touching on his incumbency of the office for the past two years, introduced the new president.

President Berg, in assuming the gavel, thanked the members of the Union for the honor conferred upon him, and hoped to merit their approval during his administration of the office of president.

The president then announced the committees for the ensuing year.

The president, announcing the order of new business, Mr. Kreiter introduced the following resolution, which was adopted:

WHEREAS, Philadelphia Typographical Union, No. 2, aided by the International Typographical Union, is now making a vigorous and commendable fight to unionize that city; and

WHEREAS, The union men heretofore employed on the Philadelphia Inquirer have been called out; and

WHEREAS, A determined effort is being made to reduce the circulation of the said Philadelphia Inquirer in that city and elsewhere as a means to encompass the object of the Union; therefore be it

Resolved, That Columbia Typographical Union hereby tenders its moral support in the effort to secure from the owners of the said Philadelphia Inquirer the rate of wage and conditions which prevail in other Union newspaper offices in Philadelphia

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to conduct an aggressive warfare upon the said Philadelphia Inquirer by refusing to purchase the same and by persuading others from buying it, and that we further pledge our fealty to unionism by refusing to patronize newsdealers who handle the said Philadelphia Inquirer.

Resolved, That Columbia Union applaud the loyalty of the men who heeded the mandates of Philadelphia Union and left the employ of the Inquirer Company.

Resolved, That our delegates to the Central Labor Union are herewith instructed to bring this matter before that body and urge the adoption of resolutions which will accomplish the object of reducing the circulation of the said Philadelphia Inquirer.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to Philadelphia Union, No. 2.

Mr. Roberts moved that the resolution be printed and circulated in the various chapels. Agreed to.

A ruling having been asked on the matter of collecting dues from members employed in one chapel and being carried on the pay rolls in another, it was ordered that dues be paid by the member in the chapel in which he is employed.

Mr. Steele moved a vote of thanks to the retiring officers, and that the retiring secretary be given thirty days' leave with pay. Agreed to.

Mr. Goodkey asked that the new card scheme for collecting dues, introduced by him, be referred to the Committee on Codification and Revision of the Laws, which was agreed to.

For the vacancy in the office of sergeant-at-arms Mr. Stelle nominated Frank Bates.

Adjourned.

A Good Customs Officer.

The following, taken from the Washington Star, explains itself:

"Judge Mabrey, a former employee of the Government Printery, has recently received an appointment in the customs service, and before his departure for St. Louis, where he has been assigned for duty, one of the Missouri Representatives introduced him to the President.

"'Delighted to meet you, Judge Mabry,' said Mr. Roosevelt. "Where have you been located?'

"'In the Government Printing Office, Mr. President,' was the reply of the judge, 'but I told Mr. Ricketts that if they couldn't get out the paper without me I'd come back, and I hate, too, to leave now and lose the Saturday half holiday you have so kindly given us.'

"'Judge,' said the President, laughingly, 'you'll make a good customs officer.'"

A Friendly Hint.

MY DEAR MR. BELCHER:—It is dangerous to throw meat into the poets' cage.

OLD GROG.

LONG PRIMER SORTS.

SOMEWHAT PERSONAL.

It is rather hard to consider the pestiferous faultfinder of the Third Division seriously, and yet his recent astonishing outbreak in reference to the more or less poetical efforts of William Tipton Talbott seems to call for a few words in earnest. In the first place, Mr. Talbott himself has always placed a modest estimate on his work. But he is hurt that anyone should feel called upon to term it "dreadful stuff," and that it should further seem necessary on the part of the sapient critic to assert that his rhymes convey an impression as "of one sawing wood." The modest rhymester in question has bent over the literary sawbuck by fits and starts for a good many years, and has occasionally met with what seemed like a small degree of literary success. As far back as the days of the old Washington Capital, as a callow youth he contributed to that paper miscellaneous jingles which met with the special commendation of Editor Don Piatt, a brilliant satirist and general newspaper writer, who hated all kinds of shams, including literary, quite as much as Mr. Belcher, and perhaps with as much judgment. This slight encouragement started him on his downward poetical career. For since that time he has occasionally contributed to the local press, besides several outside publications, and a considerable number of his effusions have achieved the distinction of being widely copied.

A word as to Mr. Talbott's connection with THE TRADE UNIONIST, since perhaps Mr. Belcher's strictures are limited to that paper. When it was in its infancy, in order to assist his friends, its editors, and incidentally help along a struggling organ of organized labor, the sawbuck poet contributed to its columns a number of jingles and some other matter, which were so well received that he was encouraged to furnish further contributions from time to time. Indeed, among the bright spots in his life, Mr. Talbott cherishes his modest connection with this paper on account of the kindly feeling shown him by its readers and the pleasant associations which have resulted therefrom. Let it be added that he has always tried to develop an optimistic view of things in general, and has conscientiously neglected many an opportunity to make individuals squirm at the pen point.

Mr. Talbott deems the foregoing statement necessary, because he is curious to know just what it was which impelled His Sapiency of the Third Division to make his bad break. It is an interesting study in psychology. We have on the one hand a gentleman who has written considerable rhymed newspaper "stuff," good, bad, and indifferent, and never laid claim to anything more than some degree of talent. Some of this gentleman's friends have been kind enough to give his work more consideration than it possibly deserves. He has made something of a local reputation, when along comes a mysterious stranger gentleman from somewhere and asserts that the gentleman of the first part writes "dreadful stuff."

Now, Mr. Belcher, stand up and give us some clear, substantial reason for the proposition you have laid down. Take one of Mr. Talbott's poems to pieces, and let us hear the dreadful creaking of its joints as they are wrenched and twisted in your critical grasp. Better than that, compose us a sample stanza of poetry as she should be wrote. No side issues, please. Forget for a moment the "filthy bowl." Leave Bloomer's giant intellect and Sutton's altitudinous mental plateau for some other time. The editors of the Post, the Star, and the Times, not to mention the editors of THE TRADES UNIONIST, and some other managing and exchange editors throughout the country by printing the sawbuck poet's jingles testify that they are at least not "dreadful stuff." It is up to you, Mr. Belcher—up to you good and hard. You will lose the confidence of your confiding readers if you do not explain just why you dare to hurl yourself thus recklessly against the embattled newspaper press of the country. Then will the mournful hewgag roar, and joy no longer sport above the gurgling murmur of the unplugged bowl.

BUGG'S BUGHOUSE BELCHERINGS.

The poetical washbowl is still plugged.

J. Washbowl Belcher is in hot water. Pull the plug.

Bloomer was startled to learn that his is a "giant intellect."

There seems to be a pulling of plugs all along the line.

Kipling's silence is at last accounted for. He's afraid of Belcher.

And he still insists that Haendel wrote "The Pastoral Symphony." Pull the plug.

If you don't think there's something doing in the country, read the Third Division pundit's pert paragraphs one hundred lines long.

The pen is mightier than the sword. If you don't think so, keep your eye on Belcher when he goes swashbucklering.

The Swampoodle school of literature should be thankful that J. Washbowl Belcher doesn't wield the keen and decorative pen of the late gifted "Old Spav."

"Not so, my son; 'tis devils blue
Stir up his fiendish chaff.
What was it Mr. Talbott slew?
A poisoned paragraph!"

"But, pa, what makes old Belcher treat
His brother writers so?
And does his writing make the hearts

Say, does the fire of genius fuse

"Oh, no; it is not sacred fire.
'Tis bile, my son, 'tis bile."

"But, pa, he must be very bright,
And wield his pen with skill."
"Not so, my son; he's just as dumb
As me or Uncle Bill."

"Then, pa, what is it gives him power

"Why, that is pretty hard to tell.
Perhaps it is his liver."

"But, pa, what makes his liver bad?"
"McPike says it is hinted
He wrote a sickly poem once
And couldn't get it printed."

THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1904.

THE chronic knocker suffers from self-esteem which has soured in the think-tank.

SOME half-baked economists still fail to comprehend that prosperity is measured by the consuming capacity of the wage-earners.

THE bloodthirsty citizens who were disappointed because the St. Louis bull fight was not pulled off are entitled to all the enjoyment they may derive from BRYAN'S jabs at PARKER'S silence.

IF BANDIT RAISOULI, of Morocco, doesn't secure an engagement on the St. Louis Pike, he might join the standard of his great and good friend General BELL in the wilds of Colorado.

Boys with pistols now remind us,
Filling parents with alarm,
We some day may leave behind us
Worldly toys which did us harm.

THE labor editorials in the Washington Post are well worth reading, whether you always agree with them or not. They are free from the journalistic flapdoodle which some newspapers furnish in their treatment of industrial economics, and are therefore a source of healthy thought.

The Real Issue.

No doubt there are some enemies of organized labor who view the situation in Colorado with satisfaction. The fact that the labor unions are in a hole is sufficient to cause rejoicing among the more thoughtless of the PARRYITES. But we refuse to believe that any great body of American citizens enjoy the spectacle there presented. From the tone of the press and comment among citizens of all classes, it would appear that there is a general fear of complications and contests in the future which may overshadow such local difficulties as those now involved and endanger the whole fabric of American government. At the same time it is a question whether the general public has yet seriously grasped the real danger confronting the country to-day.

That danger is not the alleged danger of labor combinations. Notwithstanding the attitude and claims of Governor PEABODY and General BELL and the mine owners of Colorado, the unions are answerable to civil law and may be controlled by it unless it is trampled upon and weakened by the enemies of labor themselves. In which connection we again call attention to the fact—and, if necessary, will call further attention to it from time to time—that an eight-hour law, indorsed by the people of Colorado at the polls, was not placed among the statutes of the State because, as is generally believed and as the facts seem to indicate, the Governor and the legislature were contaminated through the direct and indirect machinations of millionaire anarchists.

The real danger confronting the American people is to be seen in the gradual development of military arrogance and power. At the worst, combinations of laboring men are likely to be disbanded in various ways if they get too far beyond their lawful limitations. If, through badly conceived and indiscriminate strikes and boycotts they stop the wheels of industry for too long a time, they themselves must fall to pieces for want of funds and because of discontent in their own ranks. But General BELL is backed by all the resources of human government, and to-day has the power, if recklessly ambitious and unchecked too long, of embroiling other States than Colorado in a bloody and senseless conflict between capital and labor. As it is, he has already set an example which appeals to and fascinates military men of a certain temperament and which in the future may thus indirectly lead to the direst consequences.

Let us add, for fear of any misunderstanding, that this is not a plea for organized violence. The parties guilty of bloody outrages on both sides in the unfortunate Colorado conflict should be punished to the extent of the law. But at the same time the anarchistic Governor and the anarchistic legislature and the anarchistic mine owners who broke faith with the people, and thereby brought disrepute upon their State, can not be censured too severely. And, finally, the unfortunate conflict has not been an unmixed evil if it has thoroughly awakened the whole people of the United States to the ever-present danger of military encroachment. In a word, the conflict is not one between capital and labor. It is a conflict upon the issue of which depends the future of popular government.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

Past Chancellor Arthur R. Waite, of Century Lodge, No. 30, Knights of Pythias, was recently presented by his lodge with a Past Chancellor's jewel, of solid gold and silver. The Pythians' Past Chancellor's jewel is said to be the handsomest of all the jewels worn by past officers of any of the secret societies. Mr. Waite is a compositor in the Fourth Division, and as a Pythian is evidently as popular as he is as a printer. The Knights of Pythias is a favorite order with printers of the G. P. O., of whom one, Thomas A. Bynum, of the Proof Division, is Grand Chancellor of the District, and another, James W. Carter, of the Specifications Division, is Grand Vice-Chancellor, the two highest offices, while many others have achieved the honor of becoming Chancellor, which is the principal officer of a lodge. Another printer, Samuel W. Edmunds, a few years ago was Grand Lecturer for the District. But I will not attempt to detail all of the honors to which printers have attained in the order, for in so doing I am likely to display my ignorance, and I am not fond of display.

PULL OUT THE PLUG!

Besmeared and foul with ink and grime,
He fills the bowl with ooze and slime
And leaves it so time after time,
To Belcher's consternation.

Then slimes the tow'l with grimy ooze,
That he may not a moment lose
In his mad race to get his booze
When whistle gives vacation.

"Oh, stop! Oh, stay! Pull out the plug!"
Comes plaintively from Belcher's mug.
"Pull out the plug!" roars Adam Bugg,
Which meets my approbation.

* * * *

In a single paragraph my friend J. W. Belcher disposes of Adam Bugg, "Maud S.," William Tipton Talbott, and myself. His terseness appeals to one.

* * * *

In speaking last Saturday of the bookbinder Duffy, who had committed suicide, the Times said:

His intention to end his life he intimated to no one. No motive could be found until it was learned that Dr. Sillers had been treating him for several months.

If Dr. Sillers has not cause for action on that, I will be glad if some one will explain to me what it means.

* * * *

One of the curious phases of human nature is the boundless admiration and deep veneration we have for learning and the profound contempt we feel for the minute doses that may be administered to us by people in our own class. A feeling of resentment rises within us at once when a fellow workman bestows information on us, though we do not hesitate to avail ourselves of it and supply it to some one else with the air of having always known it. But as this is not a confessional, I prefer to tell what the other fellows have said and done. I once had a copyholder who comparatively correctly pronounced La Junta "La Hoonta" and Fontaine Qui Bouille "Fontaine Kee Booya," but when I suggested "Hela" (Gila), "Hecareya" (Jicarilla), and "Siwash" (Saguache), he got mad. One would think, with the great number of Germans among us, that a modicum of familiarity with the pronunciation of common German names would some time percolate nearly all minds; but you can find plenty of apparently educated men who call "stein" "steen" instead of "stine," and who torture Fritz Reuter into "Rooter" instead of "Royter" and Freund into "Froond" instead of "Froynd." The same fellows will read in the "e" which the Frenchman has carefully displaced by a "pos" and say "table de hote" when "tabble dote" sounds better and is easier said. I don't mind their butchering things so much if they did not receive my corrections so contemptuously, though I know they will work them off on some one else and thus spread knowledge, which, of course, is my only object, and therefore I am measurably consoled. It is the same with English. Just the other day, in a conversation, a friend said, "I was talking to Jones, when Brown came up and commenced talking to he and I." "Him and me," I suggested—I had to do it or suffer a stroke of apoplexy—when he got mad and refused to finish his story. "I ought to have went to the sixth floor," said a friend who got out of the elevator with me the other morning. "Ought to have gone," duty compelled me to say, and the look of scorn he gave me burns yet. I'm not mad about these things, nor even discouraged seriously, for I realize that it is human nature for us to despise the little details we don't know, while really possessing the greatest for knowledge.

* * * *

Good friend Goodkev has recently issued a circular containing a description of a "Scheme for New Working Cards," with a diagram full of little squares containing figures and abbreviations of months, much resembling meal tickets that in the good old times I often saw, sometimes borrowed, and less frequently owned. I was rather favorably impressed with it, partly for old recollection's sake, until that idol-breaker and iconoclast, Brockwell, told me that practically the same scheme was considered and rejected two or three years ago, when its stock went down. But I have faith in Goodkey and venture the prediction that he will yet devise something useful.

* * * *

I used to know a man who always had on his lips "I don't think so," the principal use that he made of which being to dispute or refute any statement or argument I might make or offer in a moment of ill-considered assurance. At different times I tried him with all sorts of propositions, occasionally with postulates of his own on previous but forgotten occasions, only to meet the usual "I don't think so," followed by a lengthy dissertation devoted entirely to showing wherein I was wrong, usually so closely connected that there was no opportunity for me to maintain my position until the subject was exhausted. On one occasion we passed Dr. Baldwin, with whom we were both acquainted and to whom we spoke.

"Dr. Baldwin looks like Walsh, the real estate man," I remarked.

"I don't think so," said he. "Like Walsh? Not a bit! I don't see where you can see any resemblance whatever," and then he poured it into me why Baldwin did not look like Walsh while we meandered around half a dozen blocks, and was still chewing on it when we came across Walsh himself.

"Doc," said my friend, stopping him, "this chump here maintains that you look like Walsh, the real estate man."

"Well," said Walsh, a little taken aback, "I have been said to look like Walsh."

"You don't look a bit like him," said my friend; "not a bit—not a little bit."

"And you think I look like Walsh, do you?" said Walsh, turning to me.

"Yes, Mr. Walsh," said I, "I think you look like Mr. Walsh."

Walsh laughed. My friend spluttered a little, but managed to make an intelligible remark: "Let's go and get a drink."

Later he observed that he must see an oculist about his eyes.

P. S.—The names and the rest of this are fictitious. But you all know that sort of man.

* * * *

The simple pathos with which "Maud S." relates an incident goes into me like a knife into a watermelon. Who but he could have discovered, in the swelling chorus of the national anthem on Flag Day, the duet between the Virginia blonde and the Senegambian brunette? Who else but he would have noticed that the "coon" panhandler was better dressed than himself when giving alms? Our poets do not all write their "lines of varying length lined up on the left," Brother Belcher.

* * * *

"Little Willey," of the Post, seems disposed to repudiate the "Little." All "Willies" are little. When they are grown they are called "Bill." But "Willey" is such a cheerful jollier that I welcome him to the coterie and hope that he may long be with us. May he never get the "willies," like Belcher does.

* * * *

I hope Kinsolving may prove a poor prophet in predicting that G. P. O. correspondents will soon be signing themselves "Spaceband," "Merg," "Operator," "Linotype," etc., and that they will not write anything to which they will be ashamed or ashamed to sign their own names.

* * * *

I forget getting displeased because Jim Kreiter "told the truth" about the G. P. O. men learning the linotypes, as stated by him in the June Typographical Journal, and I have no recollection of having accused him of telling the truth. The G. P. O. men have been learning the linotypes in the Washington Linotype School for about ten years that I know of, and as there are over a hundred operators in the office now setting type, we'll probably be able to supply our own demand without making any drafts on the outside, which snoutrage, ain't it, Jim?

* * * *

The Times last Sunday, in "Stories Told of and by Members of Congress," had one regarding an Andalusian jackass which was traded for the site on which the Department of Justice now stands. This jackass was shipped to Kentucky, "where it became the progenitor of what is now the most remarkable strain of mules in America." I had no idea that the mule progeny of a jackass were capable of perpetuating a strain, and I will ask my friend H. S. Sutton, a native of the recumbent State which soaks her head in the Allegheny Mountains and washes her feet in the Mississippi, to explain it.

* * * *

Dear Belcher says there seems to be "a community of interest" to do him up. When a whole community is against one, that one is so almost invariably rotten that I never heard but one instance to the contrary, and His was an example that Belcher shows no signs of emulating. I wish our friend would learn to write without exposing his ignorance about music, poetry, and things. It worries me.

* * * *

The Times last Sunday, in an interview with then President Joe Johnson, labored hard to make it appear that the members of Columbia Union have not yet made up their minds whether they will permit the Public Printer to install linotypes. There never has been a time, I believe I am safe in saying, when it was contemplated making the slightest resistance, if the Public Printer believed the machines feasible. Why should we, when the machines are in use in practically every printing office in the United States of sufficient importance? There be those who are anxious to see trouble.

* * * *

The as yet unpunished murderers and cutthroats responsible for the condition of affairs in Colorado, known as the Citizens' Alliance, have commenced a boycott on the Denver Times and Rocky Mountain News for daring to publish the truth regarding the outrages on civilization committed by the military in endeavoring to abolish trades unionism in parts of that State. The papers, which are under one management, have issued their defiance, and now the issue is made. That organization, by means of the State militia, has committed every crime with which it even charged the strikers. It has taken human life, destroyed private property, and driven law-abiding men from their homes for no other offense than sympathizing with unionism, and it now seeks to punish all who do not indorse its fiendish crimes, by injuring and destroying their private business, as one militia captain led the onslaught of pillage against one of the union co-operative stores because it was in competition with a store in which he was interested. No outrage of Russian or Jew or of Turk or Christian has ever exceeded the crimes committed by the authorities of Colorado against free men because they were trades unionists.

When President Berg took the chair in the Union last Sunday, the sergeant-at-arms marched up the aisle and placed on his desk a splendid bouquet, the gift of his chapel, in which, it will be remembered, not one vote was cast against him at the election. It was so unexpected that it momentarily embarrassed the new president, but he was himself very soon and conducted the meeting to a successful close.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

NOTICE.

During the months of June, July, and August this office will be closed at 12 o'clock noon Saturdays.

Post Chapel.

Harry Essex spent June 15 at River View with his brother Elks.

C. L. Keneipp and John A. Simas are the latest additions to our force of machine subs.

The dull season in the "ad" room is coming on apace, and there's not much doing for subs in that department these days.

George Hough was in New York last week, and incidentally saw the running of the suburban handicap at Sheepshead Bay.

A match bowling contest that would have undoubtedly furnished a sensation did not come off Monday afternoon on account of a last-moment flunk by Shorty McFarland.

Hanging in the make-up room of the Post is an "ad" schedule conspicuously labeled "contract adds," and the printing of the label was not the work of an apprentice, either, but of an old-time printer, an expert in the handling and placing of "ads."

Proof-reviser Morrison, of the Library Branch, G. P. O., was a visitor at the Post night of the 14th. Mr. Morrison, by the way, has the distinction of being the only employee of the Library Branch who has been a linotype operator. Guess he'll get another chance at 'em soon, eh?

WILLEY.

First Division.

C. C. Hopkins, slug 67, has resigned.

Applications for leave are now in order.

George R. Boone is taking a few days' rest.

Belcher is like the cat—he couldn't stay away.

R. L. Holland, slug 65, is taking five days leave of absence.

Several contributions received this week will appear later.

Cheer up! One more Saturday and then the half holiday commences.

Frank Hatley has joined Lesher's force during the absence of Dan Miller.

E. T. Stephenson, formerly of the Treasury Branch, has been assigned to slug 33.

Timekeeper Leeds is taking eight, and S. W. Langford, slug 42, twelve days leave of absence.

"General" Lawlor returned to work Monday, having fully recovered from his recent attack of chills and rheumatism.

By referring to Bennings as Ivy City John Dickman made himself mighty unpopular with the race-horse contingent.

Jack Burnside, who is on leave, received word on Sunday from Harvey, Ill., that he is the grandfather of a bouncing boy.

By request of C. P. Kenney, I refrain from mentioning the fact that he occupied the position of postmaster during part of last week.

Jack Robinson has become a maker-up's assistant. On this subject I was handed a beautiful poem, but space forbids its publication.

Fred Berger umpired the ball game between the binders and pressmen last week. As a fair umpire Fred is achieving an enviable reputation.

The chairmanship contest is drawing to a close. The election on the 30th promises to be one of the hottest things pulled off in this division for some time.

Friends in this division will be pleased to know that "Mike" Serrano and William Mattox have returned from the Treasury. They have been assigned to the Fourth.

Foreman A. W. Bowen returned to his desk on Monday, after an absence of eighteen days. His rugged appearance indicates that he has had just about what the doctor would have ordered.

O. B. Ballinger entertained at his home on First street, this week, Mr. and Mrs. Schuyler C. Brown, a blushing bride and groom from Saratoga, N. Y. Mr. Brown and Mrs. Bellinger are brother and sister.

In giving out instructions for the Chinese calendar last week the following words appeared in italic: "Spacing must be exact." It was a terrible blow to the boys who had adopted the adjustable stick method.

Most of the correspondents last week stated that some member of their division led the singing on Flag Day. In this connection I wish to say our own Wiley Davis warbled a few notes, too. And he wasn't in the rear rank either.

Goodkey's scheme for collecting dues was referred to the proper committee on Sunday. Goodkey is as full of schemes as the average dog is fleas, but if there is anything in this last one it will be found out by the Laws Committee.

N. T. Hillard has recently become a suburbanite, taking up his residence at Fort Saratoga. "Hill" will make a fine "Rube," for his good nature will not permit him to say anything very bad when he fails to connect with a trolley.

Philip Steele gave a brilliant exhibition of oratory last Sunday. Mr. Steele's hair is white and his eyesight a little dim, but his voice is just as strong as it was forty years ago when an opportunity to defend a cause he thinks just is prosecuted.

O. W. Humphrey put in a full case and gave himself just time enough to wash up before the whistle blew on Tuesday evening, went home, thought the matter over, and Wednesday morning shook hands with Uncle Sam and resigned. Further deponent sayeth not.

While I shouldn't like to prefer charges to that effect, I am just a little inclined to the belief that in placing E. S. Wild on the Memorial Service Committee the object sought was the services of his estimable wife, who in times past has so generously assisted Columbia Union in musical efforts.

The First Division will be well represented this year on committee work connected with the Union. John B. Dickman is chairman of the Central Labor Union delegates; Philip Steele, chairman of the Memorial Service Committee; Wiley Davis and E. S. Wild, members of the same, and the writer on the Grievance Committee.

A gentleman who says his aspirations are poetical rather than political, handed me the following verses. I would like to match him for a six-round bout with Adam Bugg:

When the Hitt boom is forgot,
And the Cannon swore he'd not
Be tempted from the Speakership to stray,
Other boomlets come too late,
And they found their candidate
In the wash of the fair banks far away.

George Gerberich, of the Gazette Division, is an expert with the camera, and is collecting some fine views, among the latest being points of interest connected with the Antietam battle ground, and which are readily recognized by those who were engaged in taking "snap shots" and helped to give Antietam a name in history in September, 1862.

After receiving the highest vote cast for member of the Board of Trustees, William Leavitt declined to take the oath of office on the ground that his name should not have appeared on the ballot, he having failed to make out the required papers in the time specified by the Union. By his declination Hugh Everett, the next highest man, was declared elected a member of the Board.

Quite a number of gentlemen have asked me recently to roast the man in charge of the elevator service. Just at present, however, I am not in the roasting business. All things considered, it does seem a little strange that the sixth floor should be given such poor facilities for leaving the building. Whoever has charge of the elevators I do not know, but I believe if Mr. Ricketts and Mr. Bowen would give the matter a little attention something might be done to afford relief.

The gathering of the faithful on Sunday was about all that could be desired. There was plenty of hot air, both natural and artificial, and it looked for a time like the membership was going to witness a gentleman break the long-winded record. The ovation which greeted President Berg was one of the most demonstrative ever witnessed in the Temple, and as the huge bouquet, presented by the Record boys, was placed upon the stand, President Berg was nearly overcome with emotion. However, he managed to say a few words of appreciation, and read his committees, which show careful consideration in their selection. At the conclusion of the meeting both he and ex-President Johnson were besieged with handshakers, who spoke words of encouragement to the new and words of appreciation to the retiring president.

Second Division.

Strange to say, Mr. Bloomer does not know "America."

Chas. A. Morgan, a Spess detail at present, is on leave.

Capt. Geo. P. Phillips has returned after several days leave.

Oliver C. McCardell has returned from a detail to the Spess.

T. H. Jones, of Alexandria, has been reported sick for the past week.

R. H. Miller and J. J. O'Hern were detailed to the Spess last week.

Wm. F. True has returned to work after a four week's seige of malaria.

W. C. Beddow has returned from an extensive mineral prospecting tour in the South.

Monday, June 20, was noted as a warm day for "Doc" Trudgian "histed" his window to the limit.

The game of baseball on Decoration Day between the G. P. O. and Baltimore printers for the benefit of the Cummings Memorial netted over $40.

Apparently because Mr. Belcher refused to join THE TRADES UNIONIST correspondents mutual-admiration society, they have, with remarkable unanimity, "jumped all over him."

Tuesday night we were greatly surprised by being told to work until 9 o'clock. It caught many with urgent engagements. Mr. Shanks was beseiged with requests to be excused.

Whether Mr. Belcher's remarks in last week's paper about Mr. Sutton's wonderful literary ability perturbed him or not, he seems bothered about for he set two "dead-horse" takes Monday.

"Judge" R. L. Mabrey, that prince of good fellows, formerly of the First Division has appropriately located at 1204 Goodfellow avenue, St. Louis. Printers intending to visit the World's Fair will do well to correspond with him for accommodations.

The Cummings Memorial Committee have collected $675 of the $1,000 decided upon. All are urged to pay up liberally on next collection day, which is the last, so the union will not have to make up the balance. This is a good showing for a voluntary contribution.

Joseph Silverberg is spending two month's leave in Germany. Wednesday, Mr. Shanks received a souvenir postal card from him, dated Antwerp, Belgium, June 14, saying he had arrived safely that afternoon. The picture on the card represented a number of fair wooden-shoe damsels standing on the shore watching Joe's ship, the "Vaterland" come sailing in.

President Berg displayed rare judgment in the selection of his committees. A delicate compliment to the many supporters of the defeated candidates was paid in his nomination of these men. His opponent, especially, was remembered with a chairmanship. The Second Division is very proud of the recognition received in four chairmanships, Messrs. Milo Shanks, grievance; T. L. Jones, entertainment; Clyde J. Sheriff, library; J. T. Rowe, Cummings Memorial; and two important committee positions, J. H. Babcock, Central Labor; T. F. Ellis, printing. The Memorial Service Committee is especially strong, headed by that grand old union man and Christian gentleman, Philip S. Steele.

NEWSOM.

Ladies' dining rooms. R. A. Driscoll, N. Cap. and G. Clams and Crabs.

Third Division.

Ten men were detailed to the Spess from the Record last Saturday.

T. J. Arrington's baby has been quite sick the past week, but is somewhat improved at this writing.

Messrs. J. L. Sauls and W. H. Davis, of this division, were detailed to the Spess on the 17th instant.

No, my dear Bloomer; not yet driven "off the reservation." When I do go off, the other fellow will be guessing, not I.

Messrs. John A. Simas and William Jaques, temporaries, were dropped last week. More of Mr. Kreiter's "probationary" men.

Joe Dreis, of the Spess, who is well known to many of this chapel, is sick at his home in Brookland. He has an attack of appendicitis, but with some prospects of recovery without an operation.

"The most annoying sin, Discontent," will be the subject of the sermon to be preached Sunday evening, June 26, at the Ninth Street Christian Church. All printers and their families are welcome.

Our folio man, J. W. L. Dillman, returned to work on the 18th after finishing up his leave. He tore himself away from our midst for three whole days, and it is needless to say that he was welcomed back joyfully.

Tommy McEneany has just concluded ten days' leave—"all that was coming to him." Tommy says he was just beginning to find out how nice it was to go to sleep in the afternoons, when it was all over. He looks as rugged as an ox.

Imposer Will E. Soult is now enjoying the balance of his leave at Forest Glen, Md. Before his departure he informed the writer that he expected Branham to join him, equipped with a bathing suit, for the purpose of taking sun baths.

Pard Julian started to take a few days' leave last week, but had a bilious attack which spoiled his vacation and reduced him considerably in flesh. He says he will have to go to the tailor's and get measured for a new suit of clothes, as his present outfit is liable to fall off.

According to a notice on the bulletin board, elevator No. 10 is scheduled to stop at the fifth floor every other trip. But the man who wrote the notice is a gay deceiver; for I have stood and watched elevator No. 10 make two trips from the seventh floor down to the bottom of the shaft without stopping at the fifth.

The condition of George C. Sparks continues critical. He rallied toward the close of last week and indications pointed to a steady gain for the better; but on Sunday evening unfavorable symptoms again asserted themselves and another doctor was called in consultation. All that the best of care and medical skill can accomplish is being done. No one can say what the outcome will be.

The Ninth Street Christian Church, which was built largely through the liberal assistance rendered by printers, and which is now maintained, and officered to a considerable extent by disciples of the art preservative, is standing sponsor for the erection of another church edifice, or "chapel," in the southeast part of the city. It is very pleasant to chronicle the fact that last Sunday morning, when contributions were solicited for the new building, the congregation pledged and contributed over $150 without any previous warning.

Public band concerts will be given as follows during the week ending Thursday, June 30:

Thursday, June 23—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, Iowa Circle and Fort Myer.

Friday, June 24—Engineer Band, Garfield Park and Washington Barracks.

Saturday, June 25—Marine Band, White House Grounds.

Monday, June 27—Cavalry Band, Smithsonian Grounds and Fort Myer.

Tuesday, June 28—Engineer Band, Lincoln Park and Washington Barracks.

Wednesday, June 29—Marine Band, Capitol Grounds.

Thursday, June 30—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, Franklin Park and Fort Myer.

When I wrote my answer to Messrs. Bloomer, Sutton, and Bugg, I had not seen the issue of THE TRADES UNIONIST of June 9, in which Mr. Bugg took a somewhat different view of what he was pleased to term my service to the state, and agreed with me that "cleanliness is next to godliness," thereby admitting that his characterization of me as the Watchdog of the Washbowl, and also his little squibs about pulling the plug, etc., were nothing but petty spite. "Only this and nothing more," as "the rapt high priest of beauty, Poe," once wrote. It is something of a pity that William Tipton Talbott, who can write such creditable verse as "The Poet's Guerdon," should so far forget what is due to himself as to allow the writer of "Bughouse boluses" to speak for him. There is a rumor about that Talbott and Bugg are one and the same person. If this be so, it is a case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde over again. That a man's mind should be a pendulum, so to speak, that will swing as this man's mind must swing in writing as Talbott can write, to the depths achieved by Adam Bugg, seems almost beyond belief. I do not want to do injustice to Mr. Talbott. I never read aught of his save what has been published in this paper during the past nine months. None of it, to my mind, has been half so good as "The Poet's Guerdon," which is beautifully done. If I may offer one word more, it is this: Cut loose from Adam Bugg—he is unworthy of you.

Pull out the plug, printer; pull out the plug,
Heed not the dirty slob, but hand to him a chug.
Surely our Belcher may depend on me,
Though an humble plug-puller I may be.
—T. F. Hall.

J. W. BELCHER.

Specification Notes.

The necessary "sorts" have been ordered and are now on the way.

George Graham is now answering questions concerning that recently divorced mustache.

The epistle by the inimitable Colonel Slack was greatly appreciated by his friends of the Spess.

Miss Mollie Ragan has cases on "heads," in place of Miss Burke, now on protracted leave.

There were a half dozen errors in last week's notes which would justify a pink slip in each case.

The coming of the machine is not so much in favor as either the coming of the circus or the time for leave-taking.

Chesley Ailes is the newcomer to succeed the late Auchmoody and the later Captain Smoot as proof messenger.

Joe X takes a zigzag course to the washroom to avoid the office cat, which is a few shades darker than the ace of spades.

Clerk McBride escaped the vigilance of Dr. Chadwick and returned to his desk on Monday bearing evidence of his late severe illness.

Now is the time when the good husband sends his wife away for rest, and now the time when he is interested in what the neighbors may next bring in.

A. M. Laing's condition is regarded as more favorable than at one time, though it can not be safely calculated just how soon he will be able to resume work.

Edward Pulliam has been assigned as messenger to Captain Ramsey, vice George Wyatte, resigned. Mr. Pulliam was at one time employed in the job press room, where he lost the fingers of his right hand by accident.

The name of the man who keeps our tanks filled does not appear on the Spess roster, but what's-his-name is so prompt and does his work so well that we could wish he might stay on till the appetite for water is entirely overcome.

In response to an emergency call the following-named "good ones" were sent over from the main office: Lloyd, Van De Bogart, Mullin, Wolf, Roberts, Edmunds, Giles, Elliott, Quigley, Jordan, O'Connell, Tuttle, Sullivan, Wear, and Desmond.

The "Choir Invincible," as some have named it, and by others known as the "St. Elizabeth Glee Club," which regularly entertains an enthusiastic audience near the ring alley each lunch hour is swelling in chorus talent.

Oh, happy day——

but thrice happier the night when all is still and tranquil.

The thrusts and parries sometimes indulged in by contributors to THE TRADES UNIONIST bear out the statement of Kipling: "If you hit a pony over the nose at the outset of your acquaintance he may not love you, but he will take a deep interest in your movements ever afterwards."

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of June 21, 1904.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8 o'clock by Chairman Wells.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From District Commissioners, relpying to letter from Council relative to wages paid tinners in District repair shop. Placed on file.

From James Devlin, secretary of Local Branch No. 77, I. U. S. E., relative to communication from Mrs. Catherine Huff. Placed on file.

A bill for $32 for printing was received from Trades Unionist Company, and the attention of the Council called to the bill being rendered March 29.

The secretary stated that the records showed that the bill had been approved at the meeting of March 29 and referred to Central Labor Union. The secretary was directed to so inform the Urades Unionist Company.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Delegate Ratigan reported from Central Labor Union.

ROLL CALL OF UNIONS.

Under roll call of unions to submit business, twenty-eight delegates from seventeen unions answered to the roll.

Stone Laborers reported that they had received no satisfaction from Mr. Viehmeyer, and that nonunion men in his employ were working at Heurich's Brewery, notwithstanding the promises of the brewery representatives that only union labor would be employed on the work. The Business Agent was instructed to act with a committee from Stone Laborers' Union and report at next meeting.

Hod Carriers reported nonunion hod carriers at Barnes Hospital and that their union had requested a meeting of the conciliation committee of the Master Builders' Association and their union to endeavor to adjust the matter.

Paperhangers stated that they had adjusted their differences with the firm of Lang & Machett, and asked that the firm be taken from unfair list. The request was granted.

The secretary stated that, according to the rules adopted, the election of officers would be held at the next meeting, and asked if he should send out notices to that effect.

Delegate Desmond asked if the laws should go into effect before they were approved by the Central Labor Union, and the matter was held in abeyance until the next meeting.

The meeting then adjourned.

SEEING THE GROTTO OF AZURRAS

The Beautiful Bay of Naples—The Castle of St. Elmo—Through Vomero and the City of Pasilipo—Mountain Scenery Unsurpassed—Landscape on Land and Sea Unequalled.

PARKER'S HOTEL
(LATE TRAMONTANO),
NAPLES, June 5, 1904.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

My last letter included our arrival in Gibraltar, and I will now take up our journey from that point.

On Monday, June 30, we boarded the steamship Konig Albert at Gibraltar, bound for Naples. When we got on board we found the vessel so crowded that we were compelled to rent one of the officer's staterooms.

On Tuesday we sighted the island of Sardinia, whose shores remained in view for four or more hours.

Thursday morning at 6 o'clock we passed into the most beautiful bay in the world—that of Naples—with the historical islands of Capri on our right and Ischia on our left, and the ever-smoking Vesuvius dead ahead.

At 7 o'clock the beautiful city of Naples came in view, presenting a sight that will remain in one's mind forever. The city is built on a series of terraces, with Castle St. Elmo and San Martino crowning the highest point of the city.

By 9 o'clock we had passed the ordeal of customs inspection, and were comfortably located in Parker's Hotel in another hour. This house occupies a commanding position on Vittoria Emanuel, with the city spread out below us and the grand old volcano of Vesuvius in the distance.

After securing some Italian money we engaged a courier, who took us for a drive through the historical and more interesting part of Naples and vicinity, first visiting the Castle of St. Elmo, built in 1345, during the reign of Robert the Wise. It is now used as a military prison. The view from its walls is one of the most magnificent in the world. The panorama includes so much that is of historic interest that I refrain from going into details.

The convent of San Martino, immediately adjoining, was next visited. This magnificent building was begun in 1325 by Charles the Illustrious and completed during the reign of Joanna I, Queen of Naples. It contains many fine pictures and rare works of art.

Our ride next took us through the Vomero, containing many fine villas. Soon after we reached the city of Pasilipo, which extends along the heights surrounding the Bay of Naples for about two miles. In this city we saw the house in which Garibaldi died, and next visited the tomb of Virgil, near by. Near the seaside is located the ruinous but still grand palace of Donna Anna Carafa, wife of the Duke of Medina.

Looking down into the beautiful valley below Pasilipo is the historical ground where Brutus fled after the murder of Cæsar.

On Saturday morning, accompanied by the courier, Ricardo, we took the train for Pompeii, passing through Portici, built over the buried city of Herculaneum.

We entered the excavated city at the Stabia Gate, visiting the two theaters, the forum, the baths, and all the houses of interest, and especially those so graphically described in the "Last Days of Pompeii." The streets are long and narrow and very straight. The public fountains and pavements of the streets are just as they were nearly nineteen hundred years ago.

Many of the buildings have walls containing fine frescoes, although many of them have been removed to the museum in Naples. We visited the last house excavated, and found the frescoes as plain as they were two thousand years ago. A small force of men are at present engaged in excavating this dead city, all the ashes and pumice stone with which the city was covered being carefully sifted for objects of curiosity.

We had the pleasure of meeting A. R. Spofford, assistant librarian of the Congressional Library, in the temple of Isis.

In the afternoon we entered a landeau and drove thirty-five miles to the city of Almafi, the home of the inventor of the mariner's compass. Our drive was over a road cut out of the mountain side, and every foot of it gave us a view of landscape and sea unequalled in the world. We passed through many villages, the houses of which are fairly hung on the mountain side. The roadway is lined with terraces, cultivated and bearing orange and lemon groves. We spent the night at Amalfi, and took up our journey this morning at 6 o'clock and drove to Sorento, about thirty miles, the panorama being even more beautiful than the day before. At 10 o'clock we arrived in the beautiful city of Sorento, on the Bay of Naples, in time to board the steamer for the island of Capri, visiting the wonderful grotto known as the "Grotto Azurras." The whole of the grotto and all the objects seem bathed in a beautiful blue tint and all under the water is silvered. We drove over the greater part of Capri and returned to Naples this evening. To-morrow we resume our journey to Rome, where we will spend one week.

It was with pleasure that I learned to-day of the election of Miss Anna Wilson as a delegate to St. Louis.

OFFICIAL ORGAN CENTRAL LABOR UNION, WASHINGTON BRANCH, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Vol. IX. No. 3. WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, JUNE 30, 1904. Price, 3 Cents.

THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION

Report on the Portner Matter Takes the Form of an Ultimatum.

RESOLUTIONS OF CONDOLENCE

Delegate Dickman Presides—Stumph & Lyford Case Adjusted—Appropriation Made for the Colorado Miners—The Bottlers Report Settlement of Their Troubles.

The regular weekly meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8.15 p. m. on Monday evening, Secretary Winslow acting as chairman in the absence of President Sherman and Vice-President Brinkman.

Delegate Dickman was chosen as president pro tempore.

Delegate Nothnagel reported that President Sherman could not be present on account of the death of his father.

On motion, Delegates Nothnagel, Roche, and Fox were appointed to draft a suitable resolution of condolence to President Sherman. The committee reported the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The Divine Creator has taken from our midst the dear father of our honored president, Harry W. Sherman; therefore be it

Resolved, That we extend our sincere sympathy to Harry W. Sherman in this his hour of bereavement, and that a copy of this resolution be spread upon the minutes.

CREDENTIALS.

From Local No. 118, Brewery Workers, certifying Frank Rom, John Keller, Conrad Schroeder, George Miller, jr., and Henry Haeberle.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From E. J. Ratigan, secretary of Council of Allied Building Trades, relative to seating of Carpenters in the Council when they comply with the law of the Council. Filed.

From Upholsterers' Union, No. 58, stating that its differences with Stumph & Lyford had been adjusted, and asking that the good offices of all union men be given to that firm. Agreed to.

From Bottlers' Union, No. 251, stating that a settlement had been arrived at with the Bottlers' Association, in which the demand of the union had been met. Filed.

From Central Federated Union of New York, appealing for aid for Colorado miners. Filed.

From United Garment Workers of America, denying that Mr. Carhartt, of Detroit, was unfair to organized labor. On the contrary, Henry White, general secretary, pays a high tribute to Mr. Carhartt as an employer and a friend of labor.

From Executive Council American Federation of Labor, appealing for aid for Colorado miners. Appropriation of $25 made and secretary instructed to notify the American Federation of Labor of its action.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Bottlers: That the contract indorsed by the Central Labor Union had been signed.

Engineers, 77: That President P. J. Mahone, of National Association of Steam Engineers, was dead, and requested a committee to draft suitable resolutions to be forwarded to family of the deceased. The request was granted and Delegates Smith, Nesmith, and Fahlbusch were appointed.

Mill Workers' Helpers: Requested a report from the Contract Committee.

Upholsterers: Extended thanks to special committee on Stumph & Lyford case in adjusting the trouble for their union.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Contract Committee reported on Robert Portner case, and, on motion, the chairman was directed to notify Mr. Portner and the Portner Brewery Company that their contracts had been annulled, and that unless new contracts were entered into the committee would recommend to the Central Labor Union that Robert Portner and the Robert Portner Brewing Company be placed on the unfair list.

Executive Committee reported favorably on the amended constitution of the Council of Allied Building Trades, and, on motion, same were adopted.

Grievance Committee reported progress on Stationary Firemen's case and on the Bernard case.

On motion, a committee was appointed to visit Peter Grogan Company and secure a Central Labor Union contract.

The committee appointed to draft a resolution of respect to the memory of P. Mahone, president of International Association of Steam Engineers, reported as follows:

WHEREAS, The Central Labor Union of Washington, D. C., has learned with profound regret of the death of the late honored and respected president, P. Mahone, of the International Association of Steam Engineers; and

WHEREAS, The demise of so able, honest, and sturdy a trade unionist is a particular loss to the cause of labor; and

WHEREAS, The late P. Mahone has been ever an exemplary husband and a kind and indulgent father; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Central Labor Union extend to the bereaved wife and children its earnest condolence, and to the International Association of Steam Engineers a fraternal expression of regret for the loss of so conspicuous and trusted an officer and brother.

Adjourned to July 11.

"King" Brady has had his hair cut.

Jack Levey seems to be the champion checker player of the Bindery.

John Foster's friends deeply sympathize with him in the serious illness of his wife.

Jim Sibre ascertained that the reports of Grill's sudden death were greatly exaggerated.

The half holiday on Saturday begins at 1 o'clock, July 2, and continues until September 24, inclusive.

This is now the season when the young as well as the old man's fancy turns to thoughts of leave.

The next meeting of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders will be held in Washington, June, 1906.

Charley Boswell hired a sailor suit in which to have his picture taken, but was suddenly taken seasick and had to abandon his cruise.

Bill Haslett and Fatty Marrs ran a foot race of 150 feet and Haslett won. There was doubtless a free lunch at the end of the journey.

Owing to a temporary scarcity of work in the Cow Division and the Roof Garden many of the old building men are roosting merrily in the new plant.

John M. Gantley and Richard Brennan, who recently resigned, have been reinstated. In the meantime Mike Quinn has taken another whirl at the resignation game.

Jim Fogarty was told by a St. Paul saloonkeeper that the West had the East "skinned to death" in the matter of saloons. It is needless to say Jim did not agree with him.

There is a cutter in the blank room from the "Windy City" who says he holds the record of being the fastest man in the office. He could be readily used on the rapid-glueing machine.

One of the most important amendments which the convention submitted to the referendum is that making the president and secretary salaried officers and making them joint editors of the monthly journal.

This section of the country fared well in the election of officers at the convention, Hales, of Baltimore, and Kelly, of Washington, being elected to the Executive Council, the latter being a re-election—purely a reward of virtue.

Following what seems to be an exemplification of the saying, "All things come three," two more bookbinders have died since the death of Mr. Roy. John E. Duffy committed suicide and William Le Cain died of apoplexy within a few days.

The Bottlers Win.

The settlement of the differences between Bottlers' Union, No. 251, and the Bottlers' Protective Association was accomplished after a strike of two days. The union is granted a contract calling for a ten-hour day in spring and summer and eight hours in fall and winter, and a minimum wage of $10 per week.

SONG OF THE LITERARY WASHBOWL.

Oh, tell me not of heroes gone,
Who triumphed over wrong
By force of will or brain or brawn;
Ask not for them a song.
Nor bid my muse recount his praise
Who seeks thought's highest goal.
She sings the pride of latter days—
The Watch Dog of the Bowl.

Jim Jeffries is a man of sand
And science, too, you bet;
And other heroes in the land
Will make us happy yet.
But tell me not of bruisers grim
Who swat each other's mugs.
Be mine the lyre to twang of him
Who made us pull the plugs.

Oh, let contention be forgot,
And shout it day and night,
The fame of him who gamely fought
To keep the washbowl white.
He made us pull the plugs, and so
For him our cheers shall roll
Down fame's heroic halls, although
He tumbled in the bowl.

ARE POETS DANGEROUS?

Within the last few years the Washington Post has established the fact that the common rabbit is one of the most ferocious man-killers of the animal kingdom. He has been known to worst both dogs and men single handed, and in some cases has torn his victims into fragments. But, more astonishing still, it is now asserted that the spring poet, by some considered a distant relative of the rabbit, is if anything more dangerous when enraged than the sanguinary cotton-tail. Mr. Squelcher, of the Third Division, Government Printing Office, claims to have made the discovery. He recently run across a common Swampoodle poet (Poetastro Buggii), which, upon his approach, showed fight. Although somewhat astonished, Mr. Squelcher was not alarmed. He has had much experience as a poet hunter, and it is said that Boston Commons was once strewn with the bleaching bones of thousands of these interesting animals overtaken by him and slaughtered to make a Roman holiday. But hitherto he had squelched poets in their gentle mood. When he hit them on one jowl they would immediately present the other, and, after that had been swatted, turn around and wait to be kicked. For years past it had been no unusual thing for Mr. Squelcher to get up at sunrise and jab a poet through the gizzard as an appetizer before breakfast. It is not strange, therefore, that he bravely continued to advance on the Swampoodle poet in question, notwithstanding its menacing attitude. That he did so was unfortunate, however. In a moment the poet's eyeballs were in a fine frenzy rolling, he pawed up about an acre of ground, and then the air became so hot in the neighborhood that Mr. Squelcher collapsed. He was rescued and restored to consciousness by some of his friends from the Third Division, and is now able to set his average, although still suffering somewhat from nervous shock. He says that under the circumstances it was impossible to resist the beast, which belched satanic fire from its nostrils a la Mr. Hyde, of the firm of Jekyl and Hyde. But Mr. Squelcher, who is a dead game sportsman, is still determined to conquer this particular poet, and, armed with his trusty washbowl-plug, will make the attempt as soon as he has recovered sufficiently. It is his desire to capture the animal alive, and in a short time he expects to have it so tame that, as the Post paragrapher might remark, it will eat angel food from Brother Bloomer's hand.

THE COMMON MAN'S GUERDON.

DAVID ECCLES.

No poet I; and yet betimes,
In pensive or in playful vein,
I essay to express in rhymes
The moods and fancies of the brain.

This frame of mine, of common mold,
These nerves through which the feelings pour,
Have thrilled as did my sires of old—
Have felt whate'er they felt before.

Mine is a harp with range so vast
No tongue its symphonies may tell,
And echoes from a deathless past
Vibrate within me, cell to cell.

Such as I am, such, then, are you—
Such all the millions of our race—
I love and hate as other do,
Am sometimes noble, sometimes base.

Like these I mourn my feeble powers;
Like these my motives rise or fall;
On me no inspiration showers
Save that which cometh unto all.

And if I frame in language weak
Some rhythmic verse, 'tis that I strive
Among a thousand thoughts to seek
A fitting few that may survive.

And if I court the muses' lay,
Let it be frankly understood
I write in hope that some may say,
"Your verses were exceeding good!"

Though he denies, in ev'ry clime
A thirst for honor man betrays;
E'en when he builds for future time
He draws on future time for praise.

Howe'er we in ourselves confide,
Howe'er we vanity would shun,
No man can rest self-satisfied,
Till some says: "Well done! Well done!"

No poet I; just common dust;
Why need it then cause great surprise
If I confess my pen would rust
Were it not for some woman's eyes?

And what is poetry at best?—
This so-called weird seraphic fire—
'Tis but our common thought well dressed,
Unchanged in aught save its attire!

St. Peter's Cathedral a Wonder—Visit the Colosseum—A Drive on the Appian Way—Visit St. John Lateran—The Scala Santa—The Ruins of the Forum—Off for Pisa.

HOTEL D'ALLEMAGNE,
ROME, June 12, 1904.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

We arrived in the Eternal City last Monday evening, after a pleasant ride of about five hours, from Naples. Tuesday we wended our way to the largest and handsomest church in the world, that of St. Peter's. We entered the cathedral by way of the Piazzi di San Pietro, an imposing space in front of St. Peter's in the form of an ellipse. This open space is inclosed by huge colonnades. Each of the colonnades contains four series of Doric columns. On the balustrades above are placed over 160 statues. The effect is certainly a striking one, and fills one with admiration for the architect whose mind was capable of planning such a stupendous approach. A great Egyptian obelisk occupies the centre. This monument is the only one that has never been overthrown in Rome, it is said. There are two handsome fountains at the sides of the obelisk, discharging great quantities of water, and forming a very pretty picture seen from any point.

A description of St. Peter's Cathedral is so difficult to describe that I almost hesitate to do so, but will give a brief one. The cathedral is said to be built upon the site once occupied by the golden palace of Nero, and was first commenced about 800 A. D. It can hardly be said to be finished, for there is always some improvement or addition being made, although the edifice was consecrated in 1626. Its cost has already reached the sum of $60,000,000 and the annual cost of maintenance is about $40,000. It covers an area of over 18,000 square yards, as large almost as the next two largest cathedrals in the world. It is safe to say that the new and old printing offices could easily be placed in one of the naves and there would be room left for all the buildings in the square in which the printing office is located. The marbles are from all parts of the world, the frescoes are by the old masters and each one a gem. The chapels are rich in gold and bronze, and the sculpture is the finest in the world and beautiful beyond description. There is a large slab of porphyry near the main entrance upon which the emperors were formerly crowned.

The dome rests on four piers 234 feet in circumference. The niches of these piers are occupied by statues 16 feet high. Beneath the dome is a bronze canopy, built over the tomb of St. Peter. We were shown the sarcophagus said to contain the body of St. Peter.

We next visited the ruins of the Forum and walked around for several hours, beginning with the temples of Concordiæ, Vespasiani, and Saturni. The arch of Septimus Servius is in fairly good condition and is being restored. Nearby we saw the tomb of Romulus, recently excavated. Following the Sacra Via we passed the Basilica Julia, one of the largest ruins, and then to the house of Cæsar, where we roamed at our will, walking through the grand halls and rooms of this once wondrous palace. Passing by many more temples and palaces we came to the Arch of Titus and then to that of Constantine, the best preserved arch in Rome. We wound up the day with the Colosseum, the grandest structure of all, completed A. D. 80. It was inaugurated by gladiatorial combats lasting one hundred days, in which 5,000 wild animals were killed. Many palaces and churches have been built from material taken from this vast pile, and it is estimated that there are remaining at least $4,000,000 worth of building material.

On Wednesday morning we visited a famous street market and purchased some rare bronze lamps and ornaments. In the afternoon we called on Mgr. Kennedy, president of the American College, and presented letters of introduction, asking for a presentation to the Pope. He kindly presented us a letter introducing us to the secretary of the Pope. In the early evening we drove over several of the historical hills of Rome, obtaining many fine views of the city.

Thursday morning we drove to the Vatican and presented our letter. The genial secretary informed us in French that it would be a pleasure to grant us an audience at 5 p. m. that evening, and gave us cards admitting us to the Vatican. At 4.30 p. m. we entered a closed carriage, the ladies costumed in black and wearing black veils, while the gentlemen were in evening dress. Arriving at the Vatican a Swiss guard conducted us to the Scala Regia, the grand marble staircase, and we ascended to the court of San Damaro, where we were met by a gorgeously uniformed official, who conducted us to seats in a magnificent marble chamber, the walls of which are adorned with fine frescoes and tapestries. In a few minutes we were conducted into another and more magnificent chamber, where we were soon joined by a dozen others. We were the only Americans presented this day, Promptly at 5 o'clock the Pope entered the chamber, accompanied by numerous dignitaries, all handsomely garbed. He has a kingly appearance and an attractive personality, and conducted himself without any ostentation. We felt quite at our ease, and, while our cards stated we were not Catholics, we followed the precept and did as the others did. Before leaving the chamber the Pope turned to us and in a low and kindly voice gave us his benediction. We soon left the Vatican, feeling grateful for the opportunity of greeting the head of the great Roman Catholic Church. We found it much pleasanter descending from the Vatican, for in entering we were compelled to ascend 210 steps.

We spent Friday in visiting the Vatican Museum and the cathedral of St. John in Lateran, the oldest cathedral in Rome, and I believe the richest in mosaics. Opposite this edifice is a church containing the Scala Santa, which consists of twenty-eight marble steps from the palace of Pilate at Jerusalem, which our Savior is said to have once ascended. These steps were brought to Rome in 326 by the Empress Helena. They can only be ascended on the knees.

Yesterday we visited the small city of Tivoli, 25 miles from Rome, situated in the Sabine Mountains, and from which one can obtain a glimpse of the dome of St. Peter's. The ride out to Tivoli is full of interest and the scenery is very fine. After walking down over 600 steps we saw two grand cascades, the water falling over 300 feet, and visited a grotto. After lunch we engaged a carriage and drove about five miles in the country to the ruins of Hadrian's villa, passing on the way the ruins of the palace of Brutus. The villa and gardens of Hadrian cover 160 acres, and must have been magnificent. They date from about 130 A. D. The theatre, stadium, and library were magnificent in size judging from the walls still extant. We roamed over these ruins for several hours, and regretted we could not spend many more hours there.

To-day we attended mass in St. Peter's, and then drove to a Protestant Baptist chapel near the Pantheon, and listened to the sweetest music it has ever been our pleasure to hear. The sermon and singing was in Italian. This evening we wind up our visit to Rome with a drive over the Appian Way and Campagna, visiting St. Paul's Cathedral, outside the walls.

To-morrow afternoon we go to Pisa to see one of the seven wonders of the world, the leaning tower, and then on to Geneva, and then on to Monte Carlo, Nice, San Remo, Cannes, and hope to send you a letter from Milan in another week.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

Last week I received a card announcing the wedding of Mr. William Briggs and Miss Carrie Marie Douglass on June 23, with the further announcement that Mr. and Mrs. Briggs will be at home to their friends at 218 Fourth street southeast after September 1. Mr. Briggs, from his former prominence in Columbia Union, is too well known to the older readers of THE TRADES UNIONIST to need any setting forth at my hands. In 1880 and 1881 he was financial secretary, that office and corresponding secretary not then having been consolidated. In 1883 and 1884 he was a delegate to the Cincinnati and New Orleans sessions of the I. T. U., serving during these years as secretary-treasurer of the I. T. U. with the greatest satisfaction to the body. He has also been very prominent in the National Union, the patriotic and fraternal insurance order which numbers so many printers in its ranks, having held the offices of president of his council, member and president of the District Cabinet, and Senator to the national organization. In former years he was a compositor and later a proofreader in the Specifications Division, but for nearly twenty years has been one of the most competent and trusted clerks of the estimate division of the clerical department of the G. P. O. He has also achieved some prominence in Masonic circles, being a past master of Hope Lodge and a member of Washington Naval Chapter, R. A. M., and Orient Commandery, K. T. His many friends will be glad to learn of this latest step of his, and will wish him and his bride a long life of happiness.

A full hall greeted the pupils of Mrs. Bessie N. Wild at their recital at Carroll Institute Hall last evening, at which was rendered a splendidly arranged programme of twenty-four numbers, including vocalizations by Mrs. Nellie V. Suess, Mrs. Jessie Spencer Hover, Miss Nettie Wallace, Mr. Will E. Burchfield, and Mr. William Lawman, in solos and duets, and piano numbers by Misses Maryland and Gertrude Langford, Miss Gertrude Reamer, Mrs. Cora Reamer Clarke, Miss Yolande E. Burchfield, Miss Florence Gompers, Miss Marion Paul, Mrs. Emma F. Miles, Miss Deborah Louise Hickman (a granddaughter of the late W. H. Hickman), Mrs. Herbert Hollidge, Miss Mary Louise Wood, Mrs. Alice Kennedy, David L. C. Hover, and Miss Fern Prince, in two, four, and eight hand pieces. The greatest satisfaction was expressed at the proficiency shown by the pupils, evidencing the careful teaching they had had at the hands of Mrs. Wild, whose studio is at No. 73 Rhode Island avenue.

Joseph C. Berry, who has a number of acquaintances in this city, being one of the old-timers, writes me that he has been elected the delegate from Bellefontaine Union, No. 613, to St. Louis. He was the delegate from Buffalo Union, No. 9, to Detroit in 1878, and for several years was financial secretary of that union. It had been supposed by many that he was at one time president of Buffalo Union, myself included, which he explains by saying that at one time he was master workman of a Knights of Labor lodge there and during trouble with the newspapers the lodge and Buffalo Union joined teams, he being president of the joint convention. The fact that Charlie Berry was later president of that union tended to add to the impression. Joe was for a number of years in Boston, but being displaced by the machines, about ten years ago he returned to the home of his youth. Bellefontaine has many representatives in the G. P. O., all of whom will be glad to hear of Joe Berry. Jim Ackels, another former famous roadster from Bellefontaine, is also located there, and as he is pretty well into the sere and yellow of life, he will probably never leave there again.

I hope the absorbing Pull-the-Plug question is now settled and that Belcher, Bugg, and all other parties to the controversy will let us have peace. I strongly deprecate the acerbities that naturally grow out of the discussion of vital questions like this, but usually meet the peacemaker's fate of being the one worst punished in the melee. If we can have peace I will try to bear my black eye with becoming fortitude. But continue to pull the plug.

Newsom says that I do not know America. I knew some of her, Newsom, thirty years or so ago, from looking at her out of side-door Pullmans, but I expect that she has changed. "America" is also one of the three tunes I know, the other two being "My Country, 'Tis of Thee" and "God Save the King," and they were all sung on Decoration Day.

Shelby Smith sent me a bunch of his Trades Union Newses a few days ago, probably in answer to a suggestion of mine in a former issue of this great moral engine that I had not yet seen his paper. There was only one marked article in it, which I will copy: "Subscription, fifty cents a year," for which sum I judge any one can be served with it regularly on addressing the paper at 1231 Arch street, Philadelphia. He and Mr. McCaffrey are publishing a warm paper and I hope that it will accomplish a great deal of good.

Ours is such a cosmopolitan union that news of elections anywhere in which printers are concerned is sure to interest some. A. D. He was the first president of this organization, fifteen years ago.

"On the Making of the Congressional Record," an article of which its title is descriptive, by one of our modest young writers, Mr. Bloomer, will appear in the July number of the Inland Printer, to be followed in the August and September numbers by "Government Newspapers and Magazines," of the number and character of which few even of those engaged in their production have much idea. Even without these articles the Inland Printer is to a printer the most valuable publication issued.

About ten days ago Hamilton Platt arrived in the city, on a visit to relatives and old friends, from Seattle, Wash., where for a number of years he has been assistant foreman of the Post-Intelligencer, known of men as the P.-I. Mr. Platt worked in the G. P. O. the greater part of the time from 1875 to 1882, when he resigned and went to then Territory of Washington, where for a time he was engaged in the customs service. He later returned to the printing business, at first at Portland and later at Seattle, where he has been about fifteen years. While in the Webfoot State he has accumulated a wife and four girls, and possibly other things of value. He is a brother of James H. Platt, of the Job Room, and of the late William Platt, for many years in the Pension Office who went to Washington a few years ago and died there. Mr. Platt has no reason to complain of the way time has treated him, for he is still youthful in appearance.

I never saw a man so anxious for work as Chairman Brockwell, of the Annex Proof Room, but the work he wants is the collection of money as dues, assessments, and subscriptions. He had been out of a chairmanship for many years, owing to connection with a division the chairman of which inherited his job and was not to be displaced, but now that he has again caught on he comes to work with greater enthusiasm and vigor than ever. It is a matter of great grief to him if there comes a pay day when he has nothing to collect, so much in love with his work is he.

Sherman Bell Did Not Resign—The Citizens' Alliance in Evidence—Brutal Conduct Charged Against Militia—The Fight on Senator Patterson's Papers at Denver.

DENVER, COLO., June 14, 1904.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

I noted the editorial from the Post in your paper last week, and was pleased at its fairness, but the editor was misinformed as to Sherman Bell's resigning. I see a great many statements in the Eastern press regarding conditions here which are untrue, but as the Citizens' Alliances in this State are the censors of the Associated Press this is not to be wondered at. The only way to get the truth is through special correspondents. To-day Ralph Easley telegraphed Governor Peabody for a statement of his attitude toward labor and received a lie in reply, which Easley, being in the pay of the corporations, will publish as the truth, to the end that members of the American Federation of Labor in the East may be hoodwinked until after the next Presidential election. Before I pass from Easley I want to say that I believe he is, like Peabody, a degenerate member of the "oldest labor organization in the world," and that every one he recommends for the position of organizer in the A. F. of L. is in the same class, and the positions are sought by these degenerates solely for the purpose of betraying their fellows. I believe they all receive a double salary—and act doubly. I hope all members of organized labor who also belong to the original eight-hour fraternity will take due notice regarding these scoundrels and govern themselves accordingly.

Within the limited space which can be given to a letter from this distance one can not tell the story of labor's wrongs in this State in detail, but I propose to give a few facts for the information of your readers, and if one of them can be proven false I am willing to surrender my reputation for truthfulness and honesty which my fellow-craftsmen were pleased to give me while I dwelt among them. That is all I have to stake, but it is more to me than Carnegie's millions.

The cause of the present industrial troubles in Colorado primarily was the failure of the legislature to pass an eight-hour law for mines and smelters, where the work is both dangerous and unhealthful. The people demanded this law by a majority of 40,000, all parties advocating it. The law failed of passage because the corporations bribed enough legislators to defeat it. Sanford, the speaker of the house, was an obscure doctor at Castle Rock, and in debt. During his term he paid his debts, bought a $9,000 house, a $7,000 medical practice, a "red devil," and after the adjournment took a trip to Europe—all this on $7 a day for ninety days. To-day he is in hell, and so are the workingmen of Colorado.

Seeing they could not get relief through the Legislature the metalliferous miners ten months ago struck for the eight-hour day, and were followed later by the coal miners.

During this ten months not a single crime charged against them but was thoroughly investigated and they were found guiltless. The dynamite explosion at Independence ten days ago is charged to them, but if ever the guilty fiends are found I believe it will be as the other cases have turned out—that the mine owners hired the assassins to furnish a pretext for what they have done since. The mine owners have offered no reward for the apprehension of the miscreants. The miners have offered $5,000. Were the miners intent on violence, the interests they had at stake would have kept them from it. They were holding their convention here, a committee had just waited on the mine owners, with prospects of a settlement, and their president was and is a prisoner in Telluride without due process of law. But the Citizens' Alliance stepped in, the explosion occurred, the supreme court rendered its decision making the Governor a dictator, and a reign of terror is the result. During the occupation of Las Animas County by the militia several wives of the coal miners were raped by the soldiery. One of them was convicted in a military court and fined $7 for this crime. In Newcastle the homes of union coal miners were dynamited. Chris Evans and Wardjon were assaulted and nearly killed by the assassins of the Fuel and Iron Company, and more coal miners were deported than were metalliferous miners in Cripple Creek and Telluride. It is said the fight is solely on the Western Federation of Miners, but the facts give the lie to this assertion, for the coal miners belong to the A. F. of L. In Cripple Creek the only reason the edict against the A. F. of L. was withdrawn was because of the printers, for they stood pat and the papers could not come out without them.

The Retail Clerks surrendered their charter, and this week their hours were increased to twelve a day. Since the reign of terror set in at Cripple Creek, things have been done, that if they were done in the more thickly populated East would bring revolution.

The Victor Record was gutted, the union stores, four of them, were looted, the miners' union hall shot up, and the Hessians dipped their fingers in the blood of the wounded miners, and smeared it over the walls. All their records, a fine library, and one of the best collections of engineering models in the West, were destroyed. Frank Hangs, the miners' attorney, was thrown into the bull pen and his private papers seized, and the stores were forbidden to sell food to the families of the deported miners. Colonel McClelland, who attempted to criminally assault a telephone girl in Cripple Creek, issued this order. The pretext of the Independence explosion was seized by every lecherous scoundrel and every man who had his eye on a lease worked by a union miner to accomplish his design by reporting such men to the "committee of safety" for deportation, and these men, as innocent of crime as the Goddess of Liberty on the dome of the Capitol, were torn from their families and their property without an hour's notice. A member of the Alliance wrote to the wife of one of the deported men and told her he had long been enamored of her and that her husband had been run out for good, so he would take the husband's place and "protect" her. On her refusal to comply with the demands of this lecherous scoundrel, a couple of thugs were sent down to her home while she was at the house of a neighbor and a fire was built on the floor of the parlor of her little home, with the usual result. In Telluride the same outrages have been committed, and the cases I cite are but a few of those occuring daily under the reign of terror.

The culmination of all, however, to my mind, is the denial of the right of the press to publish reports of these outrages. Because he asked for justice for the miners, as well as the mine owners, the Citizens' Alliance has started a boycott on Senator Patterson's papers—the News-Times—the only daily papers in the State that have dared to denounce the crimes of the Alliance, and the only papers which stand for equal rights to all. He is making the fight for humanity at a loss of $8,000 a month since the boycott started, but he is going to keep it up, and all organized labor is with him, as are all fair-minded men. There is no secret made by the Alliance of this boycott. Patterson was informed that unless he would "be good," suppress all reference to the crimes committed by the mine owners, and support Peabody's course, his business would be ruined. He served notice on them that he had a few louis d'ors stacked away for just such an emergency, and for them to start the deal and he would play the hand out. Well, the hand is being played now, with human life and woman's virtue as the stakes. If the Citizen's Alliance should win the fight in this case it means that not a union printer will be employed in Colorado, for if it can indicate the policy of the press it can and will dictate the wage conditions. Notwithstanding the prating of the Alliance for the "open shop," it stands for the "closed shop" more stanchly than do trade unionists. One of its principal grievances against Patterson is the fact that he would not break his contract with the printers a year ago, and it realizes that as long as the Typographical Union stands in this State labor unions can not be crushed. To the breaking up of our organization it is bending every energy, but we'll be here when it is but a bloody memory. We will keep organized openly if we can, secretly if we must, and when the day comes that we are forced to do the latter those who have compelled the condition must not be surprised if they fill the bull pens instead of those whom they are now subjecting to that indignity.

You who have known me know that all I ask is a square deal—the right of an organization to make a contract with an employer, and for both sides to keep to the agreement. But in Colorado the state of affairs is one to make an anarchist out of any man who loves his kind. I wish I could frame words to picture the conditions in the mining camps, the same conditions which will prevail in Denver in the next six months unless the whole country wakes up and comes to our aid. I have cited but a few instances of what is being done. One must live here to know the whole truth. We ask the workingmen of the East to rally to our support, to call mass meetings to protest against this destruction of our liberties. When it was a question of coal in the East the President of the United States started the fires to warm the people. Are the workingmen of Colorado, who are asking for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, as guaranteed by the Constitution, of less importance than a ton of coal?

I. T. U. Convention Headquarters.

The committee on arrangements of Typographical Union, No. 8, of St. Louis, Mo., have issued a booklet, giving the rates charged at the Inside Inn, which will be headquarters for the convention. Intending visitors to the convention and delegates are requested to make application for quarters to the Inside Inn Company, and to notify the committee of No. 8 of having done so.

On or about August 1 a circular will be sent out giving details for the reception of visitors by the convention committee.

A bill making it a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of $100 to $500, or by imprisonment from three months to one year, either to use a union label without authority or to counterfeit the label, or have in possession any merchandise marked with a counterfeit label, has been made a law in New York.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

NOTICE.

During the months of June, July, and August this office will be closed at 12 o'clock noon Saturdays.

Meeting of Ex-Delegates.

There will be a meeting of the Ex-Delegates' Association of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, at Typographical Temple, on Sunday, July 3, 1904, at 2.30 p. m. Business of importance. Report of St. Louis Convention Committee.

Z. T. JENKINS, President.
J. T. HERBERT, Secretary.

First Division.

Ed. B. Horen, slug 14, has resigned.

Postmaster Ben H. Pratt was indisposed the early part of the week.

L. P. Kenney, of the Y, is confined to his home with erysipelas in his foot.

Maker-up J. C. Lesher is on leave. His position is being filled by N. J. Lillard.

The first duty of a printer having printing done is to demand the union label on the same.

R. M. Hugdal has been assigned to slug 50. Mr. Hugdal, I believe, comes from the Third Division.

The rapidity with which some of the boys developed into linotype operators last Monday was surprising.

James E. Bright returned to work last Friday, Timekeeper Leeds came back on Monday, and Imposer Burnside showed up on Tuesday.

An item in last week's notes referring to "N. T. Hillard" should have read N. J. Lillard. By reference to his good nature, however, everybody knew who it was intended for.

C. E. Etchberger, jr., slug 95, has the distinction of being the only Lanston operator in the First Division. Mr. Etchberger was connected with the Lanston Company for several years.

It doesn't matter much, Mr. Bloomer, whether it's "table de hote" or "tabble dote." Unless you have the "spondulicks" (spund'licks) you've got to take a plate of pork (po'k) and beans anyhow.

The appearance of the paymaster on Saturday was a most agreeable surprise to most of us. Somebody will win a lot of gratitude, if not a loving cup, if they will just keep on paying off on Saturdays.

A gentleman in this division has called me down for the recent query about the woodchuck. The correct quotation is: "How much wood would a woodchuck chuck if a woodchuck wood chuck wood?"

A letter has been received from J. B. Harris, of Hickory, N. C., in which he says his condition remains about the same. With what strength he has left he will try to live an outdoor life in the hope of bettering his condition.

If you see a fellow stop suddenly, make several movements with his fingers, then smile and move on, don't think he is crazy. The chances are he's practicing combinations on an imaginary Mergenthaler keyboard.

John A. Onyun has returned from his trip to Peoria, Ill. While in the Sucker State he attended the State meeting of the Allied Printing Crafts Union at Springfield, and for the twelfth consecutive time was elected secretary-treasurer.

To my friends "Billy" Schinnerer and John A. Onyun I owe an apology. In giving the names of those from this division serving on committees I failed to mention their names, the former of whom is on the Grievance and the latter the Relief Committee.

While assisting Mrs. Garrette to alight from a car at the corner of North Capitol and H streets on Saturday night, in some manner Imposer Charles F. Garrette was thrown to the ground and received painful injuries, necessitating his laying off a few days.

After having his attention called to the dissatisfaction which exists over the elevator service, Foreman Bowen has been doing all that is in his power to bring about a more satisfactory service for this room. It is not the easiest thing imaginable to change the present service, and what the future brings forth is yet a matter of conjecture.

The nerve of some peoole is to be admired. Morris L. Phillips, who recently went to Illinois to undergo an operation for appendicitis, writes me he hopes to be over with it in time to return on his round-trip ticket. Under the same circumstances a single trip ticket and an introduction to the undertaker would have been what not a few of us would have procured.

Among the winners of the Post free trip to St. Louis contest was Miss Elizabeth Haworth, sister of Maker-up Tom Haworth, of this division, Miss Haworth is a teacher of mathematics in Central High School, this city. When the Post contest started last May, Mr. Haworth's friends in this division began to assist him in the contest with the above gratifying results.

Saturday being the first of the half holidays, a fitting way to celebrate would be to join the Illinois Republican Association on its annual excursion to Marshall Hall. These excursions are always among the most pleasant given to that popular resort. Among the prominent officials in this office from Illinois are Public Printer Palmer, Foreman of Printing Oscar J. Ricketts, Foreman A. W. Bowen, Paymaster Clifford, Foreman Pearson, Superintendent of Documents Farrel, Day Foreman of the Record Constantine, Clerks W. M. Mitchell, B. W. Bonney, Miss Minnie Biggins, Assistant Foreman Brandt.

A gentleman in this division who evidently believes Friend Belcher needs help has contributed the following:

We have read your muse with wonder,
Adam Bugg;
And we've marvelled at your plunder,
Adam Bugg,
We have scanned your lines for meter,
We've concluded you're a cheater,
And for crossness you're a beater,
Adam Bugg.

Now, just take a word of warning,
Adam Bugg,
Or the folks o'er whom you're yarning,
Adam Bugg,
Will be a-sizing up your hat
And wondering where you are at,
And they'll likely imagine that Adam's bugged.

CHAS. S. GUNN.

Second Division.

Work every night except Saturday till 9 o'clock is the rule now.

J. M. McLaughlin, of the committee on finance was one of the Second's committeemen overlooked last week.

Col. W. H. Sweeney, formerly make-up in this room, came back from the Proof Room to help us out for a few days.

Are you an operator? How much experience have you had? These are the questions which were put to us last week.

Edgar P. Bennett (Slug 86), our late teller, has returned to work after a spell of illness. He is now holding copy in the Proof Room.

J. B. Trudgian requests that hereafter when his name appears in these columns the title "Dr." be used instead of "Doc." as we all familiarly call him.

McPike hands in the following:

If Belcher, "the squelcher," isn't indulging in Rotterdam sight worse than McPike ever imposed upon a confiding community, why is it that such Adam Bugg-aboo is being made about it?

Those subscription papers which are being continually sent around should have some one's name appended to the story at the top to vouch for them. We have been fooled several times.

Dave Pollock is contemplating joining the National Guard and attending the encampment this year. He is practicing discipline and turns square corners when he walks, saying "Column right! Column left!" etc.

We are pleased to note from last Sunday's Post that Dr. William J. Manning, of this division, passed the examination before the Board of Medical Examiners for the District of Columbia, and is licensed to practice both medicine and surgery. There were fourteen applicants and five failed to pass.

The chairmanship election Wednesday promises to be interesting. While the present incumbent intends to run, there are several others who feel that duty calls them that way. Mr. J. B. Trudgian (Dr.) has denied the rumor that he is to run, but it won't down. A former night man who is never slow at getting to the wash room is thinking of running. The many friends of Thos. E. Doty are urging his name for the place, saying he is eminently qualified.

Third Division.

Public band concerts will be given as follows during the week ending Thursday, July 7:

Thursday, June 30—Marine Band, at Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, at Franklin Park and Fort Myer.

Friday, July 1—Engineer Band, at Judiciary Park and Washington Barracks.

Saturday, July 2—Marine Band, at White House Grounds.

No concerts July 4.

Tuesday, July 5—Engineer Band, at Lincoln Park and Washington Barracks.

Wednesday, July 6—Marine Band, at Capitol Grounds.

Thursday, July 7—Marine Band, at Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, at Smithsonian Grounds and at Fort Myer.

James L. Sauls returned "home" from the Spess last Friday.

Ralph M. Hugdal was transferred to the First Division last Saturday morning.

Mr. F. C. Kemon, maker-up, has been enjoying a belated leave during the past week.

Max J. Noble was the temporary chairman Monday afternoon during the absence of Chairman Goldstein.

Assistant Foreman George L. Sherman returned from his leave Monday morning. During his absence his place at the desk was filled by E. C. Saltzman.

George C. Sparks seems to be gaining, but very slowly. George says he wants to get well, and is trying all he knows to help the doctor. His friends all hope for his recovery.

The election for chairman of this division will have been held, in all probability, before I reach my readers, so that it is impossible to forecast the result. There is a noticeable lack of talk on the subject.

It is said that the father of the present Czar of Russia used to perform upon the trombone and cornet, and that William of Germany amuses himself with the French horn. There would seem to be some excuse for Nihilists and anarchists.

Among recent musical publications it is pleasant to note a song by H. S. Sutton, "Long Line of Loyal Hearts." As its title implies it extols the gallant men who have volunteered in defense of the flag of our country, and both words and music are spirited and inspiring and a credit to the talented author.

Last Monday morning Mr. Bass went to every man in the division and asked him the following questions:

1. Did you ever operate a Mergenthaler?

2. Are you willing to learn?

It is understood that affirmative answers to the first question were received from sixteen men.

An unexpected change was made on Monday in the foremanship of the Third Division, Mr. E. A. M. Lawson (formerly in charge at the State Branch) assuming the position held for the past eight or nine months by Mr. William M. Bass, who is assigned to the place vacated by Mr. Lawson. Mr. Bass is a good foreman and a kindly gentleman, and he has the kindest wishes of his friends in this division.

A few weeks ago Mr. C. N. Brockwell informed me that it had been intimated to him that I was only making fun of him in a complimentary notice I had printed in this column some weeks previously. This will inform all envious persons that I would not presume to make game of Mr. Brockwell. A man who can crack a joke like he can is worthy of the highest respect, and he will always receive it from me.

There is probably no man in all this vast printery who commands any more of the respect of his fellow-employees than does John F. Warner, messenger of the Third Division. He is not what you would call a "star performer" in the sense of going out of his way to do some sky-rockety thing for the purpose of drawing attention. He just does his work well, is courteous to all, and is always willing to do you a service when it will not conflict with his duties. You will hear from him some day.

Two former members of Roosevelt's Rough Riders—Cliff Scott, of this division, and Bill Mattock, of the Fourth—celebrated "Los Guasimus" Day, Friday, June 24, by calling on their old colonel at the White House. This was in pursuance of an invitation given every member of the regiment by Colonel Roosevelt to call on him every June 24 as long as they were within calling distance. The President talked pleasantly with his old comrades for about twenty minutes concerning their experiences in Cuba. "Cliff," by the way, was one of Roosevelt's orderlies. There were three. The other two were killed. But that is another story.

NONPAREIL SLUGS.

Near my house there is much digging by those employed to lay out the freight yards for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. There are some few men employed on the steam shovels. These are mostly Americans, but by far the larger number are common laborers; some of these are negroes, but the majority are foreigners, called familiarly "Dagoes."

One morning in the early spring I called my son's attention to a long string of men marching past the house toward the scene of their labors.

"There go the Dagoes," said I to him, pointing to the marchers.

After looking them over carefully, he remarked: "Those are not Dagoes; they're men."

That is the way he has of distinguishing intelligent mechanics from common laborers.

I am not a poet.

I am only a man.

But if I were a poet—a real, truly poet—and if the "embattled newspaper press of the country" said I was, and a poor, insignificant man had dared to question their verdict, it does seem to me as if I would feel so secure in the fact that I was really and truly a poet that I would pay no attention to that man at all.

It does seem to me that if I were that poet with that powerful backing, and if I had anything to say, I would say it over my own name, and not hire a cockroach or any other kind of bug to speak for me.

I do not propose to further tire the readers of THE TRADES UNIONIST by mentioning this subject again. I only beg to commend to them the fulminations of Adam Bugg as direct evidence that in criticising some "poetry" written by Talbott I certainly struck him under the fifth rib.

Else why is Bugg so frantic?

But the best of friends must part. Good-bye Mr. William Adam-Bugg-Talbott!

Don't take it so much to heart.

As you say, the world don't appreciate such Great Ones as Shakspere, Burns, Poe, and Yourself.

Please allow a little for just a plain, ordinary man.

I am not a poet.

I am only a man.

Just a few "terse" paragraphs this time, dear Bloomer.

Don't worry, Bloomer. Your "decomposition" don't ornament the "Flotsam and Jetsam" department. "Infernally rotten," did you say? Yes; quite so.

J. W. BELCHER.

State Branch.

Miss Anna E. Brett is away for a few days on leave.

Benjamin F. Peed, one of our laborers, is away on a short vacation.

Edwin Walmsley, foreman of the bindery, was recently away on leave.

J. J. Whittle, of the main press room, had charge of the press room here while Mr. Mellon was away on leave.

Chas. B. Mellon, foreman of the press room, has just returned to work after taking the remainder of his leave.

Chas. S. Heinlein has just recovered from a very serious illness, the result of a bad fall. He is now attending to his regular duties.

We are a little shy on fish stories, as our fishermen, J. T. Roberts and Frank Manderfeld will not go out again until they decide who shall row the boat.

Jas. H. Miller had a bad fall from his bicycle Wednesday morning while crossing the slippery car tracks. His wrists was slightly sprained, and one leg of his pantaloons was almost completely severed and he had to go home and discard them. The accident, however, did not interfere with his work.

Last Tuesday morning there was a change in the foremanship here. E. A. M. Lawson, who has been our foreman for the past two years, and William M. Bass, who has been foreman of the Third Division, exchanged places, Lawson going to the Third and Bass coming here. It was a surprise to all. Both seem pleased, and of course we have to be.

D. S. McConnel returned to work Wednesday after spending his leave at his old home in Beaver, Pa. While away he attended the funeral of his brother, First-Lieut. R. G. McConnel, U. S. M. C., who died in Albuquerque, N. M., on the 17th instant, as a result of service and exposure in the Philippines. Dave has the sympathy of all his workmates.

Something Doing in the Indian Country.

Col. Harry Hunter, of the Post, takes a whole week and ransacks about fifty rural newspapers to get up half a column of "Something Doing in the Country," but I submit the following, from a single issue of the Kiowa (Ind. T.) Breeze, as equaling any half column he ever got up. It may be remembered that I presented a similar exhibit from the same paper about a year and a half ago. I am going to ask the compositors to imitate the typographical "shoemaking" as far as their artistic sense will permit.

At mine no 2, of the Coalfate Co's, at Coalgate I.T. they are having all kinds of trouble with getting the pump to work, it seems that they are trying to use steam to drive it with, at a distance of about 1800, eighteen hundred feet down the slope. It does look as though a crack?master?mechanic? ought to be able to make it run:
One fellow there says a mechanic told him, that the way he started a pump, he carried water and primed the pump; and this is how he don it, - after takeing out all of the valves of the dump he carried water from the sump, np to the pump, and poured it into the pump, a bout an hour of this kind af work and he concnded the pump was primed, so he puts the valves back and turns on the steam, , , b-u-t- the pump failed to work: W-e-l-l- , he might do to drown out gophers, ? ? .

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of June 28, 1904.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8.10 o'clock by Chairman Wells, all officers being present except vice-chairman.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

From Painters' Union, No. 368, certifying to W. M. Lewis, G. W. Seiben, and G. Jule Murray.

From Wood, Wire, and Metal Lathers' Union, No. 9, certifying to F. L. Cisne, S. Stansbury, and J. Newcomb. Referred to committee consisting of Delegates Thompson, Luebkirt, and Stevens, who made a favorable report, and the delegates were obligated and seated.

From Slate and Tile Roofers, certifying to P. H. Loftus, vice D. Brand, out of the city.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Christian Heurich Brewing Company, inclosing a signed Council contract for a period of two years from June 25, and asking that the proper officers sign same and return it. Request complied with.

From Ambrose H. Stannard, stating that his firm would observe the form of agreement of Council and pay scale of wages on their work in the District.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Delegate Lewis reported action of Central Labor Union on Portner contract, and that by-laws had been approved by Central Labor Union.

Delegate Sheetz stated that a delegate from Amalgamated Carpenters to Central Labor Union had read at the last meeting of the Central Labor Union: "'Be it resolved, That no person be permitted to participate (as a delegate) in the meetings of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union who is not in possession of current working card issued by the Council of Allied Building Trades of Central Labor Union,' was taken from the table, unanimously adopted, and ordered incorporated in the by-laws," and asked if same had been referred to a referendum vote or had been adopted while by-laws were in the hands of the Executive Committee of the Central Labor Union. The secretary stated the resolution was introduced May 10 and acted on June 7. It was decided as the sense of the Council that the resolution only covered the conduct of the business of the Council and that it was unnecessary to refer same to the referendum.

The By-Laws Committee was instructed to consider suggestions submitted by the different unions and submit recommendations at next meeting.

ROLL CALL.

Under roll call of unions to submit business, thirty-seven delegates from eighteen unions were marked present.

Stone Laborers reported progress on Viehmeyer yard.

Hoisting Engineers announced the death of Patrick McMahon, their International president, and the secretary was directed to express the sympathy of the Council to the general secretary.

Hod Carriers stated that the trouble on Barnes Hospital had been adjusted.

Electrical Workers stated that non-union electricians were at work on different jobs where card men of other trades were working, and asked assistance of Council. The matter was referred to the Business Agent.

Painters stated that by orders of their general office they had called their men off of the Larz Anderson and Bureau of Printing and Engraving jobs; that the same firm, Cutter & Marshall, had the work at Homeopathic Hospital. The Business Agent was instructed to look after the jobs.

Paperhangers stated that the work on Park Hotel had been straightened out.

Machinists stated that they had not been able to get Sommerville & Co.'s shop, and asked that the delegates agitate the matter in their unions.

The secretary was directed to take up the Hod Carriers' matter with Luke Murtaugh and endeavor to have it straightened out.

The secretary read report of office for quarters ending March 31 and June 30, showing that 2,136 cards had been used during the quarter. The report was referred to the trustees.

NEW BUSINESS

It was duly moved, seconded, and carried that the Council proceed to election of officers.

The chair appointed Delegates Cosh and Russell tellers and Boyd clerk.

H. J. Wells was the only nominee for chairman and was unanimously elected.

Delegates Daly, Nothnagel, and Sheetz were placed in nomination for vice-chairman.

Delegate Daly received 14 votes; Nothnagel, 12, and Sheetz, 3

Delegate Daly was, on motion of Delegate Nothnagel, seconded by Delegate Sheetz, unanimously chosen.

E. J. Ratigan was reelected secretary-treasurer.

E. J. Ratigan was elected Business Agent, without any opposition.

Moses Peyton was reelected sergeant-at-arms.

J. A. Daly, B. Russell, and E. L. McClelland were reelected trustees.

THE LEANING TOWER OF PISA

Genoa, the Home of Columbus—The Campo Santo—Breaking the Bank at Monte Carlo—Guests of the Prince of Monaco—Switzerland a Tourist's Paradise.

HOTEL DU PARC,
MILAN, ITALY, June 19, 1904.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

Last Monday we made our way to Pisa to see one of the seven wonders of the world—the famous leaning tower. It is well worth a trip to Italy alone. It is 178 feet high and is thirteen feet out of perpendicular. It is built of marble and has several balconies running around it. One has a queer sensation in ascending the winding steps. Upon reaching the top you feel like keeping on the high side for fear it might topple over. There are seven bells in the tower, one weighing seven tons. We saw the tower in company with a number of King Edward's naval officers.

We next visited the Cathedral, begun in 1063. The façade is unusually imposing. It contains many fine paintings and the old bronze lamp that gave Galileo the idea of the pendulum is hanging in the nave. The baptistry is a fine structure, the dome of which is 190 feet high. It is particularly noted for its echoes, several samples being given by the sacristan. The campo sauto, or cemetery, was next visited. This is a building over 400 by 170 feet, with a central court, the earth in this court having been brought from Mount Calvary. The corridor is adorned with many pieces of sculpture and the walls covered with paintings.

Our next stop was Genoa, "la Superba," a fine city built on the hills surrounding the bay. It reminded us very much of Naples. After visiting the museum and seeing some of the relics of Columbus, including some of his letters, we drove to the Campo Sauto, the finest cemetery in the world. This is a fine granite building, having two corridors. It is built in the form of a square, with a court in the center. In this cemetery are buried 250,000 bodies and it contains 80,000 monuments, some of them sculptured by Italy's famous sculptors. Many of the figures are of living persons, who have them erected as soon as one member of the family die, and in some instances they are erected years before any death. This we found to be one of the most interesting sights in Italy. There is a magnificent chapel that contains sixteen black marble monoliths supporting the roof. Only Catholics are buried here. Near by the Jews, Russians, Greeks, and Protestants have their cemeteries.

Our next stop was the beautiful city of Nice. In going to this city our train skirted the shores of the blue Mediterranean nearly the whole distance, passing through the great winter resorts of San Remo, Mentone, Monte Carlo, Monaco, and Villefranche. We enjoyed a ride over the beautiful boulevards of Nice and along the famous English promenade.

We made the trip from Nice to Monte Carlo over the Corniche road by electric cars and shall never forget the beautiful views of land and sea. It is a veritable paradise.

Monte Carlo we visited for the purpose of breaking the bank. I shall not tell how much money we won, for it might encourage some of our Washington brethren to try to break it. Most of those who come for that purpose go home wiser if not richer. We presented ourselves to the entrance of the Casino and were ushered into the room where cards of admittance are issued. Upon showing our passport cards were immediately made out good for one day, on the back of which we were told to sign our names. After viewing some of the paintings we entered the tiger's lair, sumptuous room, richly decorated. There were five tables in full blast, surrounded by two or three hundred men and women. We were astounded at the way they handle money here. Each table has six men looking after the interests of the bank, and to say they are proficient in their business is putting it mild. We were simply dazed at the rapidity of the game. Great stacks of gold, silver and paper money were in evidence, but generally the bank officials were the best supplied. Some of the players were having good luck, but many more were having just the opposite. There were men and women over sixty years old, who would pass for deacons at home, busy staking their lucre on the numbers. One old lady kept loosing right along. She would make four or five bets on each turn of the wheel, occasionally winning; but we noticed that her pile of gold was fast dwindling. We visited the Casino again at night and saw an animated sight, for the crowd was even greater than in the afternoon.

We rode over to the palace of the Prince of Monaco and requested permission to visit the edifice, and again for the second time this day did Uncle Sam's passport open the portals for us, portals that would have remained closed if we were not supplied with that indispensable identification paper.

Yesterday we came to Milan, by way of Genoa, and this morning attended mass in the wonderful cathedral, afterwards going to St. Ambrose, where the old Lombard kings received the "Iron Crown." This being a special day, we followed a vast multitude into the crypt and saw the body of St. Ambrose, who died over 1,500 years ago, and the bodies of two other saints. They were not very attractive sights, for the skin is drawn tight over the faces and feet, the only portions exposed. They all wore costly ornaments in rings and crowns.

We go to Como, and then over the Alps by diligence into Switzerland next.

HOTEL SEILER,
ZERMATT, June 26, 1904.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

Since my last letter, written in Milan, we made a trip out to Monzo, where is located one of the King's summer palaces and where King Humbert was assassinated in 1900. It is situated in a beautiful park of many hundred acres in area, and is probably one of the finest parks in Europe.

We also went to see De Vinci's famous fresco, "The Last Supper." Like Mark Twain, we think the copies we saw of it are more interesting than the original.

Leaving Milan we made our way northward to beautiful Como, situated at the foot of even more beautiful Lake Como. The city is almost entirely surrounded by the mighty Alps. Como is not very interesting, but is noted as being the birthplace of the two Plinys and Voltaire.

The trip up this much-traveled lake is made in comfortable excursion steamers, and is filled with scenery that is indescribable for its beauty. The banks of the lake are occupied with handsome villas and little towns, all surrounded by an abundance of foliage. Tremezzo and Bellagio are two popular resorts, and magnificent hotels could be seen near the water's edge. After a pleasant sail of about three hours we arrived at Menaggio, where we boarded a train, which carried us over the mountains to Porlezzo, where we boarded another steamer on Lake Lugano. In an hour we arrived at the pretty little mountain village of Lugano, where we put up for the night. The view from our hotel is a fine one, taking in the lake and high peaks of the Alps.

The next afternoon we boarded a steamer that took us to Ponte Tresa, where we connected with the mountain railroad that runs to Luino, where a steamer on the largest of the Italian lakes, the Maggiore, soon landed us at Pallanza, a delightful place, where we spent the night and part of the next day, taking the diligence the next afternoon for Gravellana, connecting with the train that in an hour brought us to Domo d'Oossola, a small town situated near the Italian entrance of the great Simplon tunnel that is nearing completion, and will be over twelve miles long. This trip from Como to Domo d'Oossola is unique in that we kept dodging from from Italy into Switzerland and vice versa. The frontier is so crooked that we were not always sure which country we were in. In buying postage we had to ask which country we were in. French, Italian, and Swiss money circulates together in these border cities. When we paid our bills we would ask what kind of money they wanted, and would be met with the reply, "Oh, any kind." I might add that Uncle Sam's money is also accepted.

We had now arrived at the commencement of our trip over the Alps by diligence. It was so full of interest that we will never forget it. These diligences are operated by the Swiss government, carrying the mail. The vehicles and horses are fine and the drivers are experts in all that the word implies.

Leaving Domo d'Oossala at 6.45 a. m. we slowly ascended the great Simplon Pass, passing great precipices and going through gorges and tunnels. Great fields of snow lay all around us, and we were surrounded by snow-covered peaks many thousands of feet high. We saw a number of glaciers, and at one point passed under an arch of frozen snow. Hundreds of streams of rushing water came tumbling down the mountain sides to join the swiftly flowing river in the valley.

At 12 o'clock we stopped at an inn and had dinner, the poste horses being changed again for the third time. At 1 o'clock away we went again, climbing terrace after terrace, always getting higher and higher. The air became quite cold at this altitude, about 7,000 feet. About 2 o'clock we reached the famous Simplon Hospice, founded by Napoleon during his march over the Alps into Italy. We got out of the diligence and inspected this grand old building, containing among other things a pretty chapel. Here we gathered snow balls and threw them at each other.

While our ascent was slow, it was never tiresome. In descending we must have made record speed, for we fairly fled down the mountain side. I am sure we all offered up prayers for safety. The driver paid little attention to curves or tunnels, but drove as though Satan was after us. At 4 o'clock we drew into the interesting mountain town of Brigue, where we put up for the night.

The next afternoon we boarded the train for Visp, a small village about ten miles from Brigue, and changed to a mountain train, operated on the rack and pinion system. This train climbs up and up for two and half hours, landing us at Zermatt, over 5,000 feet above the sea. The scenery all the way up is magnificent, the grade being 45 feet to the 1,000.

Zermatt is made up of hotels and pensions, but it is the gem city for scenery in all Switzerland. While this is a little early in the season the hotels are nearly all crowded, mostly by English tourists. We shall stay here for several days, making the ascent of the Goenergrat tomorrow. The Matterhorn, the finest peak of the Alps, has been covered with clouds all day, but we are going to stay until we can see it in all its snow-capped glory. It is nearly 15,000 feet high and covered with eternal snow and glaciers. Only one ascent has been made this season.

From Zermatt we go to Martigny for a few days and then take a carriage over the famous Lete Noir to Chamoinix and then on to Geneva by rail.

We see English papers every day and learn what little news of America they contain. From what we have read of the kidnapping at Tangiers, we almost regret we were not kidnapped ourselves.

Strong Questions from a Judge.

Have you ever known of a trades council or labor organization corrupting or debauching a legislature of any State?

Have you ever read of a labor organization, no matter how humble, corrupting or debauching the members of a common council for the purpose of securing a franchise?

And is it not the principal object of labor organizations to secure a better wage, such as will enable its members to leave their children in the schoolroom instead of sending them to the doorways of factories seeking employment at the tender age of fourteen?—Judge James Phelan of Detroit.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of July 5, 1904.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8.05 o'clock by Chairman Wells.

The chair suggested that, on account of the heat, the Council adjourn after reading of minutes, which was agreed to.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Geo. A. Fuller Co., in regard to masonry work. Laid over for one week.

From Steam and Hot Water Fitters, inclosing their vote on by-laws. Referred to the By-Laws Committee.

ROLL CALL.

On roll call to submit business, eleven organizations and twenty delegates representing the same, were recorded present.

The Council then adjourned.

Labor Unions.

In his recent address before the American Social Science Association at Boston, Judge William J. Gaynor of the New York supreme bench, among other things, said:

"The men who compose the labor organizations are learning the absolute necessity of having wise and discreet leaders. So far has this gone that our labor organizations are becoming centers of economic thought and their leaders educated economists. The day of the political demogogue is also passing in organized labor. Workingmen have come to understand that their present and future depend on the favor of no one, but wholly on their own growing education, intelligence and organization. Our system of common schools makes the future theirs."

"Indeed, the declaration of organized capital which we used to hear so often that it would not deal with organized labor's representatives at all, but only with the individual workers, is now seldom heard. It had a sound of arrogance which did not suit the American people. Labor has as much right to organize as capital has, and organized capital forgot itself for the time being when it turned its back in the face of organized labor."

Labor Day at Benning.

The Labor Day Committee of the Central Labor Union have completed arrangements to hold its annual outing at Benning race track, the Washington Jockey Club having placed the grounds at their disposal. The committee promise a day of sport and enjoyment far in excess of any attempted heretofore, a subcommittee being engaged in perfecting a program of events, including automobile racing, horse racing, and athletic events in field sports.

The Trusts.

Seventeen coal companies of Illinois were convicted in the Appellate Court of that State of being members of a trust. Each, the court declares, must pay the fine of $500 inflicted at the end of the "coal trust" trials before Judge Horton in the Circuit Court.

"If a systematic attempt," said Judge Ball, in reciting the opinion of the court, "covering years of time, by an association made up of the larger producers of coal in northern Illinois to control the output, sale and price of soft coal in every city and railroad town in that territory and elsewhere, and to dictate who should and who should not handle that coal locally, be not criminal in its character, then pools, trusts and combinations have nothing to fear from the law.

"We agree with Judge Horton that the defendants were in a criminal conspiracy."

A Strong Trade Union.

Amalgamation of the United Brotherhood and Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners of America makes the new organization the strongest trade organization in the country, with $1,500,000 of reserve fund for strike and lockout benefits, sick, accident, funeral, out of work and other benefits, including an old-age benefit of $11 a month for those who have been members in good standing for twenty-five years.

The Eight-Hour Day.

Daniel J. Keefe, president of the International Longshoremen's Association, said in a recent issue of the New York Journal:

"Speaking from my own personal experience as a longshoreman, gained while working on the docks for many years, I will state boldly that when two gangs of men unload lumber, coal, etc., from a vessel, the conditions being entirely the same, one gang working eight hours and the other ten for a season of eight months or a year, the men working eight hours will have accomplished as much as those working ten hours and have done better work.

"Recognizing as a fact that the three first hours of the morning and the three hours after noon show the greatest and best results, it stands to reason that after eight hours' labor the accumulated energy has been exhausted and the worker is drawing on his reserve or vital force for the accomplishment of the balance of his ten hour day, whereas the stimulus of a shorter day allows him to recuperate and put forth his best efforts, without the strain, the fatigue or exhaustion required for ten hours.

"Man is the only animal that mankind will expect or permit to set a pace of endurance for one day and then compel him to keep that pace for a quarter of a century, in most instances casting him aside at the age of thirty-five or forty years if he fails to perform the work as he did at twenty-five.

"We may ask a horse to go fifty miles in one day, but we stop our calculations if with the same horse we must go 150 miles. And we fancy there are men who would term us brutes if we drove a horse forty miles each day for a week.

"Society fails to recognize the poor human wrecks who failed to keep the pace and whose untimely deaths are often attributed to many other causes rather than the real cause.

"A gang of longshoremen on the different docks on Lake Superior will load from 6,000 to 8,000 tons of iron ore into a vessel in two and one-half hours.

"This is too much to demand of any worker. The intense strain on the human system makes an eight-hour day a necessity for longshoremen."

Tools of Wealth.

The daily press is rapidly becoming as much an object of the distrust and suspicion of workingmen as the pulpit, and for much the same reasons. Both, more or less openly, pander to caste, wealth, and entrenched privilege. The editorial policy of the average daily newspaper is invariably dictated by some one with a political axe to grind, or large financial interests to subserve. Its special departments are conducted for the sole benefit of those who have plenty of money to spend always. There are no beauty or fashion hints on the "women's page" for the workingman's wife and daughters, but plenty for those who can afford to indulge in beauty cults and Parisian gowns. As for the workingman himself, when he is not openly snubbed he is studiously ignored until he goes on a strike. Then he receives all that is coming to him of the kind of publicity which makes its victims squirm. Yes, the press and the pulpit are twin educators of the people!—Coast Seamen's Journal.

A Businesslike Trade Union.

The Cigarmakers' Union handled $1,200,000 last year. To sick members it paid $147,000. To widows and orphans it paid $139,000. To members on strike it paid $21,000. To members out of work it paid $15,500.

There are about 43,000 members in this union, and they pay 30 cents a week to keep it going. In the last twenty years it has paid out over $5,000,000 in benefits to the members.

If a cigarmaker wants to go to some other city to find employment the union lends him $20 to pay his way.

There are few strikes among the cigarmakers. They meet in convention only once in every eight years, as they are too businesslike to believe in much speechmaking. All their questions are settled by majority vote, not by a few leaders.

The Newspaper of the Future.

Nikola Tesla, the inventor, shows the possibilities of the newspaper of the future in an article in the Scientific American describing the system of wireless telegraphy he promises soon to perfect.

Mr. Tesla proposes to erect a central tower to receive messages which may be sent from all quarters of the world by means of pocket instruments carried by the senders.

By means of this system each newspaper could erect a central tower over its plant, and, equipping its reporters with pocket instruments, send them forth into the world in quest of news.

As fast as a reporter got a "story" he could tick it off on his instrument direct to the office, where another operator would dash it off on a typewriter and send it to an editor to pass upon. Describing his system, Mr. Tesla says:

"The results attained by me have made my scheme of intelligence transmission, for which the name of 'world telegraphy' has been suggested, easily realizable. It constitutes, I believe, in its principle of operation, means employed and capacities of application, a radical and fruitful departure from what has been done heretofore. I have no doubt that it will prove very efficient in enlightening the masses, particularly in still uncivilized countries and less accessible regions, and that it will add materially to general safety, comfort and convenience, and maintenance of peaceful relations.

"It involves the employment of a number of plants, all of which are capable of transmitting individualized signals to the uttermost confines of the earth. Each of them will be preferably located near some important center of civilization, and the news it receives through any channel will be flashed to all points of the globe. A cheap and simple device, which might be carried in one's pocket, may then be set up somewhere on sea or land, and it will record the world's news or such special messages as may be intended for it. Thus the entire earth will be converted into a huge brain, as it were, capable of response in every one of its parts. Since a single plant of 100-horsepower can operate hundreds of millions of instruments, the system will have a virtually infinite working capacity, and it must needs immensely facilitate and cheapen the transmission of intelligence."—Woodworker.

Gives Up the Fight.

The Terre Haute Gazette, a vindictive Parry sheet that has made war on the Typographical Union for the greater part of its twenty-five years of existence, has gone out of existence, being merged with the Tribune, a strictly union paper. The owners, in throwing up the sponge, state frankly that they lost a great deal of money in fighting organized labor and that their attempts to conduct a co-operative enterprise to get the best of the unions has been a failure. "The entire territory in which a Terre Haute paper must circulate," they say, "has become essentially a manufacturing and mining one, and it is so largely unionized as to make effective the boycott waged against the Gazette because it resolutely refuses to close its shop to all but union men."—Cleveland Citizen.

The Dog Whipper.

An old church official in England was the dog whipper, who was employed in driving or removing dogs from the various churches and who is often alluded to in vestry accounts, as, for example, "paid the dog whipper 10 shillings;" "to Widdow Sandys the year's sallery for (dog) whipping 5 shillings." Implements known as dog tongs were also used by these dog whippers, many of them being spiked at the end and capable of giving a cruel grip. They are still preserved in some of the old churches.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

The letter of William E. Shields, an ex-president of this union, in last week's issue of this paper, furnishes sufficient information regarding the situation in the Cripple Creek district of Colorado to convince anyone of the crimes that have been committed there against law and human rights by the military despotism in the interest of the Mine Owners' Association. The newspapers of the country have been teeming with stories of the wrongs against the miners, notwithstanding an outrageous censorship of Associated Press dispatches. Two newspapers of Denver have had a boycott placed on them by the Citizens' Alliance for merely telling the truth and printing the news, these being the Rocky Mountain News and the Times, though the boycott has been bitterly denounced as un-American when practiced by workingmen. From the fact of the publication of the following by the Denver Post, I judge that that paper is in training to receive the same delicate attentions:

No miner can secure employment in the Cripple Creek district until he has secured a card of recommendation from the Mine Owners' Association. This card is issued only after the applicant has renounced all allegiance to and sympathy for the Western Federation of Miners, American Labor Union, and Cripple Creek District Trades and Labor Assembly. The card is taken up by the superintendent of the property in which the miner secures employment and returned to the Mine Owners' Association.

Along with this is printed a facsimile of one of these cards, reading as follows:

No. 2603. Application No. 124.

EMPLOYMENT CARD.

CRIPPLE CREEK, COLO., June 10, 1904.

John Bradford is hereby recommended for employment on the properties of the Cripple Creek District Mine Owners' and Operators' Association as miner.

C. C. HAMLIN, Secretary.

Signature of applicant:

JOHN BRADFORD.

What further light can we want than what the newspapers not in sympathy with organized labor have furnished, in corroboration of that given by the friends of the workingman, before responding to the appeal of Mr. Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, for relief for the victims of the fiendish crimes of the military anarchists of Colorado? The condition of affairs there has been patent to any one who has had any desire to know the truth at any time during the past six months. There has been sufficient published in the Post, of this city, as news matter and editorially, at this long range from the scenes of the horrors, to show on whom the burden of crime rests. The Chicago Tribune and Inter Ocean have editorially denounced the outrages against the miners and their sympathizers, including women and children, as have other papers throughout the country.

Messrs. Bynum, Joe Johnson, Kidd, Ennis, and Lawson, the committee appointed at the special meeting of the union last Thursday to investigate the merits of the case, have an easy task and can make but one finding, which, coming from such representative and able men, must have a weight that will convince even the least informed; for to arrive at a verdict it is only necessary to understand the matter, and the information has been within reach of all during all the horrid period.

Harry Watson, formerly employed in the G. P. O., but for some years past on the Atlanta Constitution, has been in the city on a visit for a week or so. He is a brother of Will Watson, who is perhaps better known here, but who has also been away for a couple of years. Eugene George, who was here as compositor and proofreader for several years, is and has been reading proof on the Constitution for six or seven years. I worked on that paper myself for a brief period about thirty years ago, at the time when D. S. Walton, of the Fourth Division, was president of Atlanta Union, but probably the only one left of the then force is Walter Henderson, who has become an old man, while Walton and I are yet young. It is indeed strange what changes a few years make!

W. I. Reed, the clever cartoonist of the Record room, discovered last Friday that an addition of a boy had been made to his family, his progeny theretofore consisting of only one girl. So it is not in pen-and-ink sketches alone that Mr. Reed shows his talent. He has my best wishes that the good work may go on until he has the number that Mr. Roosevelt considers it a patriot's duty to furnish.

It is hard to satisfy some men. According to the daily press, the Department clerks are kicking harder over having to work through the lunch half hour on Saturday, then getting three hours' holiday, than they did when they had no Saturday hot-weather consideration at all. The Department clerk is a delicately nurtured bird. I wish I were one!

* * * *

The cartoon accompanying Adam Bugg's ebullitions last week was very cleverly executed by Cartoonist Reed, but I started to read proof on his spelling of "doggeral" until I reflected that Chaucer, Spenser, Shakespeare, and other poets spelled differently from what I do, and I charged it up to poetic license. But I suspect that my good friend Belcher will have a duck fit, as he, too, was interested in it, and I had hoped that an entente cordiale had been established between Belcher and Bugg.

There is music in the atmosphere of the Maccabee world. It is proposed by the Supreme Muck-a-Mucks of that order to arbitrarily raise the monthly assessments of members to $5 per $1,000 of insurance on arriving at the age of 60 years. Of course the only object is to entirely "freeze out" all who have committed the offense of living that long, in order to have an organization composed of young men. There is at present a feature additional to what fraternal associations usually have, namely, a "total disability" payment of one-tenth of the face of the policy annually for ten years. The 60-year-old scoundrel can continue that by paying $4 a month for it, thus paying $9 in all for what under the terms of his joining he should pay what he originally paid—in the case of a man who joined at the age of, say, 46 years, $1.20 per month. This is expected to be brought about by the legislation of a Supreme Tent, a majority of the members of which are practically the appointees of D. P. Markey, the Supreme Commander, by whose action his annual salary was increased to $7,500 a year or two ago and by which it is said to be proposed to raise it to $10,000 during the approaching session. According to Associated Press dispatches, the Canadian members, numbering some 18,000, propose to secede in a body, and similar action will probably be taken by many others of the 300,000 members in the United States. The proposed action is so repugnant to a sense of honesty as to give rise to a suspicion of an intention to destroy the order for the purpose of looting the $3 500,000 in the reserve fund, for one capable of suggesting such an act of bad faith would seem capable of any other dishonesty. I would not thus freely discuss the contemplated action of a secret society were it not that the official paper publishes the plot to the world.

DEAR DAVE ECCLES: What J. Woozy Bel (lya) cher will do to your poem will be all-sufficient, unless he has exhausted himself on Adam Bugg and me. He has used up "dreadful stuff" and "infernally rotten," but he probably has a few other Pastoral Symphonies about his person. But it might be worse. What if we were compelled to hear him sing?

The navy-yard employees have the best of us in the matter of Saturday half-holidays, they having been granted the full time after 12 o'clock last Saturday. They too frequently get the worst of it for us to be jealous of this favor, however, and I hope they will continue to get it. But I believe the same advantage should be given to those Department clerks whose health is jeopardized by waiting until 1 o'clock for lunch.

The presence of Ham Platt in the city seems to furnish an excuse for publishing an incident that occurred when he was here twenty-odd years ago. A party of young fellows had gone down to Norfolk on an excursion, Ham among them, and on the return trip, it being a hot night, they took their mattresses and laid down on the deck to sleep. A sociably inclined chap had bunked in among them, and as the boat plowed up the river he asked, "What light-house is that off there?" to which Ham, who was looking in the opposite direction, replied, "That's not a light-house, you gosh-danged fool; that's the moon," whereupon the stranger picked up his mattress and walked off to another part of the boat.

"The Common Man's Guerdon," by David Eccles, in last week's TRADES UNIONIST, is excellent in conception and substance. It has that ring of sincerity which all true poetry possesses. As an illustration of the common man's agnostic treatment of poetical themes it is especially interesting. Let us hope that we may hear from Mr. Eccles again in the same vein.

THE REFORMED KNOCKER.

When he would lift his think-tank's lid
It caused a beastly stew;
His self-conceit too often hid
His better self from view.

For big, fat words he had a nose
And tracked them to their lair,
And then he'd fling them at his foes
In manner rich and rare.

He'd twist them up and bang them round
Like chunks of dynamite,
Till his opponents often found
Them bad for appetite.

Sarcasm was his daily food,
The wine of wit his drink,
You bet there was no brotherhood
Where he turned on his think.

But now, thank Heaven, he hands out praise,
Eschewing bilious knocks
Which filled with gloom his fleeting days
And gave him nervous shocks.

No more he snarls, no more he slugs
His foe with might and main;
For, lo, foul envy's restless bugs
Have ceased to vex his brain.

SOMETHING DOING IN SWAMPOODLE IN THE EDITORIAL LINE.

"One of our modest young writers," Mr. Bloomer, said last week, "I hope the absorbing Pull-the-Plug question is now settled and that Belcher, Bugg, and all other parties to the controversy will let us have peace." While we recognize Mr. Bloomer as the dean of that embattled school of literature to which we are proud to belong, and while we generally yield to his dictum with considerable gladsomeness, in the present instance we will have to say him nay. For, lo, these many years we have flung bouquets to the deserving, with nary a knock at those unfortunate individuals who didn't seem built according to our plans and specifications. White-winged peace hovered over our honkatonk, and we were painfully ignorant of the delightful sensation incident to being struck "under the fifth rib" by a cold and clammy wad of journalistic muck. It took our breath away at first, but, having got our second wind, we waded in, and we flatter ourself that we have done pretty well for a life-long noncombatant, if we may judge from the ungodly yelps which have gone up, belched forth, and otherwise emanated from our miserable contemporary. And now our case is somewhat similar to that of the man who takes to strong drink late in life. Having smelt blood, we rather like the sensation, and while we shall pray for a return of the restful calm of a day that is dead, we fear it will be a long time before it will be judicious to remove the danger sign from our cage. Our aforesaid miserable and disheartened contemporary seems to think that we have laid in ambush for him. But that is as it may be. We are on the war path at the present time, and getting more ugly injun with every jump. To the dapper Jap and the whiskered Russ the magazine rifle and the lyddite shell. We are a leetle bit old-fashioned ourself, and still cling to the tomahawk and scalping-knife. Furthermore we are all het up and don't give a darn what happens, and hereafter the fighting buck who is out after an easy thing and mistakes our wigwam for a bower of peace is likely to be skinned alive and have his dirty hide nailed to the front door of public scorn. As for those who love the ways of peace, from which unfortunately we have been forced to depart, they will still find a fine line of fraternal bouquets at the same old stand.

The International Bookbinder.

The special organization number of the International Bookbinder, being the June number, comes to hand with an illuminated cover and a general typographical arrangement that reflects great credit on the printer and publisher. Editor Feeney has eclipsed all former efforts in his admirable conduct of the Bookbinder in covering the complete report of the St. Paul convention, which closed on June 19, giving in detail every act of the convention. Taken as an entirety the Bookbinder can hardly be improved upon in its present form.

I. T. U. Law Committee.

Columbia Typographical Union has been honored in the selection of T. C. Parsons as a member of the Laws Committee at the St. Louis convention. Mr. Parsons is well informed on all I. T. U. laws and will make a capable and efficient worker on the committee. President Lynch has made no mistake in the selection of Mr. Parsons. Mr. Parsons' colleagues on the committee are Anderson (Macon, Ga.), Smullen (Newark, N. J.), Mesick (Chicago), and Fortson (San Francisco).

The average daily wages of 2,527 unskilled workmen employed on time wages by the Dresden, Germany, municipality on February 1, 1903, was 72 cents, while 33 skilled work people employed on time wages were paid on an average of 94 cents per day.

LET PEACE REIGN.

[Homely verses upon the Battle of the Poets.]

Please quiet the strife down in classic Swampoodle—
Trouble caused by a rasping critic and noodle—
Who surely made a worse than literary foodle
When he atta cked the genius who writes for boodle.

The bluestockings, like sparrows, fight, chirp, and chatter
All day long about the merits of the blatter;
Discussion runs high in the store of the winks,
And opinions differ about the battle of the thinks.

At the inns where meet the friends of the literati
The words used are somewhat fierce—just look at his eye.
Even at the palace of learning on Capitol Hill
The brainy men upon the walls have had a Mill.

The man from Dante land neglects his business
To engage in the infernal wordy dizziness;
While the foreign count forgets to take the cash
So upset is he by this mysterious paper hash.

The washee man from the land of mystic signs looks wise
And wants to know why the "plinter man no dies."
His clothes and lingerie do not dry with darkened skies;
The rain is caused by the poetic din and noise.

Now, this broncho buster among the muses
May lariat a poet whenever he chooses;
But let the man of peace cool the literary teapot
Lashed to tempestuous fury by air so hot.

Let him call the wagon by pressing the button,
And load them all in, not forgetting Sutton.
Swampoodle will then cease its turmoil and fret
When they are safely landed at St. Elizabeth.

AN EXILED PRINTER.

P. S.—DEAR MISTER EDITOR OF THE T. U.: Do not serve any more poetic stew.

Painters' Union, No. 368.

At the last regular meeting of Painters' Union, No. 368, the following officers were elected: President, J. T. Scott; vice-president, C. M. Gates; recording secretary, G. Jule Murray; financial secretary, G. W. Sieben; treasurer, W. F. Macnichol; conductor, Edward Dement; warden, W. L. Hawkins; trustees, George Warwick, H. Botler, and Charles Conley; business agent, William M. Lewis.

Trouble at Cumberland.

Cumberland Typographical Union, No. 244, are endeavoring to enforce a scale that calls for a minimum of $12 per week. It is possible that an endeavor will be made to secure linotype operators in this city, and No. 244 desires to let the public know that conditions are not right for operators at present at Cumberland.

Causes of Higher Wages.

A German professor named Schmoller has been studying the question of wages for thirty years and has lately published the results of his researches in a French magazine. He says that the four principles causes of high wages in modern times are as follows: First, trade unions; second, popular education; third, better social institutions, and, fourth, more humanity among the wealthier classes.—New York Journal.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

First Division.

E. R. Gaither, of the labor force, is taking fifteen days' leave.

Edward Jackson, helper, is working at the Spess on detail.

John W. Clark (Slug 27), was transferred last week to the Library Branch.

Frank A. Everetts, an ex-proof reader, has been assigned to Slug 31, this division.

A. N. Goebel couldn't wait until Tuesday. He started for a fifteen-days vacation last Friday.

Perhaps, after all, the waterman man was following out Health Board instructions to boil the water before using.

Imposer Chas. Garrette is minus his mustache. The fall he received several days ago loosened the roots and it fell out.

James Small (Slug 18), having completed his term of temporary employment, left on Saturday for his home in Pennsylvania.

Jake Covert (Slug 123), is reported to be quite ill at his home, 212 C street northwest. It is said he is threatened with typhoid fever.

Imposer Wm. McFarland believes in getting all that's coming to him. He is marked up for the 30 days' leave beginning last Tuesday.

Chas. A. Durno, G. G. Wilson, and W. R. Abbott have joined the other members of this division temporarily sojourning at the Spess.

The following compositors began a fifteen days' leave of absence on Tuesday: Frank M. Lloyd, Samuel Ferrier, and George H. Sehorn.

W. F. Crump, C. C. Auracher, John T. Haskins, Jack S. Robinson and E. M. Root complete the list of compositors that started on their regulation leave Wednesday morning.

W. D. Skeen, G. G. Wilson, and R. C. Starr, jr., acted as tellers at the chairmanship election. And, by the way, the count was made in less time than at any previous election I know of.

The special union meeting held last Thursday evening was not a very long session. But while it lasted President Berg found himself a pretty busy man, as resolutions and motions came thick and fast.

The regular quarterly chairmanship election took place last Thursday. It was, indeed, a very tame affair, neither side so far as I could see making any effort. The result was the re-election of Chairman Nachman, the vote being 86 to 66.

While this may not be strictly a First Division item, I believe I am justified in mentioning the fact that F. N. Whitehead, of the Job Room, was promoted to the Proof Room for one day last week. During that brief stay he was taught how to wear the regulation coat in a manner becoming a full-fledged p.r.

There is a rumor going the rounds to the effect that a gentleman employed in one of the other divisions who had one day's leave at $4.80 due him refused to take it because his division would probably work until 9 o'clock on June 30, the last day. If this is a fact he should certainly be sent out of town with the first shipment of hogs.

Many are the expressions of regret heard over the sudden death of Fred Grose, of the Job Room, who died Fourth of July morning at Sibley Hospital. On different occasions he had been connected with the First Division chapel. He was a quiet, gentlemanly young man, pleasant and courteous on all occasions. His sudden death serves but another reminder that "in the midst of life we are in death."

Speaking about the importance of having the label on printed matter, tickets, etc., reminds me that last week a prominent society of the District had a large number of tickets returned to it because they bore not the union label. I am informed over a dozen ladies, members of the Women's Auxiliary, were among those who returned the tickets. Good for the women! When it comes to unionism they can give the average man cards and spades and then beat him out.

I do not believe the average member of this chapel appreciates the elegance of his surroundings. All things considered, our quarters are the finest in the world. It's true we would like a little better elevator service, and the drinking water has been pretty hot the past week. I have been asked a number of times to knock on the man who supplies it. Positively I refuse to be a knocker. Nay, nay! Chances are the water will be all right again in a few days. In fact—

How dear to my heart are the scenes of my labors
These hot summer days and sultry nights, too;
There's the press room, the bindery, the room for the printers,
And the front elevators, for the use of a few.
There's a niche in the wall that would make a man thirsty
From which ice-cold water was intended to ooze,
But after a taste would make a man hasty
To get out of the building and go for the booze.
There's old Simon Pocher and the sawdust can by him,
And mops and brooms with a pretty strong odor;
There's my Irish friend Waller, the bravest man ever
That tied up a string or fought a reb. "sojer;"
And the little tin cup that hangs by the spicket,
Rusty and besmirched with printers' black ink,
Would tempt a man greatly, but, oh, Lord, have pity
On the poor soul who has nothing but hot water to drink.

Second Division.

Assistant Foreman Heslet returned to work Tuesday after a long visit in Kansas.

The members of this force deeply sympathize with Mr. Harry Faust and his family in their great affliction.

Morci M. Mitchell has been absent about ten days, presumably suffering from an attack of his old enemy, rheumatism.

Wednesday W. H. Cornish and J. H. Swerdfiger were unanimously selected to succeed themselves as chairman and secretary, respectively, of this division.

Titus Ellis is now one of the boys again after subbing for the assistant foreman several weeks. However, "Tite" is the same wherever you find him.

Dave Pollock, Thomas E. Doty, Tommy Dougherty, Charles Fuhrman, and Pat Gallagher were detailed to the Spess Tuesday. Sympathy was extended.

Joe Silverberg, who is sojourning in the Fatherland, sent a souvenir postal to Chairman Cornish this week saying he is enjoying himself in his native town of Froudenberg, a portion of which is pictured on the card. He sent good wishes to his friends of the Second.

In his loyalty to the Government a member of this force had the misfortnne to lose a day's leave at night pay. On Thursday, thinking we would work that night as usual, he refused to take his leave. As we did not work extra he practically lost 80 cents for the privilege of working for nothing.

At the chapel meeting Wednesday a most commendable motion was made by Nat. G. Watts to the effect that a committee of three be appointed to investigate subscription papers before they were passed around. As the whistle blew action was deferred until to-day. Such action would prevent the good nature of many from being imposed upon as has been the case many times in the past. Worthy cases would thus be benefited.

Several members of the Gazette force, who have visited L. O. Knowles, report him as confined to his bed.

Subscribe to THE TRADES UNIONIST. I intend to write a funny story, and if they will publish it you will get more than your money's worth.

Mr. Edmonston, of the Spess chapel, is now ready to furnish his copy-holder to anyone who desires one of them. There has been some delay in getting his castings made.

The changes in the personnel of this division during the last month have been so rapid that we lost track of the new arrivals and departures. This condition was due to the taking of leave which would expire with the 1st of July.

R. H. Harstin was unanimously elected chairman of this chapel on Tuesday, July 5. Mr. Harstin is no novice in the chairmanship business, having served an apprenticeship in the Specification chapel. E. G. Myers, whom Mr. Harstin succeeds in office, was not a candidate for re-election.

Poetry, in its acute stages, is not necessarily a symptom of disordered liver or some other organic trouble, although there are a number of good, sensible people who hold the belief that when a full-grown man goes off to a high hill, away from the madding crowd, and, staring into space, marvels and speculates as to the whichness of the whence or the whatness of the why that man needs treatment. Likewise the supersensitive being will claim that an unappreciative reader of "poetry" is lacking in intelligence and feeling. It seems to me that a musician or poet may develop an hysterical condition which unfits him to judge impartially. A "swift" is not a good one to estimate an average day's work for a human being. A friend of mine who could make any kind of noise or combination of noises with the pipe organ—using both hands and feet—was in that state of musical superiority that he would refer to any composition with tune or melody which struck the public's fancy as "one-two-three stuff." After all one's physical condition or surroundings may influence choice. Just now, with the uncertainty of the outcome of the introduction of machines in the office, one is apt to prefer "Evangeline," "Enoch Arden," or some other hard-luck poem with "heart interest" in it rather than rhapsodies on the Sun, Moon, and Stars, elements which the "average" man is inclined to accept as a matter of course. Coming up the river from Colonial Beach Monday night the crowd on the upper deck sang a number of nice songs, mostly religious in character, while on the lower deck the gents threw considerable enthusiasm into a frequent rendition of the following:

There was a little man who had a little can,
And he tried to rush the growler.
He went too soon—'twas Sunday afternoon,
And you should have heard him holler:
No booze to-day! No booze to-day!
No booze to-day! 'Tis Sunday.
No booze to-day! No booze to-day!
I'll have my booze on Monday.

Both crowds seemed to get about an equal amount of satisfaction out of entirely different styles of music. May be the way you have been "brought up" has something to do with your taste in poetry and music.

Personal Mention.

E. E. Gessler, of the Bureau of Printing, Manila, P. I., and wife, are in the city on an extended vacation. Mr. Gessler will represent Manila Lodge of Elks at the convention of the B. P. O. E. at Cincinnati next week, and is also a delegate to the I. T. U. convention from Manila Union, No. 626.

The family of Theodore Gerber, of the Government Printing Office, are on a visit to St. Louis, their home, and will do the World's Fair while in the Mound City.

JIM BLUDSO, OF THE PRAIRIE BELLE.

By JOHN HAY.

Wall, no! I can't tell wha' he lives,
Because he don't live, you see;
Leastways he's got out of the habit
Of livin' like you and me,
Whar' have you been for the last three year
That you haven't heard folks tell
How Jimmy Bludso passed in his checks
The night of the Prairie Belle?

He weren't no saint—them engineers
Is all pretty much alike—
One wife in Natchez-under-the-Hill,
Another one here in Pike.
A keerless man in his talk was Jim,
And an awkward hand in a row,
But he never funked, and he never lied—
I reckon he never knowed how.

And this was all the religion he had,
To treat his engine well,
Never be passed on the river,
To mind the pilot's bell;
And if ever the Prairie Bell took fire—
A thousand times he swore
He'd hold her nozzle agin the bank
Till the last soul got ashore.

All boats has their day on the Mississip,
And her day come at last;
The Movastar was a better boat,
But the Belle, she wouldn't be passed;
And so she come tarin' along that night—
The oldest craft on the line—
With a nigger squat on her safety valve,
And her furnace crammed, rosin and pine.

The fire bust out as she cleared the bar,
And burnt a hole in the night;
And, quick as a flash, she turned and made
For that willer bank on the right.
There was runnin' and cursin', but Jim yelled out
Over all the infernal roar:
"I'll hold her nozzle agin the bank
Till the last galoot's ashore."

Through the hot, black breath of the burnin' boat
Jim Bludso's voice was heard,
And they all had trust in his cussedness,
And knowed he would keep his word;
And, sure's you're born, they all got off
Afore the smokestacks fell—
And Bludso's ghost went up alone
In the smoke of the Prairie Belle.

He weren't no saint—but at judgment
I'd run my chance with Jim
'Longside of some pious gentlemen
That wouldn't shook hands with him.
He seen his duty, a dead sure thing—
And went for it thar and then;
And Christ ain't a-going to be too hard
On a man that died for men.

Machines.

Public Printer Palmer has signed a contract with the linotype company for 46 machines to be delivered in 90 days. It is said the bunch of machines will cost your Uncle Sammy about $180,000. John L. Kennedy, the well known Washington printer, handled the arrangements for the linotype company. This is quite a big contract and John L. no doubt feels all puffed up over it.—Western Laborer.

In Memoriam.

F. C. Grose, for some time an employee of the Government Printing Office, being a member of the Job Room chapel, died on July 4 of bowel trouble. The remains were taken to Findlay, Ohio, for interment.

H. M. Armistead, also a member of the Job Room chapel, G. P. O., died last week. Mr. Armistead was well known in colored circles, his funeral being largely attended from Israel M. E. Church.

Death of Mrs. William McCabe.

The many friends of William McCabe, well and favorably known among employees of the G. P. O., will learn with regret of the death of his estimable wife, which occurred on June 23 last. Mr. McCabe had established himself in a country home at Flushing, Long Island, and was unprepared for the shock which came with suddenness upon him.

For some years past, since leaving for New York, Mr. McCabe has held a responsible position on the New York Herald, and is always pleased to see or hear from his many friends in this city.

W. H. Phillips Dead.

The following item, taken from The Journal of Labor (Atlanta, Ga.), may refer to W. H. Phillips ("Slick"), formerly of this office:

Brother W. H. Phillips, a member of the Typographical Union, who has been sick for several weeks in the Grady Hospital, died with poverty of the blood Monday night.

With the honors of a union printer he was laid to rest in the printers' lot at Oakland Wednesday afternoon.

The funeral was conducted from the Patterson undertaking parlors, Rev. Dr. Holderby officiating.

At this writing we have been unable to verify the above item, connecting it with "Slick" Phillips, and we will be pleased to learn to the contrary.

Treasury Branch.

All report a glorious time on the Fourth of July.

Edwin Collar and James Willis are each taking fifteen days' leave.

Miss Emily C. Shaw, temporary, was dropped from the rolls one day last week, her time having expired.

Albert K. Mundheim is absent this week on leave. H. J. Caylor is occupying his desk during his absence.

Miss Lucy Morrison, of the folding room, is quite sick and is said to be threatened with typhoid fever. All wish her a speedy recovery.

At the semi-annual chapel meeting held about a week ago W. Brice Coston was re-elected chairman and Benedict Kirsch was elected secretary.

Miss Mary B. O'Toole was transferred to our press room last week from the State Branch. Miss O'Toole was formerly employed here and her many friends were glad to welcome her back.

SUBSCRIBER.

The Philadelphia Inquirer.

The Trades Union News (Philadelphia), edited by Shelby Smith, is conducting a systematic fight on the Inquirer, of Philadelphia.

In the last issue the reading public were shown the business methods of that paper in accepting advertisements in its classified columns, showing a wide discrimination between legitimate and what may be termed as "vice" advertisements. The publicity given this feature alone would hardly warrant the Inquirer to pick a quarrel with organized labor in Philadelphia.

Has No Excuse.

There is no excuse in the world for a union man refusing to patronize union-made goods. If a demand is created for union-made articles the dealer will purchase a supply to sell to his customers. If there is no demand for an article of merchandise you cannot expect the retailer to purchase goods that will lie on his shelves a dead loss. The dealer is in business for the money that is in it, just the same as we are in the trades-union movement for the high wages and good conditions it brings forth.

Clams and Crabs at R. A. Driscoll's, N. Cap. and G. Overholt whisky, 10c.

Good times don't grow like weeds. They are created by the people who enjoy them and are the direct result of favorable conditions, made so by the efforts of sensible human intelligence. Where there is trades-unionism there is generally improved conditions and incidentally good times.

Reflections of a Bachelor.

From the New York Press.

There's a lot of money lost every day trying to find a little.

A girl can't help thinking what a nice shirt waist a tennis net would make run through with ribbons.

The first year a man is married he is looking for happiness; the second for content; the third he is satisfied to keep out of rows.

It's the girl who writes a graduating essay on the higher life who spends the rest of it trying to find a sure cure for colic in children.

A girl can always fill up a shirt waist in a way to fool everybody, but when she is in a bathing suit it has got to tell the truth about her if she goes in the water.

The Union Herald.

We have received Vol. I, No. 1, of the Union Herald, published in this city, and being recognized as the official organ of the Allied Label League and Miscellaneous Trades Section of the Central Labor Union. It is ably edited by John H. Brinkman and Milford Spohn, who need no introduction to Washington trades unionists, both being workers in the Central Labor Union from its inception. The paper starts out auspiciously, and there is no doubt that it will cover the field chosen for its field of labor. We wish it success.

Punctuation.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

Having escaped the bondage of Government routine and retired to the obscurity I am so admirably fitted to adorn, I find myself observing things typographic in the speculative lukewarm manner of a half-interested onlooker. Among other inquiries, I have been curious, in view of the prospective linotype at the big printery, as to what class of errors and blemishes, too unimportant to cause resetting of a line, would occur most frequently. Quite naturally this would be found in the use of the comma; and in reading book and magazine work I discover the same punctuative fault most common in hand work—the one comma between the subject and the verb where, if the word or clause be parenthetical, two should appear, and, if not, then none at all. We allow an orator a rhetorical pause before a verb if he feels that the length of the preceding clause, the need of unusual emphasis, or other cause demands it; and the operator seems to assume a similar license. Going through a magazine article by an ex-President, last week, I noticed some twenty examples of this trivial but avoidable fault. It goes without saying that, under the linotype regime, training and care on the part of the operator should be at a premium; and if it be true that, as some one has said, good punctuation constitutes the very morals of written language, how vexed at frequent infractions must be the righteous soul of the proofreader, who has for long years worn his spectacles thin and his pencils short in endeavoring to inculcate and enforce the correct use of the comma.

The Power of the Consumer.

The power of the consumer is great if the power is used in the right direction.

If the great army of consumers who swarm around the counters of the various stores throughout this country only knew the power they have, they could drive out for all times to come all sweat-shop, prison made, child labor and tenement house articles made in this country. The buyer with the dollar in his possession is the boss for the time being, but few buyers realize this when they purchase goods.

If a few consumers enter a certain store and demand union-made goods and are unable to procure same, and refuse to purchase the nonunion made goods, and leave to purchase elsewhere, it means a loss to the dealer. Then the dealer in nonunion made goods learns the power of the consumer and tries to retain said power by putting in a line of union-made goods. This is the proper way to get union-made goods on the shelves of the various dealers. If the great army of workingmen of this country would center their combined force in a demand for union-made goods, they would drive all unfair goods off the shelves in a short time, to be replaced by goods made by union labor. This would mean better conditions, more wages, shorter hours and improved sanitary conditions for the vast army of workingmen and women and would be the means of putting the children in the schools and out of the work-shop. It would benefit the merchant and manufacturer alike, in fact, all mankind. Fully 75 per cent of the goods sold is purchased by women. It is the duty of all trade unionists to instruct their wives, mothers and daughters to buy union-made goods and to shun the bargain counters. If this is done, the women will use their purchasing power in demanding and buying union-made goods.

The objects and benefits of the trades unions ought to be explained to our wives, mothers and daughters. Some trades unionists rarely mention the benefits they get through their union in their home circle. It is seldom that they subscribe for a labor paper which ought to be in the homes of all trades unionists, it being a great power and yielding a tremendous amount of good for the labor movement.

Every dollar earned by union labor ought to be spent for union labor. If we want to create a demand for our label we must create a demand for other labels; when we do this, we will learn the power of the consumer, and then success will crown the labor movement in all its undertakings.—George Bury, in Shoeworkers Journal.

A resolution being introduced calling for the suspension of the regular order of business and proceed to nomination and election of officers, was carried.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The Grievance Committee, having reported that all efforts to adjust the differences between Grocery Clerks Union, No. 533, and Bernard Walz, Eleventh and Massachusetts avenue northeast, on motion that store was placed on the unfair list.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

For President, Delegate McCarthy nominated J. H. Brinkman, of Carriage Workers' Union, No. 72.

M. Spohn seconded the nomination of Mr. Brinkman.

Delegate Dietrich nominated John B. Dickman, of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101.

E. J. Roche seconded the nomination of Mr. Dickman.

The vote on election of President being taken, resulted: Dickman, 64; Brinkman, 45.

For vice-president, Delegate Babcock nominated W. S. Crown, of Stationary Firemen, No, 63.

There being no further nominations, Delegate Crown was declared duly elected as vice-president.

For secretary, Delegate Nothnagel nominated Charles W. Winslow, the present incumbent.

No further nomination for secretary being made, Delegate Winslow was declared re-elected as secretary.

Nominations being made for financial secretary, the vote resulted as follows: John G. Schmidt, 69; R. G. M. Ross, 26; Louis S. Crown, 11.

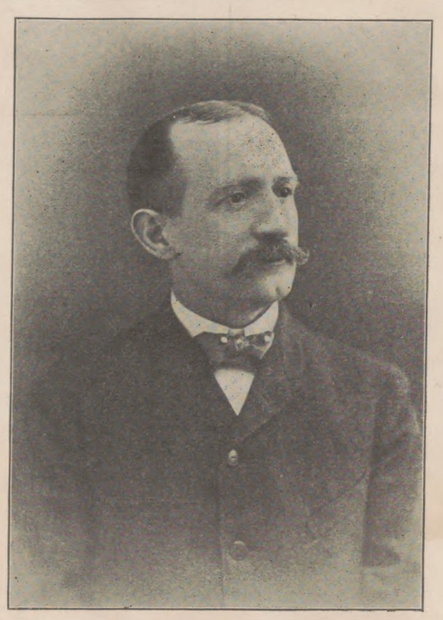
For the office of treasurer, Delegate Babcock nominated J. M. Heisley, the present incumbent.

Being no further nominations, Delegate Heisley was declared duly re-elected as treasurer.

For sergeant-at-arms, Delegate Ratigan nominated Samuel Beckett, the present incumbent.

No further nominations being made, Delegate Beckett was declared duly re-elected to the office of sergeant-at-arms.

For trustees, Delegate E. L. Adams nominated H. T. LaClair; Delegate Heisley nominated J. H. Babcock, and Delegate Roche nominated N. C. Sprague.



There being no further nominations, the three Delegates named were duly declared elected as trustees.

President Sherman at this point surrendered the gavel to the new president, John B. Dickman, and in a few well-chosen words wished him success in his new position.

President Dickman replied briefly, thanking the retiring president for his kind expression of sentiment, and also thanking the Council for the honor conferred upon him.

On motion of Secretary Winslow, a rising vote of thanks was extended to the retiring president, H. W. Sherman. The motion was seconded by Delegates Roche, Brinkman, and Sprague, who attested to the high regard felt by the membres to the retiring president. The motion was carried unanimously.

Delegate Brinkman moved a vote of thanks to R. G. M. Ross, the retiring financial secretary. Delegate Adams moved to amend by including the retiring vice-president, Mr. Brinkman. Motion carried.

JOHN B. DICKMAN, President of Central Labor Union.

John B. Dickman, the newly elected President of the Central Labor Union, is from Ohio, and has been a resident of Washington for nearly twenty years. He is a member of Columbia Typographical Union, and has been honored as one of its delegates to the I. T. U. at Pittsburg in 1886, and served one year (1888) as its President. He has been active in the Central Labor Union on various committees, and served as its representative to the A. F. of L. Convention in 1901. Mr. Dickman is an able parliamentarian, has a fund of conservatism, and will make an admirable presiding officer.

Bridgemen Elect Officers.

At a well-attended meeting of Local Union No. 5, Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, held July 1, the election of officers was held. For president, F. M. Biggs was chosen, defeating Charles Friedrich. George Price was elected vice-president. George Nyman was chosen recording secretary by a unanimous vote and Charles Lampkins was elected guide.

Considerable interest was manifested in the outcome of the contest for financial secretary. A count of the vote disclosed the fact that George Wells had defeated Charles W. Winslow by 6 votes. Charles W. Winslow was unanimously chosen to represent us at the coming convention. F. M. Biggs was unanimously chosen as business agent. This Union will meet every other Friday, during warm weather, until further notice.

MOYER LET OUT OF BULLPEN

Men Beaten and Driven From Cripple Creek—President Moyer Released After Nearly Four Months Imprisonment—Deportations From Many Points.

We quote liberally from the Denver Times, one of the papers owned by Senator Patterson, which has been placed under the ban of the Citizens' Alliance for telling the truth about the infamous methods pursued under the policy of the State administration and the military under Gen. Sherman Bell:

CRIPPLE CREEK, July 7.

Five union miners who had returned to this city, two with passes from General Bell, were taken from deputy sheriffs by a mob last night and mistreated.

The men are Dave O'Neill, James Frazier, Charles Tully, W. H. Haney and Fred Overton. All had been deported and had returned to the district, O'Neill and Frazier on passes issued by General Sherman Bell. Kid Waters, a deputy sheriff, last night heard that they were in town and placed them under arrest at the Baltimore hotel on North Third street. Harry Gordon, another deputy, helped him place the men in custody. According to one story the deputies decided to take the prisoners to the county jail, but another report is that they started with them for the Santa Rita station to place them aboard a Florence & Cripple Creek train and send them out of the district.

As the party passed the depot in Victor a dozen armed men appeared. Some of them had state guards' rifles with bayonets fixed. The deputies say that these men were joined by other armed men and the mob pursued them to the Santa Rita depot. There Waters says they were surrounded. He declares that he was struck over the head and in the stomach with a gun by a man who swore at him and said: "You always pretended to be with us; now go back to Victor."

He insists that he was forced to give up his prisoners to the mob and he and his companion deputy were driven away.

Waters gave the alarm at military headquarters, and Captain Moore, in command of the district, immediately called a squadron of ten cavalrymen and started to hunt down the mob and the prisoners.

Their efforts were fruitless, the mob had been there first. Not a man was to be seen in the vicinity of Santa Rita. Captain Moore, thinking that the five prisoners might be driven toward Canon City, turned his men in that direction. He searched the town of Florence, which is the first point on the road, and left word with the authorities of that place to immediately report the presence of any fugitives.

This precaution was rewarded at 6 o'clock, when a telephone message came from Florence, saying that four men had been seen fleeing toward Canon City at daylight. Ten mounted men were dispatched to that point, and began a search through the hills.

Kid Waters said this morning: "If I had the fellow who struck me over the head with the gun and the fellow who put a shotgun to my stomach, calling me names, I would kill them both. I was only using my best effort to keep five men from being hanged."

Captain Moore said: "I am not surprised. Considering the present state of feeling against the deportees, it is not surprising if an attempt is made to try to hang any who attempt to return. I know Dave O'Neill and J. Frazier. They were deported in the first bunch. Charles Tully is the man who posted the desecrated flag on the window of the First National bank. He was under investigation for several days and was before the commission yesterday. Haney is the bartender at Tim Drew's saloon. Overton is a man who was told quietly to leave on June 7. He left, but thought it was safe to come back, and returned with the other fellows last evening."

The trouble seems to have arisen from the fact that General Bell has been issuing passes to deportees to return to the district for a day at a time to visit sick relatives. This has caused a great deal of dissatisfaction among the radicals of the Citizens' Alliance, who have sworn that no deportee shall return, not even for a day. It is a great surprise, however, to all the authorities to find such a perfect organization of this class.

MOYER A FREE MAN ONCE MORE

After a confinement of 103 days, most of which time was spent in military bullpens, Charles H. Moyer, president of the Western Federation of Miners, was this afternoon released from custody and an hour later he was at his desk in the old headquarters of the Federation, which are shortly to be abandoned for new offices in the Pioneer building.

President Moyer's bond which was fixed at $10,000, was furnished by the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company, Robert S. Brannen, agent This company will probably furnish sureties for about forty other members of the Federation who are charged with murder and inciting to riot.

In the meantime while the arrangements with the surety company for the bonds are being prefected, bonds for Vice-President J. C. Williams and Assistant Secretary James Kirwan, signed by Attorneys H. N. Hawkins and John H. Murphy and Max Malich, were accepted by Sheriff Bell.

At an early hour this forenoon Sheriff Bell, with his prisoner, President Moyer, arrived at the office of Attorney Hawkins. Mr. Moyer shows the effects of his long imprisonment. His face is pale and wan and he has lost much flesh. Sheriff Bell never lost sight of his charge and accompanied him every time he left the attorney's office, if only to step outside the door for an instant.

Shortly after the arrival of Bell and Moyer, Deputy Sheriffs Droddy and Parsons, the latter secretary of the Citizens' Alliance of Cripple Creek, put in an appearance with Vice-President Williams and Assistant Secretary Kirwan. They are charged with inciting to riot in but one complaint and their bonds are fixed at $5,000 each.

Some difficulty was experienced in securing a surety company, but the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Co. was finally selected and the attorney for Moyer, with his client and Sheriff Bell, adjourned to R. S. Brannen's office where the bond was secured and approved by both the attorney for the surety company and E. C. Stimson, counsel for Sheriff Bell.

After these details the party again assembled in the office of Attorney Hawkins, where the formal delivery of the bond was made and Mr. Moyer stepped forth free of restraint.

"I am not in a position to give out any statement concering the situation just now," said Mr. Moyer. "I have been so long away from the conduct of the strike that it will take me some time to get in touch with affairs. I expect to be at my office this afternoon and will put in all the time studying conditions. I will have a statement prepared to give out tomorrow."

Mr. Moyer absolutely denied statements accredited to him in the Republican this morning, and called upon Sheriff Bell to substantiate his disavowal of the words.

Sheriff Bell was informed by Attorney Hawkins that Secretary Haywood and John O'Neill, editor of the Miners' Magazine, for whom capiases are also held, will be in the city in two days. Mr. Haywood is in Chicago and Mr. O'Neill is out of the city. They will also give bonds which will be accepted.

The attorneys for the Federation expect to have all the bonds, amounting to more than forty, furnished by the surety company. The company takes the business as a matter of course and, as one of the officers says, "so long as they secure us we will issue as many as they want."

So far as the bond question is concerned the attorneys for the federation will make no effort to question or resist the authority of Sheriff Bell and the other provisional officers of Teller County. They are recognized as the de facto officers of the county, and the contest over their right to hold office will be decided later.

In the office of the sheriff of the city and county of Denver the actions of Sheriff Bell of Teller County in taking bonds of men he arrests here on charges in the other county is regarded as ridiculous.

While Sheriff Armstrong regards it is the part of courtesy not to discuss the matter publicly he is understood to hold the opinion that Mr. Bell has no authority to make arrests and accept bonds.

The Denver Sheriff is understood to hold to the opinion that none of the so-called officers of Teller County, who were placed in their positions by the mine owners, can have any authority, and that all of the acts are illegal.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

Monday morning a batch of extras went to work in the Second Division of the G. P. O., and when Milo Shanks looked up from his desk he recognized in J. D. Newlon the gentleman who, seventeen years ago, lifted him up on a type box to learn "the boxes" in the old Richmond (Ky.) Climax office.

In my early 20's I trained with a girl who was a "thoroughbred" in every sense of the word. Among other accomplishments she could stand up in a side-bar piano box and lash a horse down the pike with an abandon which would teach the Roman charioteer his business, while all poor me had to do was to hang on. Sunday afternoon each lad and lassie would go for a brush on the pike, which contests of speed generally extended to the heart of the city, with the result of incidentally inviting arrest for fast driving. Parenthetically, the chief of police tells me, "I'll catch you some night with a petticoat tied to your coat tail." The boys about town had a habit of gathering on the sidewalk to witness the finish. After an interval of twenty years I was seated at a Merganthaler, when, looking past that metal hail that doth strike terror to the heart of the novice, in the machinist raking in the magazine I recognized in "Billy" Swazfaber, favorably known among the linotype machinists of the country, one of the gamins yelling from the curb.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

Few, I fear, of the members of Columbia Union, and of Eastern Unions in general, realize the peril of the Citizens' Alliances of the West to unionism unless the movement is met and neutralized. In some places the Alliance is disposed to deal with the trades unionists, being banded together, not for the annihilation of unionism, but to enable them to get what they regard as better terms, which is undoubtedly the right of the employers as the formation of unions is the right of the workmen. In others, as in Colorado, the determination is to destroy all unions, so that, by having only single individuals to deal with, they may pay each what they please and work him as long as they please. The "open shop" is the insistence of all of them, except the Cripple Creek anarchists, whose demand for the "closed shop" (closed against union men) seems to include forbidding unionists the right to live in the community. There is but one object in demanding the "open shop" and that is in order to always have a nucleus of non-union men upon which to build in case of disagreement with the union. Of course it is also intended to operate as an encouragement of workmen to refuse to join unions, and it has some effect in the way of enabling employers to pay different rates of wages in the same shop, a thing they have always insisted is their right and which unionists have always resisted except when the employer sees the advantage of paying some workmen more than "the scale."

It is discouraging to hear our own members, possibly only those who never received to exceed $10 a week before coming here and who could not command more than that now in the places from which they came, decrying the union, denouncing the acts of unionists elsewhere, and paying their dues under protest, when the only reason they receive $24 per week here as against the $10 whence they came is that the union procured it for them—not, it is true, by strikes, but by peaceful methods not less potent—and they would lose the advantages which the union gives them with toboggan-like rapidity in the absence of that institution. There are not many such, I am happy to say; but Lucifier and his followers were few as compared with the hosts of heaven, though their malevolence is still effective, according to orthodox beliefs.

It is alleged that the Citizens' Alliance had strong lobbies at Chicago and St. Louis to prevent the insertion in either platform of any plank favorable to organized labor, and they seem to have succeeded. It looks as though unionists have the battle of their lives in front of them now, and my only object in writing this is to try to bring the comparatively small number whom these lines will reach to a realization of the fact. We have to meet the unscrupulous use of money, producing adverse legislation and a corrupted judiciary to mullify favorable laws, and we have to face the bullets and bayonets of the military. With what weapons will we maintain the rights we have, which alone make our conditions better than were those of the African slave in autibellum days?.

Last week I had got E. E. Gessler no further than Puget Sound, on his return to the scenes of his former labors, and before the types were inked that made the statement he appeared "in our midst." He looks as well as when he left us, three years ago, verifying his claim that the climate of the Philippines agrees with him, and he says that Mrs. Gessler will not consent to live anywhere else. He will be with us about a week, after which he will begin the round of the conventions to which he is a delegate, among them being the Elks at Cincinnati and the I. T. U. at St. Louis. He was offered credentials to the Democratic national convention at St. Louis, but declined. Mr. Leech came with him as far as the Pacific coast and at last accounts was doing the Yellowstone National Park. He, too, is charmed with the conditions and climate of the Philippines and has no desire to leave there. Gessler says all the boys of the Philippines Printing Bureau are well and happy.

"Where's Johnny?"

"Somewhere around, I guess," said Frank. "I counted all five of them after we got off the car."

"All five? We have six children, Frank!" exclaimed Mrs. S.

"Six! Have we? Lets's see! There's Frankie, Johnny, Mamie, Willie, Edith, and the baby. That's six sure. I thought we had only five, I will go back and look for Johnny—he seems to be the one missing. I know they were all on the car when we started home."

He went back to where the H street cars cross North Capitol street, and in a moment Johnny hopped off of an approaching west-bound car. He had gone to sleep in the car in which his parents came and had been carried to the end of the line, and an accommodating conductor brought him back again.

J. H. Malees, lately of the Record Division, one of the "temporaries," was dropped one day last week, the period for which he had been appointed having expired, and prior to his departure for his home in Orange County, N. Y. (it's either Orange or Ulster), he left the following poetic farewell on his frame:

Adieu, dear pards of the G. P. O.!
My time is up and I must go.
This parting gives me little pain,
As I hope to meet you soon again—
When the leaves begin to fall.

Meanwhile I'll take my fishing pole
And go and hunt a sunfish hole;
I'll fish and con old Nature's page
And think of you and the "average,"
Awaiting the P. P.'s call.

In pursuit of my side-line profession of poetic chiropedy I have taken the liberty of trimming the corns on the feet of Brother (all us poets are brothers) Malees's poem.

The July number of the Inland Printer is an unusually fine one even of this most artistic publication, than which no further specimen of the typographic art is published anywhere. Besides the carefully selected special articles, the "Editorial Notes" (to which Arthur K. Taylor, F. W. Thomas, Edwin B. Dewey, I. T. U. ex-President William B. Prescott, and R. C. Mallette are contributors), and correspondence on subjects of live interest, there are the departments of the "Proof Room," conducted by that most thorough master of the art, F. Horace Teall; "Job Composition," by John M. Larking, with numerous illustrations of the lessons he gives: "Press Room," by William J. Kelly, replete with information; "Newspaper Work," by O. F. Byxbee, containing specimens of work in ad-setting contests, with valuable facts regarding newspaper conducting; "Machine Composition," by John S. Thompson, who attended the convention here last year, filled with invaluable instruction to linotypists; "Lithography," by E. F. Wagner; "Process Engraving," by S. H. Horgan; "Ascertaining Cost," by W. H. Roberts; "Typothetæ," by Daniel C. Shelley; "Specimens," and "Trade Notes." It also contains a beautiful portrait (none could be lifelike that is not beautiful) and biographical sketch of our delegate, Miss Anna Wilson. The Inland Printer is by far the most valuable publication extant for all engaged in printing, whether as workman or employer. Earl R. Baxter, of the Times composing room and 615 A street southeast, is the local agent, and he will be glad to take subscriptions.

* * * *

The Masonic Disciple, which has been published for the past eight months by Richard P. Evans, Esq., has gone into the hands of a stock company, known as the Masonic Disciple Company, composed of Franc. E. Sheiry, of the printing house of John F. Sheiry; Richard P. Evans, attorney at law; John L. Prosise, treasurer of the E. Morrison Paper Company; J. Frank Trazzare, of the furniture concern of W. H. Hoeke, and A. F. Bloomer. Mr. Sheiry will be the business manager, Mr. Evans the editor, and Mr. Bloomer the reporter (one of them). It is the intention of the new company to publish a Masonic paper that will be of interest to all members of the order. The craft is so well represented among employees of the G. P. O. that this announcement cannot fail to be of interest to many readers of this paper, and if members of the order will hand me items of news regarding Lodge matters I will see that they have a place in the Masonic Disciple.

William S. Waudby, special agent of the Bureau of Labor, has been engaged for the past few weeks in gathering the statistics of the industries of Pittsburg, in which he is most proficient. In his candidacy for the position of Commissioner of Labor, to succeed Col. Carroll D. Wright, though he has heretofore been indorsed by thousands of labor organizations, new indorsements are coming to him every day from national as well as local bodies. If the indorsements of the workers themselves are given the weight they deserve, the appointment of Mr. Waudby will certainly be made.

One would scarcely think there were mulligrubs small enough to protest against Foreman Hay's detailing Whitehead to the proof room for a couple of weeks, in the absence of one of the regular readers, on the score that Whitehead and Hay oppose each other in the late union election, while they, ascertaining Mr. Hay's preferences, quickly adopted them as their own in the hope of receiving such favors. I once wrote a paragraph for a daily newspaper to the effect that "nobody so thoroughly despised a scab as the man who employed him," which the editor recognizing it as too great a truth to be given to the world in one dose, carefully erased. The same thing is true of "quills." Nobody respects men unless they are men.

There is some "style" about Franks Buckland and Rhoderick. They let us know what they are doing and seeing when they go foreign touring.

The delegates from Columbia Union to the Central Labor Union are certainly cutting a wide swath. At the meeting last Monday John B. Dickman was elected president and Joe Babcock one of the trustees, while Charles E. Dietrich has been designated general organizer of the American Federation of Labor for the District by President Gompers. It is Mr. Dietrich's intention to try to organize the stenographers and typewriters, many of whom are getting the beggarly wage of $5 or $6 a week, and for that purpose a public meeting will be called in the near future. The bookkeepers will also receive his attention—an occupation that is probably more poorly remunerated than any other requiring the same amount of education and preparation. Mr. Dietrich can be addressed on the subject by those interested at 423 G street northwest—Typographical Temple.

Carlos B. Tomlin made a visit to the office last Saturday, the first time he had been able to leave his room for about five weeks. He is considerably emaciated from his recent illness, but is recovering slowly. He will start for the Printers' Home within a few days.

* * * *

William M. Garrett is rapidly recovering from his severe illness and is able to see friends at Providence Hospital, where he has been for two or three weeks. One day last week his illness took such a serious turn that his immediate relatives were sent for, but he soon rallied and his convalescence has been satisfactory ever since.

The July number of the Typographical Journal is one of the most delightful issues of that most capably edited magazine. It is now on a paying basis, having a balance to the good of nearly $3,000 last year. More members look forward to its monthly visits now than ever before.

Dr. Stephen D. Pool, who is touring the West, visited the Printers' Home at Colorado Springs one day last week. Dr. Pool is a "Spess" hand when he is at home.

A. F. BLOOMER.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST.

A Former Washington Printer Revisits San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 3, 1904.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

Coming from New York State to this city the writer stopped several hours in Denver, Colo., which he left eleven years ago for the East. The change that time had made in former associates was hardly perceptible. Of those recalled as meeting for a moment or more were John Collett, Will Shields, Bob Herrick, Will Cressingham, J. W. ("Tim") Foley, Frank Dolan, Will MacMillan, Jack Henderson, Johnny Lambert, Frank Ward, Jack Hurley, E L. (Jack) Howard, and Gene Jordan.

There was no fight for local officers in San Francisco save for International delegates, and of the field of ten Verg Fortson, Thomas D. McKenna, and George E. Mitchell came under the wire. Will J. French, in Washington last year as delegate, succeeds himself as president from an unexpired term of a few months. Harry White, as secretary-treasurer, is re-elected for the eighth or ninth consecutive time. Will White, who distanced the field in the race for trustee of the Union Printers' Home two years ago, holds for another two years.

The first to greet me in Frisco were Frank Wandress, Verg Fortson, Harry Maloney, Tom Watts, Jack Collner, Al Murschel, Andy Smith, John Neely, Forenoon (A. M.) Schilling, Tom Hartman, Bob Higgins, Charley Holden, Jack Bryant, Syl. Jenner, Colonel White, Jimmie Kelsey, Jim Olwell, Charley Ross, Val Hanlon, Joe Ryan, Harry Reid, and Bob Hale. While I have known most of those mentioned since the seventies, none are in the Pard Bloomer class. Wandress confesses to 32 years of age and Jack Collner to 36, but none others will admit the 30-year mark. In the glorious climate of California, by sticking to bourbon and eschewing steam beer and ceteras, they don't have to grow old, and they don't. Frank Wandress is a first-water sport, and put in a couple of nights introducing me to special features.

Haven't heard anything about condition of trade, more than that alluring ads. in Eastern magazines and daily papers have brought job men here beyond the demand.

Ex-President George A. Tracy, of Washington, came here several months ago from Manila, Philippine Islands. He is on the Call, and was made a member of the union executive committee at the recent election.

Ben Ferguson, here for several years, left last week for Portland and Seattle.

Ex-President Miles Farlane, in showing me around a big job office, introduced John D. Vaughan. He is not a known relative of the late John D. of Denver, but the resemblance is considerable.

Many years ago there wandered into a Nevada gold mining camp Hilary Herbert Watts and another printer long since famous as a writer and now in that capacity on one of the large Eastern dailies. They came afoot because that was the nearest way, and besides there were no railroads, anyway. The weather was warm, and with coats under arm they stopped for rest by a grocery at the edge of the camp, Watts sitting on one end, his companion the other of a box upon which was stamped in large letters "tomatoes." A light rainfall and succeeding sun had brought the ink to a half melting condition, and when the two sought the nearest resort for a drink of family trouble "Tom" was plainly visible on Watts's light-colored trousers. As one wag after another came in and slapped Watts on the shoulder with the familiarity of old friendship and said: "Hello, Tom, have something with me," it caused Arthur to wonder till the sequel was known. Hence the nickname Tom.

At the June meeting of San Francisco Union a resolution introduced by ex-Delegate Bob Higgins was passed instructing the delegates of No. 21 to work for the psssage of a law prohibiting the slandering of candidates for International officers and also the reverting of the election of International officers from the referendum to the delegates in International Convention.

The Pacific Printers' Benevolent Association is picnicking to-day at Schuetzen Park near San Jose, and it may be good for some that to-morrow is the Fourth of July, for the dreamy climate of Santa Clara Valley is deliriously intoxicating.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of July 12, 1904.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8.20 p. m. by the secretary.

In the absence of the chairman and vice chairman, Delegate Nothnagel, of the Electrical Workers, was chosen to preside.

The minutes of the meeting of July 5 were read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

From Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers Union, No. 102, certifying to Thos. F. Ryan, Jos. A. Daly, and D. M. Desmond.

From Electrical Workers, No. 26, certifying to E. Nothnagel, John Purcell, and Gus Wright.

From Washington Lodge of Machinists, certifying to L. A. Sheetz, J. V. Clark, and J. L. Newham.

The credentials were referred to committee consisting of Delegates Russell, Allison, and Lewis, who reported favorably on all credentials presented except the Machinists, which were sent back to have seal of union attached.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Robert A. McKee, general secretary-treasurer International Union Steam Engineers, acknowledging the receipt of letter of condolence from the Council on the death of their late president, Patrick McMahon. Filed.

From W. Tindall, secretary to the District Commissioners, stating that Commissioners would hear the committee at 11.45 a. m., July 8, in reference to wages paid to tinners employed in District repair shop. The secretary stated that the meeting had been held and the communication answered.

From Horton & Hemenway, stating that the cornice tinning, etc., on the Homeopathic Hospital, would not be done by the Joseph Mathy Co. Filed.

From Chas. A. Hutchins, secretary of Carpet Workers, No. 85, relative to attendance of their delegates at the meetings of the Council. Filed.

From Hod Carriers Union, No. 21, relative to reduction of initiation fee for wheelers who desire to become members of their union. Filed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Delegate Ratigan reported on election of officers of the Central Labor Union, and that the Carpenters were still seated in that body.

The trustees reported progress.

The By-Laws Committee reported progress.

ROLL CALL OF UNIONS.

Under roll call of unions to submit business, twenty-four delegates from fourteen unions were marked present.

Hoisting Engineers asked the assistance of the Business Agent with the Brennan Construction Co. The request was granted.

Hod Carriers made same request with respect to Geo. A. Fuller Co. The request was granted.

Painters reported that the Government officials at the United States Arsenal had agreed to pay the increased scale adopted by their union, but that no reply to their communication to the District Commissioners had been received, and asked that a committee of three be appointed to appear before the Commissioners in their behalf. The request was granted, and the chair appointed Delegates Ratigan, Lewis, and Russell.

Delegate Allison suggested that the committee present scale of wages in force with all affiliated unions to the Commissioners. It was so ordered.

The secretary was directed to notify the Central Labor Union that the Carpenters affiliated with that body were not carrying out the mandates of the special committee, and ask the Central Labor Union to see that the laws of that body were enforced so far as the report of the committee relates to the Council of Allied Building Trades and Carpenters unions.

Adjourned.

If you were to weigh your friends on the scale of adversity you would be surprised at the number of lightweights among them.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

First Division.

S. W. Langford (Slug 42) is confined to his home with a bone-felon.

C. P. Brown, of the supply division, is among the number on leave.

The addition of a large temporary force was the cause of the return of several members of this chapel doing duty at the Spess.

Imposer T. M. Donn will spend his vacation in Denver, and other Colorado places, his wife and family being at present in Denver.

L. P. Kenney is again on duty, although by no means in condition for footracing, his left propeller being still badly swollen from erysipelas.

It is a pleasure to note that the threatened illness of Jake Covert did not materialize, he having returned to his place on the correcting force.

George Ellis (Slug 22) joined the Shriners on their excursion to Atlantic City on Monday, and I suppose at the present time is doing fancy stunts on the beach.

Maker-up J. C. Lesher returned to work on Saturday. "Lesh" is all puffed up over the addition of a new G. Washington proof press to his department.

"Parson" Robinson and his paper cabinets have been removed from the rear end of the "Y" to the floor below, the cause being the necessity of more room for the "Y."

After six months faithful service John O'Brien turned over the key to his locker on Tuesday. I am pretty sure he has the best wishes of the entire division for his early return.

Quite a number of the old soldiers took advantage of the generosity of President Roosevelt, and quit work at 2 p. m. on Tuesday. There were also quite a number of "old soldiers" who remained.

Samuel T. Esmay, who worked on Slug 30 during the past winter, was among those recently appointed on the temporary force. Esmay had hard luck last winter in the way of sickness, and it is hoped he may get in full time on this appointment.

"Shorty" Nesbitt says there is a mighty cheap man up in alley 14, and he lives in Alexandria. After selling most of the chances for a diamond stud raffle, "Shorty" was put out of the game, the charge being that he was connected with the diamond ring that didn't raffle last winter.

The regular August meeting of the Union takes place next Sunday. Take a gentle tip from me that the prospects are for an interesting meeting. The chances are favorable for something doing in the oratorical line. And why not? We have the orators, and when the proper subject presents itself why not hang it up high and dry and let everybody take a throw at it?

The "agitatin'" question just now is not about the end seat hog, but the end elevator porker. Just why a man will break his neck to get into the elevator first, and then brace himself near the door to the disadvantage of others, is a question that will probably not be settled until the aforesaid porker has been placed on a little cot in Emergency Hospital, and a collection taken up for a floral tribute.

At a meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary last week $100 was voted to each of the lady delegates elect to defray expenses to St. Louis. For a new and struggling society with but a few over 150 members, it strikes one as being an exceedingly generous act on the part of the Auxiliary. And yet, I am informed, there is a murmur of discontent over the smallness of the appropriation. Stinginess is one thing, extravagance another, and the $100 given is a happy medium.

At the regular meeting of the Central Labor Union on Monday evening, John B. Dickman, of this division, was elected president of that body. In the selection of Mr. Dickman the central body has shown its good judgment, for a better man for the place could not be found in the District of Columbia. His elevation to the presidency is but the natural result of the wisdom and conservativeness that have so plainly marked his connection with the labor movement.

After the St. Louis convention had adjourned, the First Division statesman and philosopher, Simon Pocher, was called upon for an expression of opinion. "I don't know much about Parker," says Simon, "when I buys clothes I generally deals with Bridget, but that man Jeff Davis I knowed all my life. He always was stirrin up trouble but 'clare to goodness since the war he done slipped my recollection. 'Spose he's the best man old Virginia's got, but there's never goin' to be no reb in the White House no how."

Over in the old building there is said to be a piece of machinery that has caused no end of gossip, and made the life of our only Lanston operator, Charlie Etchberger, one of unhappiness. About one hundred times a day he is taken gently by the arm, led to some secluded spot, and asked if he knows there's a Lanston machine over in the Spess. Etchberger doesn't know whether he is expected to go after it and smash it, or bring it over here or in what way it could interest him anyway. But never mind old man such is fame.

Timekeeper Chas. Leeds is the possessor of an interesting little book full of statistics which would be profitable for prospective candidates to glance at. It was compiled during the years of 1890-91, and besides the actual expense of a candidate contains a complete list of the Union membership at that time. It is an encouraging little book for those who have met defeat in the past, for several defeated candidates of those years have since become prominent. Secretary Geo. Seibold went down with the bunch in 1890, but Phoenix-like, to-day is Secretary of the Union. The years of 1890 and '91 were stirring ones in union politics, and some of the old wheel horses of the present time were then in the infant class. John Kennedy was making the hardest fight ever fought for the presidency. Foreman Lawson was among the infants, and succeeded Chas. Leeds as reading clerk, the latter being elected delegate to Boston in '91. The list of members for those years make interesting reading. Many are scattered to the four quarters of the globe. Others have passed away and their names recall interesting reminiscences. But I must let dead ones alone. Its a sacred subject that belongs to my friend Bloomer.

The family of James L. Sauls is visiting in Florida.

Fletcher Bowden has been on the sick list for a week.

Emory B. Buzhardt is spending his leave in his home State, Florida.

George A. Seaman was transferred from the Job Room to this division last week.

Tommy McEneany enjoyed a strenuous period of three days at the Spess last week.

Henry Patterson is now taking two weeks' leave on account of sickness in his family.

Harrison Reed, our "silent candidate," began two weeks' leave on the 5th instant.

Charles O. Doten returned from the Spess last week after an absence of two months.

A little trip to my Rhode Island home interfered with my duties as correspondent last week.

George Sparks is gaining very slowly—so slowly, indeed, that there is still doubt of his recovery.

Robert P. Piehoff, secretary of this chapel, is enjoying 15 days leave at his home in North Carolina.

John A. Ray and Walter L. Brooks, temporaries, were assigned to this division last week. Mr. Brooks was with us during the winter.

It is reported that Joseph E. Goodkey is ruralizing between Swampoodle and Langdon Beaches, with an occasional visit to the Potomac Flats.

E. B. Meritt attended the National Democratic Convention at St. Louis last week. After seeing the World's Fair he will go to Fort Smith, Ark.

Cliff D. Scott and family are making a two-weeks' stay at Virginia Beach. Cliff will push the checkers across the board with more vim than ever when he returns.

Frank Warren came back from the Spess last week after an absence of four months. He tells me that during the past six months he has worked but six weeks at his frame in this division.

A CRY OF PROTEST.

It is not the screech of a goblin damned,
Or the wail of a Soul that is lost;
But the noise that is made by the sliding door
Of the Jackson Alley elevator
Is putting our nerves to great cost.

—J. S. G.

Louis C. Johnson, of this division, has invented a machine by which he demonstrates that perpetual motion is possible. At the proper time Mr. Johnson will take the world into his confidence, and then the Third Division will have additional cause for pride.

The following is from the Harrisonburg (Va.) Free Press:

D. A. Taylor, a post graduate of the "art preservative of arts," arrived in town yesterday afternoon [July 4] on his way to Dayton to spend his vacation. He was accompanied by his family. "Davie" has been holding down a Government Printing Office job for several years.

On Thursday, June 30, Wm. N. Goldstein was elected chairman of the Third Division without opposition. During the Spring of 1903 Mr. Goldstein was elected chairman for the first time to fill an unexpired term, since which time he has had little or no opposition. The present will be his fifth full term. Mr. Robert P. Piehoff was elected secretary.

HOW I'LL SPEND LEAVE.

I'll lie around beneath the trees
And rest, and smoke, and drink;
I'll sit upon the river bank
And fish, and dream, and think.

I'll see the ball games, one and all;
I'll take in all the beaches;
I'll hear the concerts on the Mall,
And mingle with the "peaches."

In fact, I'll have a merry time
At Uncle Sam's expense,
And then I'll buckle down again
And borrow fifteen cents.

—R. E. B.

Charles W. Pafflow, formerly of the Proof Room, later in the Fourth Division, who resigned some weeks since to go to St. Louis, has returned and resumed work in the G. P. O. Mr. Pafflow informed Mr. Saltzman, our bank man, from whom I obtained the above information, that Dale Sheriff, who was a temporary in this division until recently, is now working at Little & Becker's job office in St. Louis, also that work is plentiful in that city.

A peculiar interest will attach to the services to be held next Sunday morning at the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, on the corner of North Capitol and R streets, from the fact that Mr. Ogg, a printer, will preach the sermon, and Ben A. Lineback's male quartette, all employes of the G. P. O. Job Room, will furnish the music. The membership of this church is made up largely of printers. Sam Wise, formerly of this division, is president of the Christian Endeavor Society; Washington Topham, an old printer, and now a well-known leather merchant, is a member of the official board of the church, as is also W. D. Morgan, our slug 47. All printers and their families are welcome.

NONPAREIL SLUGS.

Not yet "off the reservation."

To be sure I promised not to tire the readers of THE TRADES UNIONIST by mentioning a certain subject again.

So, once and for all, I will put a period to the whole matter. "Let the galled jade wince; our withers are unwrung."

I am just a little in doubt what to say in acknowledgment of the amazing tribute paid me last week by several writers in this paper.

Or I might say that the brand of "fraternity" furnished by such a venomous person as this same Talbott is one that all having any regard for common decency should steer clear of. But here again I am held up by my promise.

If it were not for that promise, I might say that Arthur F [oolish] Bloomer and William T [ipsy] Talbott had outdone themselves. But somebody might accuse me of "twitting on facts," as we say in New England; so that such a statement is not to be thought of.

Since the Pastoral Symphony still worries Bloomer, I will say for his edification that all the statements made by me with reference to that Musical Composition and its author are susceptible of proof, and that he is only showing his own ignorance of the matter by constantly harping upon it.

No doubt there are many good things about Russian people, but their style of cutting children's hair is not one of them, to my way of thinking. I mean where the hair looks as if a bowl had been put over the head and used as a guide to cut the back hair. If the Russian soldiers were half so fierce as the Russian hair cuts, the Japs would long since have been demolished.

Or I might say that the attacks made upon me have been unmanly and frivolous; that they have been getting more brutal and vulgar at each succeeding spasm; and that they have been inspired principally by the inordinate and overweening conceit of a man who has been led to believe that his ability is equal to that of the greatest poets (see "The Poet's Guerdon," by William Tipton Talbott).

Or I might say, in answer to Talbott's statement that he is an "injun" on the warpath, that it was the opinion of a great general that "the only good injun is a dead injun," and that therefore the proper thing for him to do is to go down to the fish wharf and jump to the bottom of the river, shouting as he jumps, "Here goes Nothing!" And I might say that if he will guarantee to do as herein suggested, nobody will pull the plug. But as I promised not to mention the subject again, of course I won't say anything about it.

I am indebted to an unknown friend for a copy of The Plug Puller, which seems to be a fac-simile of THE TRADES UNIONIST in all respects except the change in the heading. Probably the sender intended it for a joke, but I do not so consider it. It is a serious duty we owe to ourselves and to each other to keep clean, not only physically, but in all other ways. To those who, by their repetition of the injunction to "Pull to plug," have added to the vogue of cleanliness among the readers of this paper, I extend my hearty thanks for their help. There seems to be some improvement lately. It is to be hoped that the improvement will continue.

Official Gazette.

Joseph W. Palmer is on leave.

E. L. Scott has started in on his annual leave.

E. E. Shott contemplates a trip to London about the latter part of August.

George Brandon and I are the only ones making application for leave this "turn-in." Suppose every one else is holding off to take in the St. Louis trip in August.

The current number of the Inland Printer contains a fine half-tone of Miss Anna Wilson and an article written by Charles H. Coe, of the Job Room. Mr. Coe is an author and writer of considerable ability and has furnished many articles of interest to leading publications.

Frank B. Cowden met with a serious mishap last week which kept him from work several days, and when he appeared at the office he was bandaged up all over. While running after his little daughter he was overcome with vertigo and fell heavily to the pavement. Fortunately no bones were broken.

The Woman's Auxiliary, at its last meeting, besides appropriating $100 to each of its two delegates, gave $50 to its president, Miss Laura B. Gordon, to defray her expenses to St. Louis. She is at present vice-president of the International Woman's Auxiliary and will no doubt be elected president at its coming convention.

There were about twenty of the "hands," including myself, "kept in" on Saturday afternoon, while the rest of the force enjoyed the half holiday; but we got the paper out on time. The index cards for the Official Gazette of July 12 were not received at the printing office until 9.30 a. m. Saturday, July 9, the customary time being the preceding Monday afternoon or Tuesday morning. Notwithstanding the delay in receiving the copy for the index, the same was put in type, read, corrected, ruled, and revised in forms by 8 p. m., the Patent Office receiving the advance sheets at the regular time, Monday noon. Owing to the transfer of the contract for photo-lithographic work to New York the copy for the index has been somewhat delayed, but prompt execution on the part of the Issue and Gazette Division of the Patent Office, and also the Gazette Division of the G. P. O., has enabled the city subscribers to receive their letter press and index copies of the Gazette at the usual hour.

Bindery Notes.

Miss A. Rodway greatly appreciates her promotion to the leather division.

The report that Robert Stack fell off the water wagon and hurt himself is untrue. Keep it up, Bob.

Captain White will spend his vacation in the Arsenal grounds this summer, and admire the boats as they sail up and down the Potomac.

It has been reported by people who have returned from St. Louis that Dreamland and Luna Park, Coney Island, has "The Pike" at the Fair beat to death.

Chauncey Depew Nelson greatly admired the group picture of delegates, and sympathizes with Willie Hyde. They were not in the bunch. Two in distress makes sorrow the less.

The dream prophet, Earl Count Courtney (Charles V. Barton) has again appeared in print. He is a wonder—a great dreamer. Two years ago he had a dream that W. R. Hearst would be nominated and elected President of the United States.

If a man is deaf and dumb he escapes the long-distance bore who makes his calls by telephone.

I wish to buy an established country newspaper and job office in a manufacturing and farming community of not less them 5,000; would consider a partnership with some capable and energetic young man in the G. P. O., or will purchase an interest in a good office, city or country. MERG, this office.

THE RIGHT TO MAKE AN ERROR.

A Well-Known Writer Defends the Proofreader's Liability to Err.

The linotype operator set it up "severe" and the proofreader passed it so. I caught it in the revise and marked it "serene," as it was in copy. In recasting the line the operator corrected the error as marked, but made another. He set "steering clear" "steering gear," and the reviser let it go. The sentence thus became nonsense—"maintaining a serene demeanor and steering gear!" etc. It couldn't be worse, of course.

What a good thing for the incensed writer it is if he has a den of his own to which he may retire when he is in a delirium of rage over a printing office blunder! If he stays in retirement a while he may cool off, and no one will ever know that he carries through life the torturing infliction of a horribly bad temper. If he remains long enough alone to pass to the stage of philosophic reflection he may let his grievance pass by in silence; or in writing about it he may treat it lightly.

But neither the busy editors of the great newspapers nor the business managers have time to go off somewhere quietly and hunt for their real inner Christian selves. So they explode like fireworks and successfully exhibit the unpolished surfaces of their character. And consequently the composing room speaking tube grows hot with the edict: "Discharge every man who had anything to do with that fool error!"

Once I said to my side partner on a morning newspaper proofroom desk: "It's a year since we were struck by a call-down. We'll be cautious and not claim it's a year since we made a bad error. But it's a full year since we've been told about any." My yokemate rejoiced, but feared for the morrow. Now it happened that on the shank of the same week the counting-room pipe belched forth fire and flame and sulphur. The withering blast, however, struck the desk next ours, whereat we two thanked Providence. During the ensuing inquest I stoutly took the advanced ground that the proofreader has a right to make an error. That is, an occasional error.

On hearing me propound this heterodox and disturbing conviction, our room overseer fixed on me an eye of mild reproach, and admonished me: "I should not like to be the one to say such a thing to the foreman to his face." But I thought that if I ever caught the foreman not overbusy I'd venture to broach my perilous opinion.

It happened that soon afterward I was engaged in an amicable interchange of views with, not the General Foreman, but His Ethereal Greatness a Managing Editor. This gentleman complained bitterly of the way he had been repeatedly undone by proofreaders' errors. He quoted some examples to prove his allegations. I gave him reasons for believing the matter in every case he cited had been railroaded. He ceded the point. But—other errors? I dwelt on lino corrections, which so often consist in clearing away little typographicals to perpetrate big ones. He gave way there, too. I had him on the run. Then I made my stored-up speech on the topic:

"Every one having a hand in the preparation of copy habitually makes errors, and so does every one connected with the typesetting. Reporters, correspondents, telegraph operators, typewriters, copy readers, head writers, make-ups, matter killers—these have a long list of errors, peculiar to their province and to the respective routine of such. They get names, dates, and facts wrong, and the proofreader catches such mistakes multitudinously. The rings on every galley proves it. Then in the composing room copy cutters, hand men, machine men, bank men, and make-ups turn out regularly their thousands of errors every night"——

"But," interrupted the editor, who had a large forehead, "the proofreader is paid to catch the errors the others make!" And wicked triumph flashed in his eye.

"No!"—the point was stale to me. "The proofreader's salary does not translate him over among the superhumans. He's an erring creature, like all his fellows. He's paid for fallibility, not infallibility. If there's justice on earth, he must be classed with the others in the printing tribe. He's entitled to his percentage of ignorance and carelessness and misconceptions. Every one else takes it for granted he'll not get things correct every time. The proofreader, too, has his right to make an error."

I regret to record that my plea failed to win over this particular Managing Editor. However, as a counterbalance, I'll write it down soberly that my ideas on the subject have seemed sane and convincing to every proofreader to whom they have ever been enunciated.

This little chat about a disturbing feature of our tedious business I have writ in a spirit of philosophical contemplation. Yet, candidly, I hope that the typographer who knocked my editorial of last issue endwise by his lapse from his customary accuracy, may "steer clear" of my way for yet another brief season.—*J. W. OFFICIAL ORGAN CENTRAL LABOR UNION, WASHINGTON BRANCH, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Vol. IX. No. 6. WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, JULY 21, 1904. Price, 3 Cents.

COLUMBIA UNION MEETING

Stirring Resolutions on the Colorado Situation Adopted.

THE CUMMINGS MEMORIAL FUND

"Reduce the Dues" Amendment Laid on Table—Columbia Union to Aid Cummings Memorial Fund—Revision of Laws Goes Over to September.

The regular monthly meeting of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, was called to order at 2.30 p. m. last Sunday by President Berg.

The minutes of the last regular meeting and special meeting of June 30 were read and approved.

Twenty-one traveling cards received since last meeting were read and accepted.

The Nominations Committee having made a favorable report on George S. Lewis and A. E. Overholtzer for full membership and Wm. J. Martin and W. H. Bawden for reinstatement, the candidates were duly elected and those present were obligated.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Louisville Union, No. 10, explaining its position in regard to contributions from sister unions in support of its fight against publishers of Louisville.

From St. Paul Union, No. 30, requesting indorsement of resolutions favoring the enactment of laws to secure an economical administration of I. T. U. affairs and a return to election of officers by the convention. Referred to delegates-elect to St. Louis convention.

A committee from Musicians Union, No. 161, was given the privilege of the floor and called attention to the fact that many members of organized labor were visiting Chevy Chase, which was still on the unfair list, and urged that some action be taken to prevent members of No. 101 doing so. The committee also requested that union musicians be employed by organizations of which printers were members.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Bynum, from Cummings Memorial Committee, reported that the committee had in bank to credit of the fund about $800 and asked that permission be granted to send the amount named to Secretary Bramwood. The request was granted.

The committee also asked for consideration of the following resolution:

WHEREAS, The sum of $800 is now to the credit of the Amos Cummings Memorial fund, raised by subscription and contribution of individual members of Columbia Union, and believing that the success of the proposition to erect an addition to the Union Printers' Home at Colorado Springs depends upon liberal subscriptions from subordinate unions; therefore be it

Resolved, That Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, hereby pledges a sum sufficient to make the contribution from said union and members $1,000; said sum of $200, more or less, to make up the difference between sum now on hand and said $1,000, to be taken from the treasury of the union by its officers authorized to handle its funds and forwarded to Secretary Bramwood within one year.

T. J. ROWE,
CHARLES T. GRAFF,
T. A. BYNUM,
Committee.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Babcock, from the Central Labor Union, reported that the credentials from this union had been presented to the Central Labor Union and the Allied Label League, and that three of our delegation had been honored by election in the Central Labor Union, John B. Dickman being elected president, J. H. Babcock, trustee, and C. E. Dietrich, organizer.

Mr. Babcock moved that Musicians Union be notified that a fine of $5 would be imposed on any member of No. 101 visiting Chevy Chase.

The motion was amended by Mr. Onyun to send the matter to the Grievance Committee, which was carried.

Mr. Ennis, from Committee on Revision and Codification of Laws, stated that the committee was ready to report. On motion, action was deferred on report to the September meeting.

Mr. Ennis moved that the law governing apprentices be taken up and adopted in order that it might be made a subject for conference with the Typothetæ. Carried.

The committee to draft resolutions on the Colorado Mine Situation, reported as follows:

To the Officers and Members of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: The undersigned committee, appointed at a special meeting, on July 7, to prepare resolutions regarding the miners' strike in Colorado, beg leave to present the following:

WHEREAS, Miners in the State of Colorado, members of the Western Federation of Miners, have, while engaged in a strike, been opposed by organizations known as the Mine Operators' Association and Citizens' Alliance, and that these organizations are charged by the Western Federation of Miners with being responsible for the wrecking of a newspaper plant where union men were employed because of the paper's firm stand for law and order, the destruction of property belonging to the union, demolishing union co-operative stores, deportation from the State of Colorado of peaceable, law-abiding union men by the unlawful use of special officers and public officials; and

WHEREAS, Under the guise of "public necessity" the Mine Operators' Association and so-called Citizens' Alliance are charged by the union miners with causing to be used the civil and military power of Colorado in unlawful, wanton, cruel, destructive, and un-American acts to intimidate union miners, their families, friends, and sympathizers, and that while the purpose of such acts of unlawful imprisonment, intimidation, coercion, deportation from the State, and other illegal and tyrannical acts charged against these organizations and those carrying out their behests is to break up and utterly destroy the miners' union in Colorado, such acts tend to injure all union labor organizations, aiming at the destruction of unions and depriving members of the rights and liberties guaranteed by State and Federal laws; and

WHEREAS, The following appeal has been issued by the Western Federation of Miners: "The Executive Board of the Western Federation of Miners appeals to the sense of justice lodged in the hearts of the men and women in all parts of the country whose loyalty has been the mainstay of our struggle for the right. As well may be imagined our officers need money to sustain the lives of deported members and there families as well to prosecute to a successful conclusion the struggle that has been on in this State for ten months. This is not our struggle alone. We are merely bearing the brunt of battle now. Later it may come in the same way to all others, for the right to organize and maintain a union is now the only issue at stake. If the Western Federation of Miners can be ruthlessly destroyed, then other unions can be likewise destroyed. This is the concern of all. * * *." And,

WHEREAS, The American Federation of Labor (with which the International Typographical Union is affiliated) has appealed "to all organized labor and friends to not only give their moral but financial assistance, so that the great question of constitutional liberty, human rights and civil government may be properly presented and defended, and we hope finally proclaimed and sustained by the Federal courts of our country;" therefore be it

Resolved by Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, of Washington, D. C., in regular session, July 17, That we condemn in unmeasured terms the many acts charged by the Western Federation of Miners against the Mine Operators' Association and Citizens' Alliance and those under their hire and direction—acts of cruelty and oppression against the union miners, their families, friends, and sympathizers, for which the Mine Operators' Association and so-called Citizens' Alliance are held responsible by the miners organization;

Resolved, That this union vigorously protests against the course pursued by these organizations (the Mine Operators' Associatson and so-called Citizens' Alliance), their hirelings and civil and military forces under their direction, in opposing the Western Federation of Miners, and that such methods, as the miners' organization specifically charge, are destructive of the rights and liberties of all citizens and opposed to law and order in every form;

Resolved, That while we condemn and protest against, all illegal and un-American acts of those bent on the destruction of the miners' union, we shall not support nor countenance any opposition to the legally constituted authorities by unlawful methods, if there should be any, believing that the best interests of all union labor can be best promoted by obedience to law and order, no matter how great the provocation to union men, and it has been shown to have been great in the territory described in the statement issued by the Western Federation of Miners;

Resolved, That whenever the finances of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, which have been heavily taxed during the past two years, are in a condition to extend financial aid to the union miners of Colorado that it be done, to assist in defending their legal rights and to advance the principles of true unionism, founded upon justice to the wageworker and adequate support and protection to his home and family.

Respectfully and fraternally submitted.

THOS. A. BYNUM,
E. A. M. LAWSON,
JOE M. JOHNSON,
FRANK A. KIDD,
CHAS. H. ENNIS,
Committee.

The resolutions were adopted.

REPORTS OF OFFICERS.

The president reported three deaths since last meeting.

The president recommended that three days' pay be given to Mr. Ennis for time lost on committee work. Approved.

The secretary reported the transfer from the active to passive roll of H. Copenharve; from superannuated to active roll of W. M. Polk, who took a traveling card; withdrawals, C. C. Ferguson, F. W. Prather, and George E. Wysong; admitted to Union Printers Home, James B. Harris and Carlos B. Tomlin.

The application of Mr. J. K. Marks for admission to the Home, made recently, granted, and declined by Mr. Marks, was renewed by his request.

Mr. Vaughan moved that his amendment to reduce the dues be submitted to a referendum vote. Laid on table.

Mr. Goodkey moved that the hall be not rented in future on election night. Referred to Board of Trustees.

Mr. Stelle moved that the secretary cast a unanimous ballot for Frank Bates for sergeant-at-arms. Carried.

Mr. Roberts moved that the secretary express the sympathy of the union to Frank C. Kemon in the loss of his three daughters, and that a floral tribute be sent to the funeral. Carried.

Mr. Ennis moved that a month's leave be granted to J. T. Sherier, the assistant to the secretary, whose services are to be dispensed with. Motion lost.

Mr. Kreiter moved that the secretary be directed to subscribe for the Post, Star, and Times, to delivered to the building. Carried.

Mr. Jenkins, from Ex-Delegates Association, asked the cooperation of the union in the entertainment of convention visitors who will pass through Washington on the way to St. Louis, and moved that a committee of seven be appointed by the chair. Carried.

Mr. Whitehead moved that it is the sense of Columbia Union, No. 101, that the referendum vote as applied to the election of I. T. U. officers should be abolished. Lost.

A VERY INTERESTING LETTER

Climbing Up Gornergrat—On Lete Noir—Through Martigny to Chamonix—Seeing Les Bossons Glacier—Meeting Many Americans—Off to Lausanne.

CHAMONIX, July 3, 1904.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

I will take up the thread of our trip where I left off a week ago.

In the morning of June 27 we took seats in a car of the mountain railroad (the highest electric railway in the world), and ascended to the Riffelberg, 8,429 feet, and then, in company with four natives of Scotland and with the aid of our alpinstocks, we started to climb up to the Gornergrat, 10,289 feet. It was a hard task for amateurs and took us three hours, including a stop of thirty minutes to eat our lunch that we brought with us. Our climb took us over fields of snow, many mountain streams, and some very steep rocks. When we arrived at our destination we were thoroughly tired out. The last part of our climb was between snow banks over six feet deep, through which a path had been made. We were well paid for our labor, however, for a magnificent prospect of snow-capped mountains met our view. The great Rhone glacier was spread out at our feet, a most wonderful sight. We were now over 10 000 feet high and could see the peaks of Monte Rosa, Breithorn, Matterhorn, Dent Blanche, and the Mischabels, ranging from 13,686 to 15,217 feet high. It was indeed an imposing sight and we spent about two hours at the Gornergrat, seeing what is considered the finest Alpine scenery in Switzerland.

The next day, in company with a gentleman and daughter from Pasadena, a professor of the University of Pennsylvania and his son, and a gentleman from Massachusetts, we started to ascend the path leading to the summit of the Matterhorn. After a long and steady climb of four hours we ascended to a height of 8,494 feet, which brought us to the Schwarzsee or Lac Noir, located at the foot of the mighty Matterhorn, the ascension of which has cost many lives. After spending a pleasant hour at this point we commenced the descent, which proved almost as tiresome as the ascent, and in two hours and a half arrived at our hotel.

Wednesday afternoon we boarded the cars of the Visp-Zermatt mountain railroad and descended to Visp, where we changed to the Swiss railroad and continued our journey to Martigny, where we arrived in the evening and found a very pretty little mountain town situated in the beautiful Rhone Valley. The mountain terraces are covered with vineyards and well cultivated fields and presents a picture of prosperity and happiness.

After a good night's rest we engaged a carriage to take us over the Lete Noir to Chamonix. While the distance is only about twenty-two miles, it took us nine hours to make the trip, stopping one hour for lunch. This side is full of interest, for the scenery is unusually varied. The roadway is a good one, but very steep. The ascent is made by going up terrace after terrace, the driver walking most of the way, for the road is a dangerous one and needs the constant attention of a skillful driver. After reaching Trient the road commenced to descend, and the driver took one of the horses out and tied it behind. Putting on the breaks and taking the other horse by the bridle he slowly led the horse down the steepest road we ever road over. The scenery from Lete Noir is a wild one and I doubt if its equal can be found in the world. At Chatelard we stopped for lunch and met many others who were going our way and some going towards Martigny.

Chamonix is beautifully situated at the foot of Mt. Blanc and is noted for its many fine excursions.

Friday, in company with Massachusetts friends and a trusted guide, we took the cars for Les Bossons station, about two and one-half miles from here, and then ascended a very crooked and steep path to the ice grotto, cut into Les Bossons glacier. We walked into this glacier for a hundred feet or more, when we came to a round chamber, the roof being supported by an immense pillar of ice. The chamber and tunnel is lighted by candles. The ice has a blue effect and is very beautiful. Returning to the mouth of the grotto we crossed a deep gulch over a very narrow bridge and commenced to cross the glacier. It looks very easy, but it proved the most difficult task we ever encountered, and you may be sure we were thankful when we reached the opposite side and promised ourselves that we would never take another such trip, for a slip in some places meant broken limbs or worse. There is no snow in which to gain a foothold, nothing but ice, and very slippery at that. It took two guides to help the ladies up. These guides have long sharp nails in their shoes that enables them to walk with comparative safety, but even they slip sometimes. The tourists pull heavy woolen socks over their shoes, which proves a great help, for they stick to the ice and greatly assist one in bad places. We all had a few falls, but finally gained the solid ground, only to be caught in a rain storm, but the trees are so thick with foliage that we did not get very wet.

Chamonix, while generally included in the Swiss tour, is located just across the frontier in France, and is a typical French town. In Zermatt the language is more German than French. In Martigny it becomes a little more French, and here it is all French.

Our hotel is situated on the road leading to Geneva and we see magnificent automobiles flying past the door every few minutes. They are very numerous in France and Switzerland. The roads are almost perfect and autos furnish the best method of traversing this Alpine country.

One of the greatest charms of our trip is the many acquaintances we make. People from all parts of the world are found in the hotels. The house we are stopping at has more French people than any other nationality, but Germans, Italians, English, and Australians are met with at almost every hotel we have patronized. At dinner time it is very amusing to hear the conversation, for with so many tongues it sounds very queer to an American. We spend the Fourth in Geneva, for which city we depart tomorrow. In a few days we go up to Lausanne by boat over Lake Geneva.

Yours respectfully,

F. B. BUCKLAND.

Meat Cutters' Strike Ended.

From Chicago comes the information that the strike in the meat packing industry is to be settled through arbitration. This is virtually a victory for the union, who have contended for arbitration from the start. The evident intent of the packers was to destroy the organization of the union, but as the strike progressed it became apparent that it would be a better stroke of business to deal with the union than take a chance on breaking in green hands on the work.

Bricklayers Strike.

The trouble at the War College grounds between Bricklayers Union, No. 1, and the representative of the Government in the person of Lieutenant Sewell, on account of the employment of a nonunion bricklayer who has been appointed through civil service, brings the "open shop" question out prominently.

Lieutenant Sewell rather facetiously remarks that "it requires a change of either the Constitution of the United States or the Bricklayers Union," and add that it will be no doubt easier to have the Bricklayers change their laws than the United States to change its Constitution.

There is no law that will compel any man or group of men to work in surroundings that are obnoxious, and the solution of the problem would be to detail the man Taylor on work that would not bring him in contact with union men.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Paperhangers, No. 420, stating that they had voted to parade on Labor Day. Referred to Labor Day Committee.

From Bottlers' Union, No. 251, inclosing copy of agreement signed by the Bottlers' Protective Association. Placed on file.

From Beer Drivers and Stablemen's Union, No. 234, stating that a fine of $5 would be imposed on any of its members found patronizing Lafayette Square Opera House. Filed.

From Whitehead & Hoag Co., calling attention to Labor Day necessities in the way of badges, etc. Referred to Labor Day Committee.

From E. J. Ratigan, secretary of the Council of Allied Building Trades, stating that the several Carpenters' unions interested had failed to take advantage of the recommendations of the special committee appointed to investigate the differences between those unions and the Council of Allied Building Trades, and requesting that they be denied representation in the Central Labor Union until such time as they comply with the laws and rules of the Central Labor Union and the Council of Allied Building Trades. To be taken up under new business.

ROLL CALL OF UNIONS.

Electrical Workers requesting information as to what organization placed the Elite Laundry on the unfair list. On being informed it was done by Carriage and Wagon Workers' Union a motion to have the case referred back to that union for adjustment was carried.

Musicians called attention to unfair places affecting that union.

The Retail Clerks requested all purchasers to call for clerk's card.

Grocery Clerks called attention to blue button worn by their members and also requested purchasers to insist on seeing card.

Sheet Metal Workers requested that secretary be instructed to ask that the Arlington Brewery Co. give their work out to union tinners.

Stationery Firemen reported that a fine of $5 will be imposed on any member of that organization patronizing Chevy Chase Lake or Lafayette Square Theatre.

The Labor Day Committee asked that the committee be increased.

The secretary stated that a delegation from Retail Liquor Dealers' Association desired the floor.

Under new business the communication from Council of Allied Building Trades in reference to Carpenters' unions was taken up. A motion being made to grant request of Council of Allied Building Trades, it was carried.

Only Eight-Hour Union Office in Town.

THURSDAY, JULY 21, 1904.

NOTICE.

During the months of June, July, and August this office will be closed at 12 o'clock noon Saturdays.

PROBABLY the Democratic campaign committee would like to trade Captain HOBSON for a yellow dog.

THE PARKER band-wagon didn't have much tongue, which may account for the anxiety of the driver to secure a gold-standard automobile license.

IT will not be a mud-slinging campaign this year, but doubtless the usual dubious partisan courtesies will be exchanged when it gets well heated up.

FROM now on the partisan patriot will be much in evidence presenting the claims of his particular party to the support of the "honest workingman." It will be well to remember in this connection that the great political parties of the United States are not at fault regarding the question of labor and capital, but that the individuals who manage them are very apt to be influenced by selfish motives, While you applaud the glittering generalities of the partisan patriot, ask him to be a little more explicit than he usually is and state just where he, as a partisan patriot, stands with regard to the short work-day and high wages. High wages are essential to good citizenship and the healthy growth of the Republic, and he is a very cheap and unreliable partisan patriot who does not recognize the fact. Fling the harpoon into him, fellow-workingmen, and force him to take a definite stand on one side or the other of a question upon the right settlement of which depends the very existence of popular government.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

Albert G. ("Jos") Allison dropped in on us last week for a minute from his home in Waynesburg, Pa., where he is in the drug business with his brother-in-law and revels in the added title of "Doc." He has been away from Washington about ten years, after having been employed in the G. P. O. and "down town" nearly twenty years. He first came to this city at the time that I did and we both went to work on the Record in December, 1874, at which time he was a roommate of E. M. Wheat's, the latter at that time not having yet brought his family to this city. After about three years of Record and bill work he went to work on the old National Republican when the late William H. Hickman took the foremanship, along with Hamilton Platt, who was recently here from Seattle, Wash.; George M. Ramsey, now in charge of the "Spess" press room; William F. Dunn, now chief proofreader of the Post; Charlie Spencer, now of the Navy Branch; myself, and a number of others. Later he returned to the G. P. O. and remained until "let out" in 1894, since when he has been at his present occupation. He little looks the fifty years that he has passed through and might easily pass for 40. He was here a year or so ago on a visit, at the time when William Dougherty, a binder, while in a frenzied condition of mind, killed the lady of whom he was enamored and himself, and as Dougherty was a fellow townsman, Allison took charge of his remains and accompanied them to Waynesburg. He had scarcely completed this unhappy errand when he was called back here by the sudden death of his cousin, John Gilmore, from paralysis, and again he had had a corpse to escort to his old home. This time his visit is a pleasant one, and it is hoped that nothing will happen to mar it.

E. E. Gessler, after a visit of a little over a week, took his departure for Cincinnati to attend the convention of the supreme body of Elks, to which I erroneously stated last week that he is a delegate. The only delegacy which he has is the I. T. U. convention in St. Louis in August, and his local union—the one at Manila—did not appropriate the money for his mileage in attending that. As it would have been only about $800 or $900, I don't see why they did not do so. But they did furnish him what is equivalent to the ordinary mileage of an American delegate. He will return to Manila by the 1st of October, having been granted six months' leave. As the voyage coming this way consumed forty-seven days, it made serious inroads on the time he had intended devoting to his Washington friends.

The terrible loss of three daughters of Frank Kemon, of the Third Division, was a shock to his friends beyond expression. Sympathy in such an awful disaster can be but feebly shown as compared with the depth with which it is felt. Floral offerings and attendance at the funeral were the only modes in which his associates could exhibit their sorrow.

* * * *

I take pleasure in acknowledging the receipt from Secretary John W. Bramwood of a copy of the Officers' Reports to the fiftieth session of the I. T. U., at St. Louis, week of August 8 to 13. President Lynch, Secretary Bramwood, and the vice-presidents and organizers exhaustively review the work of the past year in the 115 pages comprised in the report to which justice cannot be done in the little space which THE TRADES UNIONIST could give to it. As an exhibit of the work of the past year it is highly satisfactory.

* * * *

The Masonic Disciple appeared last Saturday under its new auspices and in a new shape, being sixteen pages, two columns to the page—a convenient size for the breast pocket. It contained a clear review of Masonic news of the week, with notice of the work proposed during the succeeding week. It is the intention of the new publishers to make it a complete compendium of matters of interest to Masons of the District, and the first issue warrants the belief that the promise will be fulfilled.

I will admit, dear Belcher, that I know nothing of the Pastoral Symphony. But you will give me the credit, I am sure, of not making an ass of myself by pretending to know, and when you can bring a similar clean bill of health, come and see me.

* * * *

Foreman John R. Berg, of the Record, was taken violently ill on last Thursday with rheumatism of the kidneys, and had to be taken home in a carriage. He and ex-President Joe Johnson had gone down town on an errand together when Mr. Berg was attacked. He recovered in a few hours and was able to be on the street the same evening.

* * * *

I don't know whether Brother C. S. Gunn got the idea that the August meeting of Columbia Union would be held on July 16, but even Belcher will admit that he was wrong in so stating.

* * * *

James Monroe Kreiter, of the Post, is a candidate for reading clerk of the I. T. U. convention at St. Louis. Besides other qualifications he has two very essential ones—the ability to read, and the ability to read loud enough to be heard. I am for Jim and hope he will get the appointment. I know of no one more capable of filling it satisfactorily.

* * * *

The case of Henry E. Faust is a peculiarly sad one. During the greater part of the winter he was confined to his bed with nervous prostration, and he had scarcely recovered sufficiently physically to be able to work when mental troubles made it necessary that he should be placed under restraint. He is of a very nervous temperament naturally, and too close application to his work, together with his physical troubles, unbalanced his mind.

* * * *

Again the proposition to reduce the dues has been laid on the table by Columbia Union, and this time by a practically unanimous vote. It is easy to cry, "Reduce the dues!" but no one has yet shown how it can be done. The demand comes, as a general proposition, from those to whom any union dues are irksome, and whose interest in the union is rarely great enough to secure their attendance at meetings. We have the fairest system of dues now that it is possible to devise, and not at all disproportionate to the advantages which the union confers nor in excess of its absolute requirements.

* * * *

The Union refused to vote that it was its sense that the referendum system of electing I. T. U. officers should be abolished. While it is unfortnnately true that too few members take the trouble to sufficiently inform themselves as to the merits of the various candidates, elsewhere as well as here, it has an educating effect and is not without value in developing a certain degree of interest in those who have been in the habit of leaving everything in the nature of union matters to others and rarely evince a deeper solicitude regarding such things than can be expressed by kicking in general against everything that is done. If forty or fifty men "run the union," it is the fault of the 'steen hundred and sixty who are too indolent to attend to a business that is of as much importance to them as to anybody on earth.

SOCIAL LEADERS QUIT CAPITAL.

H. L. Murray, chief press reviser of the Government Printing Office, has gone to Clearfield, Pa., his old home where, with his wife and seven children, he will renew old friendships. Mr. Murray expects to take a prominent part in the campaign this fall. He has already been selected by the Republican campaign committee of Clearfield as one of its principal orators.

The Union showed its sympathy with Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Kemon in their sad bereavement by appropriating $25 for flowers to be sent to the funeral.

* * * *

The resolutions presented by Chairman Tom Bynum regarding the Colorado horrors have no uncertain ring, and the Union adopted them without a dissenting voice.

* * * *

John R. Lamson has been acting as foreman of the Interior Branch in the absence of Foreman Sam McBride. But he has had nothing else to be foreman of, as his family has been taking their vacation.

* * * *

The services of Joseph T. Sherier, stenographer and typewriter in the secretary's office, were dispensed with last Saturday, Secretary Seibold feeling equal to the task of attending to all the business of the office himself. Mr. Sherier has been a very useful man in the position and will be greatly missed by committees and others who have been in the habit of availing themselves of his services. He already has a position in view that promises well for the future.

I met Billy Garrett on the street last Saturday, he having just come from Providence Hospital. He showed his recent suffering, but is progressing rapidly toward complete recovery.

* * * *

The news of the sudden death of Fred Hall at Mackinac Island, Mich., last Tuesday came as a great shock on Wednesday morning, and men spoke of it in little knots throughout the office almost with bated breath. It came so suddenly, without the slightest warning, that they could hardly realize that it was so. It is true he had been suffering some lttle indisposition and had been troubled with his eyes for some months, but there had been nothing to cause anticipations of his early decease, and, in fact, so far as I have heard, the fatal attack was acute indigestion, having nothing to do with his previous illness. Mr. Hall was a capable workman and in his position as assistant foreman of the Proof Division he was an able lieutenant of Mr. Robinson and accommodating in his dealings with the men. He had achieved the great honor of representing the District councils of the National Union as a Senator in the Supreme body, then in session at Mackinac Island, Mich., where he had gone accompanied by his wife, to be cut off thus suddenly. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, his affiliations being with Hope Lodge and Lafayette Chapter, and also with a member of Mount Vernon Tent, Knights of the Maccabees.

A Card.

TO OUR FRIENDS:

In the hour of deepest distress at the loss of our dear children, there came to us such sweet expressions of sympathy and condolence from the officials and fellow-workmen of the Government Printing Office and from Columbia Typographical Union, that we were greatly sustained and strengthened to bear the great affliction that God in His wisdom permitted to come to us.

The beautiful floral tributes to the memory of our loved children that were sent us from the various chapels of the office and from Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, were so appropriate and seemed so symbolic of their innocence and goodness, that our hearts were wonderfully comforted and words are inadequate to suitably express our obligation.

Sincerely,

F. C. KEMON AND FAMILY.

Fred. A. Hall Dead.

It came as a shock to many friends of Fred A. Hall to hear of his sudden death at Mackinac, Mich. Mr. Hall was prominent in National Union affairs, having gone to Mackinac to represent this jurisdiction in the Senate, the supreme body of the Order, which was in session during last week. He was for many years an employe of the G. P. O., having worked on Specifications and later in the main proof room, where he was assistant to Foreman Robinson.

Death of James E. Fitzgerald.

James E. Fitzgerald, well-known in down-town printer circles, died at the home of his mother, 2422 Brightwood avenue, Wednesday, July 20. Mr. Fitzgerald was a patient sufferer from tuberculosis of the lungs for several years past, incapacitating him from work. He spent some time at the Union Printers' Home, but returned about a year ago to spend his declining days with his relatives.

Mr. Fitzgerald possessed a genial and happy nature, had many friends and few if any enemies, and always gave aid and assistance liberally to those who appealed for aid. Funeral took place from Immaculate Conception Church, on Friday morning and interment was had at Mt. Olivet Cemetery.

Another W. H. Phillips.

We take the following from the Journal of Labor, of Atlanta, Ga.:

THE TRADES UNIONIST wants to know if W. H. Phillips, the printer who died here recently, was "Slick" Phillips. To the best of our information—no. We have been told that the dead man had a brother in the Government office, Washington. If so, he is requested to address Wm. S. Wier, president, or W. H. Grant, secretary, A. T. U., No. 48, Atlanta, Ga.

In the Inland Printer.

A. F. Bloomer has an article in the July number of the Inland Printer entitled, "On the Making of the Congressional Record," that is at once instructive and interesting. The work done on the Record is shown in detail throughout the article from its inception as copy from the Capitol to the printed paper in the G. P. O., and due credit is freely given to all who aid in getting out that very important publication. The article is well written and shows careful preparation.

In purchasing goods from advertisers in this paper, do not fail to mention the fact that you saw the advertisement in THE TRADES UNIONIST.

THE POETS.

[The Evening Star, 1898.]

These are the makers of song,
Simple and tender and strong,
Standing rapt in the glory
Of thought that burns steady and passes
In its sweep from the stars to grave grasses,
From the joy to the grief of life's story.

Fair in their hearts rises youth;
There smoulder embers of truth,
Strewn with ashes of sorrow.
There are pain and regret and the traces
Of conflict with sin in their faces;
But the dream of a better to-morrow,

Bends, in the temple of song,
Their strength to the struggle with wrong
And they find a sure guerdon
In the hope that their souls may be gifted
So to sing that some toiler uplifted
May stoop with less pain 'neath his burden.

Theirs is the passion that glows
Pure as the breath of a rose;
In their bosoms are burning
The fires of the heart's sweet awaking,
Of the joy that is almost heart-breaking,
Of deep love in its uttermost yearning.

Calm 'mid the strife of the throng,
These are the makers of song,
Human tenderness voicing;
From the griefs of humanity reaping
A fruitage of cheer; in men's weeping
Finding chords of a hymn of rejoicing.

They, where men falter and grope,
Come with the blossoms of hope,
Fair from the fields of the ages,
Fragrant with promise of cleaner,
Sweeter with love, and serener
Records of man in life's pages.

Theirs is the battle with fate,
Theirs is the torch at the gate
Of the stronghold of error;
And men, while war's echoes go ringing,
Hear the sweet undertones in their singing
Of peace and the passing of terror.

These are the makers of song,
Scornors of foulness and wrong,
And base pride in high places,
Who with mirth too heroic for laughter
Foretell a love-lighted hereafter,
With the glow of its dawn in their faces.

—WILLIAM TIPTON TALBOTT.

Vacation at the Spefs.

With each recurring season there arises the vexatious question, "Where shall we spend our vacation this year?" We have grown tired of Atlantic City and the gaieties of Coney Island appeal to us no more.

While discussing this knotty problem the other day a friend came to our assistance with the suggestion that we spend our vacation this year at a popular resort known as the Spefs. We begged to be made acquainted with the location of the place, and were informed that it was situated in the heart of Swhamp Phoodle. Our friend said the natives were queer, but harmless wights, and it was a good place for rest and recuperation.

Accordingly, we came, we saw, but we did not conquer with the alacrity of the illustrious Julius. The Spefs is a strange place, indeed, and the natives are more strange. They insist on the sojourner doing as they do—that is, he must perform a trifling task each day before he can play. He is expected to only "take out," as they call it, three times a day, after which he is supposed to "dis" an hour and a half, and then he can spend his time with the reckless abandon of a school boy during vacation. In the meantime, however, he may have several encounters with blood-thirsty, time-killing creatures called "phroofs," which abound in this region, and usually attack one in packs.

The very first day it became apparent that time would lag on our hands after the performance of the trifling task insisted on by the natives. We have tried many diversions for the leisure hours at the Spefs, such as dumb-bells, tennis, base ball, etc., but we would recommend to those contemplating a visit to this resort that a cot would be a handy thing to have. After performing the trifling task each day one can enjoy a cot immensely.

In India it is said the natives have a sacred white elephant to which they bow down and worship. The natives here also have a fetich. It is known as the sacred Hy-Com., and woe be unto him who shows disrespect to it. This god of theirs is a hard customer to locate. We had great trouble placing him where the great high priests—known as "Phroof Rheaders"—wanted him.

The principal diversion of the natives is pursuing the "Averidge." He is pursued by all with equal eagerness, and 'tis whispered that some never get within sight of him, but this does not seem to dampen the ardor of their pursuit.

One day we got impatient and swatted the sacred Hy-Com. on the neck. This caused great indignation and excitement among the natives, during which some of the cooler heads smuggled us beyond the borders. We afterward learned that had this not been done our life would have been forfeited.

The Spefs is not a bad resort, however. There are no disputes as to "who failed to pull the plug?" The natives bathe in cold, but running water every day.

But we would advise tourists not to offend the sacred Hy-Com.

OLIVER C. MCCARDELL.

The Kemon Obsequies.

The funeral of the three daughters of Frank C. Kemon, who were drowned in the Lower Potomac last week, took place from M. E. Church South on Monday afternoon. The church was filled with friends of Mr. and Mrs. Kemon, who have been so suddenly bereft in the loss of their three daughters. Words fail to express the deep sympathy felt for the parents of the lost ones in a tragedy so sudden and deplorable.

The Masonic Disciple.

Under new management and in different form The Masonic Disciple comes to hand in No. 1, Vol. II. It is well and ably edited by R. P. Evans, who is assisted by A. F. Bloomer. Treating of matters pertaining to Masonry, it has a good field, and under its present management it will thrive and grow like the great Order it represents. Its subscription price is $1 per year, and subscriptions can be sent to the Masonic Disciple Co., 413 Ninth street northwest.

Fault is the one thing that is frequently found where it is not.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

First Division.

I see Belcher's back. Now pull the plug, durn you.

John T. Haskins has spent the past fifteen days of his leave by the bedside of a sick wife.

Imposer Geo. Wetmore and wife are enjoying these hot July days along the Eastern Sho'.

Harry W. Templar is visiting the "old folks at home," who reside up near Harrisburg, Pa.

N. D. Talbott has been assigned to Slug 71, and S. D. Barr, 72. Both are additions to the temporary force.

William Lawlor longed for the sights of the Bowery and Chinatown, therefore is spending his vacation in New York City.

Maker-up Dr. J. K. Wallace has turned over his leave to Mrs. Wallace. At least she is visiting at her old home in Cincinnati.

H. Van de Bogert is sojourning in the land of Dixie. The danger of railroad travel was the cause for not visiting his old Iowa home.

Green Jordan, messenger to Mr. Spottswood, has enlisted for 15 days' service eating watermelon and spring chicken in old Virginia.

Thos. Burns has invented and placed in commission a wind-brake for the Y proof press. As Harvey says "we" wasn't over 15 minutes thinking about it.

Norman Sandridge completed his six months temporary service on Monday. The best wishes of the force are with him wherever he may locate for the future.

It was a shame to turn us out into the street a day like last Saturday. However President Roosevelt undoubtedly meant well in granting the half holiday.

Dr. C. R. Radley is another good man. He is content to the toil on these hot summer days while Mrs. Radley and the little doctor are visiting up in York State.

A. L. Huss' fancy runs to big hills and little fishes. Thus we find him, together with Mrs. Huss and the little Husses enjoying fifteen days leave up in the Blue Ridge mountains.

P. M. McCallum is spending his leave in this city. Peter is the father of several young Americans who are giving the "old gent" pointers on how to swim and catch fish in the waters around Washington.

Abner C. Proctor's leave will probably not be as enjoyable as others. He was contemplating undergoing an operation for some trouble of the neck. Thus another argument in favor of sick leave was presented.

It is with considerable pleasure that G. P. O. baseball fans are watching the career of Bruce Bielaski, who plays with the Guntons, of the Church league. His work with the little bat is so fine that hopes are entertained that some day another lawyer-baseballist will be added to the Senators.

One day last week J. N. Cobb concluded to buy a few pictures to adorn the walls of his room. Dropping into a famous art store he selected three to his liking, but when told that of his selections one was worth $35,000 and another $10,000 he almost fell dead. He is at a loss now to know whether he is a good or bad judge of paintings.

Well, well, well! So my good friend J. Monroe Kreiter is a candidate for reading clerk of the I. T. U. convention. Now this accounts for some things that happened last spring. But I sincerely hope he gets the job, and believe it the duty of the Washington delegation to work hard for him. Let us scrap among ourselves, but stand pat for Washington and Washingtonians when away from home.

A group of printers were discussing the wisdom of Secretary Loeb in turning down the miners who wished to see the President recently, when one remarked that he thought Loeb hardly smooth enough for the job. "It takes a man" said he, "who can give a good jolly and a pleasant smile all the time." "That's right," said one of the bunch. "Something about like Jim Bright." A painful silence followed this last remark and the session adjourned.

I am informed that at the next meeting of the Auxiliary an attempt will be made to raise the $100 given the lady delegates to St. Louis to $150 or over. In the light of events it seems strange that such should be the case. Much of the money now possessed by the Auxiliary is there because of the liberality of Columbia Union. Wise and judicious expenditure will help increase the membership, and increase the confidence of Columbia Union. But whenever the time arrives that the funds are use extravagantly and unnecessarily, just then I predict the beginning of the end of that organization.

The announcement last Thursday that the three daughters of Frank Kemon had met a sudden death, came to printing office employes like a clap of thunder from out a clear sky. Words have never yet been framed that can properly convey to the bereaved family the sympathy expressed by everyone over the sad calamity. To have the very light of his life, the joy of his existence, the hope of his future—three beautiful, cultured young women, possessed of all the charms of young womanhood—taken from his fatherly care in the twinkling of the eye, has made a wound beyond the power of human consolation to heal. Probably in this awful hour of bereavement the dying words of the lamented McKinley are the best that can be offered: "Thy will be done, Oh Lord, not mine."

Every man who attended last Sunday's union meeting is entitled to some consideration by the Carnegie hero fund commission. You all know about the weather, but regardless of the heat there was a good attendance. Goodkey opened the battle from a strongly entrenched position, which he held throughout the meeting. Several flank movements were executed, but Goodkey wasn't to be routed. J. Monroe Kreiter gave a masterly oratorical exhibition. F. C. Roberts was handicapped to certain extent by fame, for the applause was so great "Funny" had difficulty in reciting his "original" poem. Dan Vaughan's appearance in a linen suit somewhat cooled the atmosphere, and "Judge" Chas. Ennis carried enough law under his arm to wad a 13-inch gun. Evidently friend Brockwell was suffering from the heat or had left his joke book at home, for he was in the serious mood President Berg, although an unwell man, made an able presiding officer. I am inclined to think, however, he will have to use the gavel more strenuously for too much merriment leads to disorder. Altogether it was a good meeting.

John A. Massey is visiting Georgia while on leave.

J. E. Colton, while on leave, is visiting New Orleans and St. Louis.

A. T. Maupin is spending some of his leave on his farm in Virginia.

L. G. Pulliam went to Kentucky lately on the sad mission to bury his mother, who died suddenly.

E. E. Richards, an expert amateur photographer of this room, is spending his leave in West Virginia and Ohio.

F. T. Razey and Arthur J. McMillan are detailed to the Library Branch, owing to some of that force being on leave.

Lieut. Geo. P. Phillips, Second Regiment; Thos. E Doty, Battery; Wm. G. O'Connell, Corcoran Cadets; constitute the soldier contigent of this room who go to National Guard camp at Harpers Ferry next month.

Jo Silverberg sent his weekly souvenir postal greetings to the boys this week through Titus F. Ellis. The card pictures a town named Hohenlimburg, and Jo says the refreshments there are fine. Can they be beer and limburger?

On Wednesday morning the news of Fred Hall's death at Mackinac, Mich., came as a great shock. Nearly every printer knew him, as referee and assistant foreman of the Proof Room. He was always square and accommodating, and was liked by all who met him.

A genuine and happy surprise to all was the late temporary appointments. Our room received the following: J. D. Newlon and F. P. Fugitt, from Byron S. Adams; Alfred Dietz and J. T. Miller, of Baltimore; S. R. Thompson, F. T. Hodges, J. D. Bradley, J. T. Geraci, and L. P. Lippincott.

As J. Fred Orth (not the ball player, but Slug 37) was coming to his daily toil one day last week with Mr. Heslet, he remarked about the assistant foreman's long strides. Heslet said he acquired them in his youth by following the plow. He also attributes his rugged good health to such training.

After three exciting chapel meetings this division decided not to appoint a committee to look into the merits of subscription papers which pass around. Some one's signature should be attached to the story at the top of such papers. Many think because the Public Printer's name appears on them that he approves of them. That is erroneous. It is simply his permit for the papers to pass around.

The attention of the District Commissioners or chief of police should be called to the railroad blockades nearly every morning at Massachusetts avenue. Many ladies and elderly men as well as others, risk their lives daily dodging by the switching trains. For ten minutes previous to 8 o'clock shifting of cars at that point should be suspended, because of so many crossing the tracks at that time. This is really the only northeast crossing left open owing to the station building operations.

Third Division.

Perhaps the greatest calamity that has befallen any employe of the Government Printing Office for a long time was the death by drowning, in Lower Machodoc Creek, near Edgewater, Va., while bathing, of the three daughters of Frank C. Kemon, maker-up in the Third Division. Mr. Kemon's family consisted of a son, aged 22, three daughters, aged respectively 19, 17, and 15, besides Mrs. Kemon and himself. It is not too much to say that Mr. and Mrs. Kemon and their son have the heartfelt sympathy of the whole city in their great sorrow.

Immediately upon receipt of the news of the accident by the Third Division, a special chapel meeting was called, at which a committee was appointed to represent the chapel at the funeral services, and to draw up suitable resolutions of respect and sympathy.

At an adjourned meeting, held July 18, the following resolutions were read and unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The sad intelligence has reached the Third Division Chapel, Government Printing Office, of the sudden and untimely demise of the daughters of our fellow-workman and friend, Frank C. Kemon;

Be it resolved, That we, husbands, fathers, sons, and brothers, extend to our brother and to his stricken wife and son our earnest and heartfelt sympathy;

Be it further resolved, That, realizing how little any words of ours can help our friends in their deep distress, we commend them to God, whose mercy is as boundless as the sea. As the time goes on, may the Angel of Memory bring back to their minds the image of their loved ones, and may the Angel of Hope give promise of a happy reunion where pain and death shall be no more;

And be it resolved, That we further express our sympathy by the appointment of a committee to represent this chapel at the funeral services, and by the publication of these resolutions in THE TRADES UNIONIST.

Committee.

The funeral services were held at the Mount Vernon Place M. E. church South, and were attended by an audience completely filling the structure. The large platform was almost covered with flowers, the offerings of relatives and friends of the family. The Third Division contributed a beautiful piece, which was accorded a place directly in front of the pulpit. It is understood that other divisions expressed their sympathy in the same manner. The interment was at Rock Creek Cemetery.

Public band concerts will be given as follows during the week ending Thursday, July 28:

Thursday, July 21—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, Dupont Circle and Fort Myer.

Friday, July 22—Engineer Band, Garfield Park and Washington Barracks.

Saturday, July 23—Marine Band, White House Grounds.

Monday, July 25—Cavalry Band, Franklin Park and Fort Myer.

Tuesday, July 26—Engineer Band, Lincoln Park and Washington Barracks.

Wednesday, July 27—Marine Band, Capitol Grounds.

Thursday, July 28—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, Iowa Circle and Fort Myer.

Alonzo C. Nelson, temporary, left us last week.

Richard Taylor, laborer, has been on leave since the 13th inst.

The condition of George C. Sparks shows a slight gain for the better, but he is still very weak.

Frank Williams, a temporary appointee, was assigned to Slug 4 last Monday morning.

About a week ago John C. Sullivan was transfered from this division to the Department of Agriculture Branch.

Messrs. Charles F. Blett and W. C. Krause concluded their terms as temporary employes on the 13th inst.

In the last issue I failed to get the names of several who were on leave at the time, but as they will about all be back when this is printed it won't make so much difference.

The following gentlemen began their leave Thursday morning of this week: Messrs. R. M. Cheshire, Hoyt Holton, C. J. Unger, Sam Edmunds, F. E. Warren, R. W. Christian, and T. J. Arrington.

There was a report current a few days ago that there had been an election in North Langdon and that the Third Division had come out on top, Mr. Lawson having been chosen Mayor and Frank L. McUmber one of the councilmen. Both gentlemen, with characteristic modesty, disclaim all knowledge of the honor thrust upon them.

J. W. BELCHER.

LONG PRIMER SORTS.

J. W. Belcher says that the attacks made upon him have been "unmanly and frivolous; that they have been getting more brutal and vulgar at each succeeding spasm." But, then, that is as it may be.

***

J. W. Belcher objects to the Russian style of cutting children's hair, where it looks "as if a bowl had been put over the head and used as a guide to cut the back hair." Pull the plug.

***

J. W. Belcher says: "To those who by their repetition of the injunction to 'Pull the plug,' have added to the vogue of cleanliness among the readers of this paper I extend my hearty thanks for their help. There seems to be some improvement lately. It is to be hoped that the improvement will continue."

The implication here seems to be that the readers of this paper are not naturally given to cleanliness, and that "some improvement" has resulted from the efforts of Mr. Belcher. Now the writer begs leave to suggest that it is Mr. Belcher's imagination which is at fault. The workers in the G. P. O. are, as a rule, an exceptionally tidy body of men. It is not likely that the printers of the Third Division are an exception, Mr. Belcher to the contrary notwithstanding. That muchmistaken gentleman should name the guilty parties, if there be any, and cease his general charge of uncleanliness.

SOMETHING DOING IN THE EDITORIAL LINE.

Our steamed and roasted contemporary is envious because it is not his privilege to stand on the heights of song and gossip with the immortals. Being of a plodding, prosaic nature, our aforesaid contemporary can not appreciate those higher, serener, and more etherial thoughts which set the poet's soul aflame and cause him to write lines of varying length, each beginning with a capital and arranged with artistic uniformity on the left. We are sorry that the queer individual in question does not stand with us instead of being agin us. And we are still hoping that some day he will see the error of his ways and cease to slop around in his mucky puddle of atrabilious verbiage. No doubt he would make a fine bouquet flinger if he could only get rid of the mulligrubs and relieve his ego of a large quantity of hot air. But that is as it may be. The firm of Bugg, Shakespere & Co. will continue to do business at the same old stand in spite of all the mud which can be flung by an army of little envious gents like our steamed and roasted contemporary.

YOU ARE NOT AS WELCOME AS THE FLOWERS IN MAY.

Last night I dreamed a horrid dream,
I dreamed I was compelled to sweep;
And oh how strange it all did seem,
After working twenty years it made me weep.

By the dear old boss's desk I strolled
While the bats in my belfry raised old Ned,
I saw myself as on the rocks of old,
And then the waiting Seybold sweetly said:

"You're as poor a bluff as ever come our way
From Chicago—and you ought to eat old hay,
You may learn a thing or two some day,
And when you do you'll change your way."

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of July 19, 1904.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8 o'clock p. m. by Chairman Wells, with all officers present.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

From Paperhanger's Union, No. 420, certifying to H. J. Wells, R. C. Keiner, and W. J. Tubman.

From Elevator Constructors Union, No. 10, certifying to C. J. Faulstick, E. Young, and J. Watson.

From Tile Layers Helpers Union, No. 12, certifying to S. Beckett, J. Lochte, and W. Krouse.

The credentials were referred to a committee consisting of Delegates L. A. Sheetz, W. E. Sedgwick, and B. Russell. The committee making a favorable report, the credentials were received, and the delegates-elect present were obligated and seated.

Delegate Sheetz, from Washington Lodge of Machinists, made a statement relative to their credentials presented at last meeting.

A communication was read from W. Tindall, secretary to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, stating that the Commissioners would hear the committee from the Council relative to the increase of wages desired for the painters employed in the District repair shop on Wednesday, July 20. Delegate Wells was added to the committee.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Delegate Daly reported the action of the Central Labor Union, on the request of the Council, to unseat the Carpenters until such time as they complied with the rules of the Central Labor Union and the Council.

Delegate Ratigan reported the action of the Labor Day Committee, and urged the delegates to assist the committee in making the affair a success by taking the matter up in their respective unions and asking them to see that their unions are represented on the committee.

Delegate Daly moved that the committee take into consideration the amendments submitted and report at the meeting of July 26. The motion was carried and the secretary directed to notify the members of the committee.

ROLL CALL.

Under roll call of unions to submit business twenty delegates from fourteen unions answered to their names.

Delegate Peyton, from the Hod Carriers, stated that no results had been obtained from the Geo. A. Fuller Co., and that the Fuller company were carrying hod carriers who did not carry the Council card.

The Business Agent stated that he had made a trip to Baltimore to visit Mr. Baird, of the Fuller Co., but that he had not received satisfactory results. The matter was continued in the hands of the Business Agent.

Delegate Sheetz asked the assistance of the Business Agent relative to engineers of different breweries who are in the habit of purchasing supplies from Thomas Somerville & Sons. The Business Agent was directed to give the matter his attention, and if possible attain the results desired by the Machinists.

State Branch.

Miss Mary B. O'Toole was recently transferred to the Treasury Branch.

This Branch has been provided with a fine new wardrobe—a long felt want.

Miss Nellie L. Hayes, of our bindery, was kept at home by illness for a few days last week.

William Maloney, of our bindery, reports the birth of a 12-pound boy at his home one day last week.

Chas. S. Heinline has been acting as imposer and maker-up during the absence of Frank Manderfeld.

Wm. H. Duling, our chairman, has been resting and recuperating his shattered energies at his home in picturesque Brentwood.

Dave McConnel was recently transferred to the Job Room. Dave's cheery voice is greatly missed by us all, and we wish him good luck in his new position.

Wm. Rebuschatis has been transferred to the Proof Room. "Ruby" has been in this Branch for several years, and goes away with the regrets and best wishes of his fellow-workers here.

Thomas A. Stevens, who has been a laborer here for several years, was transferred to the Third Division last week. Thomas is a first-class dentist, and read a paper on that subject before the recent convention of colored dentists here which was highly complimented.

Frank L. Manderfeld, our genial maker-up and imposer, played a mean trick on us last week. He slipped away to Rockville, Md., and was married, without asking the consent of his friends and fellow-workmen. But we have forgiven him and all is now serene. The bride was Miss Bina Green, formerly of North Carolina. Their home for the present will be at 205 G street northwest. "May they live long and prosper."

A WELL-ATTENDED MEETING

Machinists Aid Printers in Fight Against the Philadelphia "Inquirer"—Secretary Winslow Disproves Charges of Withholding Carpenters' Communication.

The regular weekly meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8 p. m. on Monday evening, President Dickman in the chair.

The minutes of the last regular meeting were read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

The Committee on Credentials, having reported on the following delegates-elect, they were accepted:

Horseshoers: Daniel Whalen, J. M. Horigan, Wm. Schondau, Andrew Wise, and Warren Lusby.

Steam Fitters, No. 10: E. J. Ratigan, C. A. Schmidt, F. M. Stecker, M. E. Caton, and W. Lyon.

Plate Engravers: R. H. Ford, vice G. Hergesheimer.

Steam Fitters Helpers, No. 28: David Breen, Edward Hart, J. H. Reichard, P. A. Gilhooly, and Thos. F. Flanagan.

Elevator Constructors, No. 10: J. Watson, F. W. Maddox, E. Baker, J. D. Ford, and A. F. Hayden.

Barbers, No. 239: Chris. Sproesser, Gustav Amberg, Theo. W. Wetzel, E. Henry Measer, and A. Ficio.

Carpenters, No. 1103: Samuel Gantz, vice J. A. Barkly.

Tile Layers, No. 2: Chas. Potterton, sr., Thos. McNeilly, W. E. Thompson, Harry Hopkins, and Fred. Richardson.

Grocery Clerks, No. 533: Fred. Herbert, vice A. A. Swing.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Painters Union, No. 368, entering protest on Stationary Firemen strike against Chr. Heurich Brewing Co. Placed on file.

From Columbia Lodge of Machinists, No. 174, through its Agitation Committee, submitting list of news stands that have agreed to discontinue sale and handling of the Philadelphia Inquirer while that paper remains unfair to Philadelphia Typographical Union, No. 2. Referred to Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101.

The secretary read the following communication, with the statement that the delegates from the Carpenters claimed had been withheld on the meeting of the 18th inst. The communication bears date of the 20th:

CARPENTERS' JOINT DISTRICT COUNCIL,
WASHINGTON, D. C., July 20, 1904.

MR. CHAS. W. WINSLOW,
Secretary Central Labor Union, Greeting:

At a joint meeting of all union carpenters called by the Joint District Council to consider the wishes of the Carpenters in regard to again becoming connected with the Allied Council of Building Trades, the following resolutions were passed:

"Resolved by all Locals of Carpenters in joint session, That the Central Labor Union shall cause the reorganization of the Allied Council of Building Trades so that only bona fide building trades shall become affiliated with the section; that this meeting ask that all pertaining to strikes or lockouts be referred to the Joint District Council for its action; that in voting on strikes or lockouts the Carpenters shall be allowed to count the full membership of all the Carpenters' Locals.

"Resolved, That it is the sentiment of this Joint District Council that no local or branch shall be allowed to take out the Building Trades Section card or send any delegate to attend any meeting of the Allied Council until all locals and branches shall have become affiliated with the Building Trades Council."

These resolutions were passed as a whole by a vote of 173 in the affirmative and 3 in the negative.

It was decided by vote of those present unanimously not to parade on Labor Day.

Fraternally yours,
E. C. KELLOGG,
Secretary J. D. C.

On motion, a committee was appointed to ascertain if all present were in possession of the current password.

On motion, a committee was appointed to invite visiting International officers to seats on the platform.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Bakers Drivers: That at a meeting of that Local a protest was made against the Central Labor Union for permitting allied organizations to be used as a tool for organized capital.

Bricklayers: Called attention to attitude of United States Government toward organized labor.

Electrical Workers: Request that Edward Wheelock be placed on unfair list.

Hospital Attendants: Called for report of special committee on their case.

Musicians: Called attention to Chevy Chase and Lafayette Square Theater being on unfair list.

Stationary Firemen: That the reports in the daily papers to the effect that they had endeavored to cause the Chr. Heurich Brewing Co. to enter the Brewers Association and raise the price of beer was without foundation, and asked that a committee of seven be appointed to investigate the affairs of the Stationary Firemen. Motion amended to await report from Contract Committee.

Slate and Tile Roofers: That they would abide by any decision that the Central Labor Union might make in the Heurich matter.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The Grievance Committee reported progress on cases now in hand.

Contract Committee reported on Mill Workers case, and recommended that the matter be referred to Organization Committee. Adopted.

Contract Committee on Robert Portner case reported progress.

Contract Committee on Heurich Brewing Co. and Stationary Firemen submitted report.

A point of order was raised by Delegate McGuire as to whether a report submitted by a minority of a committee was not a report of the committee.

The point of order was not sustained by the chair, but on appeal from his decision, was sustained by the union.

The report of the Contract Committee on the request of the Stationary Firemen was taken up, and after much discussion was laid on the table.

Labor Day Committee reported progress.

President Dickman announced the following standing committees:

Grievance—N. C. Sprague, E. A. Bachrach, Wm. Silver, C. B. Faulbach, and P. F. Maguire.

Contract—C. E. Dietrich, H. T. La Clair, J. H. Brinkman, Daniel Desmond, and H. J. Wells.

Organization—D. A. Nesmith, C. A. Pfau, J. H. Brahler, L. E. Kearney, and E. J. Ratigan.

Credentials—Wm. H. Schaffer, M. Helmuth, and E. W. Patton.

Legislative—E. J. Roche, R. G. M. Ross, Milford Spohn, E. L. Adams, and Jere McCarthy.

Adjourned.

The Bricklayers Strike.

The strike of bricklayers on the War College grounds, noted last week, is to be considered at the meeting of Bricklayers Union, No. 1, to-night (Thursday). The question may assume greater scope in the settlement of the "open shop" proportion in Government work than any one presented as yet.

The men who left the job on account of the employment of a nonunion man have not suffered materially, as there is a dearth of good bricklayers at this season of the year, and it leaves that phase of the question in a position where no great sacrifice has been made to principle.

It is no doubt true, as claimed by leading members of the building trades, that incompetent and inefficient men have been put to work to help break the strike, and it is also true that the positions vacated by the men are open to them to return if they desire to work with the man Taylor, who, it appears, was put to work without proper certification.

Lieutenant Sewell will find that in forcing the issue with the bricklayers he takes up a proposition that requires tact and diplomacy, as that organization is prepared to fight for a principle to the end.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

Illustrating how several minds will follow the same trend, as I write a list of current works of fiction, born in the brain of different authors, with the following titles: Daughters of Nija, Daughters of Desperation, Daughter of the Union, Daughter of the Rich, Daughter of Dawn, Daughter of Dale, and Daughter of a Magnate.

Messrs. Trainham and Broas have returned from a ten-day trip to Brooklyn, ten hours of each day being devoted to a study of the intricacies of the Mergenthaler. According to an interesting report of Mr. B., each machine turned out of the establishment contains improvement over its predecessor. Two late ideas are a hook or catch to prevent a short line being sent upon its meanderings, and a device for reducing the temperature in the neighborhood of the mold-disc. Personally, I applaud the last-named proposition; us fat people suffer so with the heat.

Since a lad in the 'teens I have been in constant contact, in reportorial and other lines, with the business public, but have never had, in that varied experience, the open sesame extended with such alacrity as on my appearance at the Lanston Monotype factory in Philadelphia. By direction of the management, an expert attendant remained at my elbow hour after hour, delving into all details of the mechanism. A late item is to the effect that a monotype school will be established in Washington.

Go away from home to learn the news, as witness: One J. Kelly Seagraves is working at Allen, Lane & Scott's; Charley Sickles is a graduate of the Lanston Monotype factory; J. L. Rodier is in the employ of Philadelphia Union in its campaign against the Inquirer, speaking in Pottsville a few nights since.

You know the Indian, when a baby is born, lifts the flap of his tepee, and the first thing greeting his eye from his point of visual vantage becomes the name of the child. Were I naming Indian babies in Philadelphia I would call them "Girl-Running-a-News-Stand" and "Barber-Shop-Open-All-Night."

THE TRADES UNIONIST does not publish puzzle pictures, but a little conundrum may not be a amiss. Can any one guess who is "Water-wagon Willie?"

All should attend the next union meeting, as the proposed amendments to the International constitution will be discussed. It will be your own fault if you do not understand them when you come to vote.

One of our brawny probation men made a spontaneous attempt to see a certain high official. Forgetting in the excitement to reduce himself to a plain civilian, he sprang into the open with chest bare and sleeves rolled up to the shoulders. In this condition he was about to demand certain rights, when, by Gemini, his nerve left him and he returned to the woods sadder but wiser.

It has often been asserted (by bookbinders, chiefly) that the bookbinders, as a class, are far superior to printers, but whether that be true or not it is certainly evident that some bookbinders are very much less thick-skinned than printers. These reflections are a result of reading the little editorial note at the head of this column last week. When we read the "pull the plug" discussions, the many heated remarks of the various correspondents about "Pastoral Symphonies," "alleged poetry," and the savage animadversions on "Pard" Bloomer's admirable "stuff," we are led to believe that a bookbinder who complains of the harmless pleasantries in this column must be indeed thin-skinned and needs to see a dentist who could assist him to cut his eye teeth.

The Heurich Strike Settled.

The trouble at Heurich's brewery was of short duration. After the refusal of the Central Labor Union to take any decided action in the matter, better judgment asserted itself with the Firemen, and a little conference between President Healy and the Heurich people resulted in a settlement being reached that makes conditions better for the men involved.

The issue between the Brewers Association and the Heurich Brewing Co. remains unsettled, and it must be settled without the intervention of the trades unions represented in the Central Labor Union.

Death of Adam J. Sommers.

Adam J. Sommers, a well-known employe of the Government Printing Office bindery, died in Providence Hospital yesterday (27th) of typhoid fever. Mr. Sommers spent a few days in New York City during the early part of the present month, and on returning here became ill, and went to the hospital. He was a man of good habits and had many friends in the city, having been a resident of the city for the past twelve years.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

Leaving beautiful Chamonix Monday afternoon by an electric-propelled train we descended a beautiful valley to Le Fayet-St. Gervias, where we changed to the P. L. M. R. R. for Geneva, arriving early in the evening. The customs authorities were very kind at Geneva and passed us through without examination upon telling them we had nothing dutiable. The trip from Chamonix to Geneva is a delightful one, the snow-capped peak of Mt. Blanc being visible a greater part of the way. We passed through many pretty little villages, deep gorges, and through well-cultivated valleys.

We celebrated the Fourth by attending the Kursaal, a large building with magnificent gardens. One part of the Kursaal contains a theatre and the other part is fitted up with gambling tables of various kinds. It is a very attractive place and is well patronized. The hotels and many other buildings displayed the Stars and Stripes and late in the evening the sky was brilliantly illuminated with fireworks.

The following day we had the pleasure of renewing an acquaintance begun in Washington some fourteen years ago, and received an urgent invitation to spend a few days with him at his home, but as the weather was very warm we decided to press on toward the mountains and a cooler atmosphere. In the afternoon we boarded a steamer on Lake Geneva for Lausanne, where we arrived about 8 o'clock. This is a popular trip for tourists and the boats are patronized much more than the railroads. The banks are lined with many charming villas, back of which are rich farm lands. Not far from Geneva is the chateau once occupied by the celebrated Madam de Stael.

A little further on is the chateau of Prangins, once occupied by Empress Josephine.

We left the steamer at Ouchy and engaged a carriage to take us up the steep hill to Lausanne, where we spent the night. The next day we rode over the city, which is built on a series of of terraces and commands a fine view of mountains and lake.

The following afternoon we took the train for Berne, the capital of the Swiss Confederation. The city is built on a peninsula, with the river Aare flowing a hundred feet below. The situation is very fine and the city as a whole is extremely interesting and attractive. The city is peculiarly celebrated for its fine views of the Alps and the Alpine glow.

We engaged a carriage and drove over the city, seeing the principal buildings, winding up at the famous clock, which proclaims the approach of each hour by the crowing of a cock. Just before the hour a troop of bears marches in procession around a sitting figure. The city has many curious fountains and buildings, some of them very ancient. In the afternoon we were shown through the capitol building by an official. The legislative halls are very fine and well arranged. The upper house has seats for 44 members and the lower house for 167.

In the evening we continued our trip to the curious old town of Thun (pronounced "tune"), where we put up for the night. Above the town rises the tower of Castle of Lahringen-Kyburg, built in 1182. This is a popular resort for English tourists. The next day we boarded a steamer on Lake Thun for Interlaken, where we arrived after a sail of about two hours. The views from the deck of a steamer is a magnificent one. Snow-capped mountains can be seen on all sides, while in front the mighty peaks of Jungfrau, Monch, and Eiger loom up like the giants they are. There are many beautiful chateaus and villages along the shores of the lake, surrounded by magnificent parks. The boat touched at Spiez, a charming resort. The German princes are now stopping at this delightful resort.

Interlaken, situated between the lakes of Thun and Brienz, is one of the best known summer resorts in Switzerland. Counts, princes, etc., are numerous at the hotels. There is a magnificent boulevard running the length of the city called Hoheweg. The street is shaded by old walnut and plane trees and lined by large hotels and very attractive shops.

Yesterday we ascended by mountain train to Scheidegg, 6,770 feet. It is a grand trip, taking one to the great glaciers of the mighty Jungfrau. The line begins at Interlaken and after many curves and steep ascents we reached Lauterbrunnen. There is a fine cascade here, called Staubbach, the water falling 980 feet, but before reaching the ground is converted into spray. Lauterbrunnen is so closed in by high mountains that the sun's rays in July does not penetrate the valley until 7 a. m. and in winter until 11 a. m. The grade of this mountain road leading to Murren averages 55 feet to the hundred. After leaving Lauterbrunnen the train ascended to Wengen, then to Wengern Alp, and finally to Scheidegg, where we spent three hours. We came down by way of Grindelwald, where the grade is much steeper than in the ascent. While the views obtained here are as fine as one could wish, we rather prefer that of Zermatt and Chamonix. Each one of these mountain resorts has different views, all of them grand ones, but there is a certain charm about Zermatt that can not be found in the others. We will take up our journey Tuesday morning by way of Lake Brienz to Zurich and then into Austria, stopping at Innsbruck, from where we make our way into Germany, with Munich as our first stop, going as far as Berlin, and then to the Rhine district.

We have heard of the Union election and wish to congratulate the successful candidates.

Yours respectfully,
T. E. BUCKLAND.

St. Louis Over the C. & O.

Plans are being perfected by the committee of the Ex-Delegates' Association for the trip to St. Louis to the I. T. U. convention and the World's Fair. Special Pullman sleepers to accommodate the Washington party will be attached to the 2.30 p. m. train leaving Washington on Friday, August 5, and arriving at St. Louis 6.15 next day. Double berths, $5 each way. Round-trip rates from Washington: Fifteen-day tickets, good to return within 15-days from day of sale, $21.50. Sixty-day tickets, $26, optional one way by Chicago, with ten-day stop over at that point. Ten-day stop over at Cincinnati on both 15 day and 60 day tickets. Reduced rates can be secured to St. Louis via Washington, and a number from Eastern and Southern cities are expected to join the party here for the trip. Reception committees will meet the party on arrival at St. Louis and escort the visitors to the I. T. U. and local headquarters at the Inside Inn. President Berg has appointed a committee from Columbia Union to co-operate with the Ex-Delegates' Association for the entertainment of visitors who will pass through the city on the way to St. Louis. The details of the entertainment will be looked after by the joint committee from the union and the Association.

The Ex-Delegates' Association invites delegates, ex-delegates, other members of the craft, ladies, and friends to accompany them on this trip. Buy a ticket over the Chesapeake and Ohio and enjoy the trip. If you want any further information inquire of

THURSDAY, JULY 28, 1904.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

"These trades unions just make me sick," remarked a young fellow to me the other evening while pursuing his alternately lofty and lowly occupation as elevator conductor in a down-town building.

"No," I replied, "you have been pugnance for medicine. If you'd try sick all along and have an invalid's re-the trades-union cure you'd soon be better, and if you'd keep up the treatment you'd soon be well."

He looked at me in amazement, probably because my capitalization appearance was in ill keeping with my sentiments.

"Well, what good do they do?" he asked.

"One thing they do is to secure for their members about 100 per cent better wages than those in unorganized occupations receive," I replied.

"Don't non-union men get as good wages as union men, I'd like to know?" he demanded.

"Pretty nearly, in organized trades," said I, "for their employers have to pay them approximately the same as union men in order to prevent them from joining the unions. But look at the wages paid in the unorganized occupations."

"Name some of them," said he.

"Bookkeepers, for one, I answered. "You can get all the bookkeepers you want for $12 a week and some of them get as little as $5, and that is really a skilled occupation, requiring knowledge and experience. You can't point to a single organized trade in Washington in which the wages are not from 50 per cent higher than the greater sum to five times that of the lesser."

"Name another," said he.

"Stenographers and typewriters," I replied. "If you have any knowledge at all on the subject you know what beggarly pay they get, and who will say that is not a skilled occupation?"

"Well, how much do they get?"

"From $3 a week up. Of course there are men and women of extraordinary ability who receive splendid salaries as stenographers and typewriters, but we can't take the exceptions as a guide. You can get capable people for $10 or $12 a week in this line, and all you want of them. Do you suppose that would be the case if they were organized into a union?"

"Well, I don't believe in unions," he said, "and if I were an employer I wouldn't have a union man about the place."

"I feel sure that you wouldn't," I answered, "and I dread the day when you will become an employer out of the accumulations of your salary in the unorganized occupation of elevator man."

As I left him I could but realize that organized labor can expect but little mercy at his hands.

By the election of William Briggs as President of the Senate of the National Union, for the second time has a member of Columbia Typographical Union, an official of the Government Printing Office, and a resident of the city of Washington filled that exalted position. Capt. H. T. Brian was similarly honored a number of years ago, and no two men have worked harder for the success of this splendid institution than have he and Mr. Briggs, nor could any have met with greater success, for the number of the membership in the National Union in the District of Columbia is greater than that of any other similar institution. Mr. Briggs was elected president at the Mackinac Island session, whence he, Capt. Brian, and Joseph Dierken escorted the body of the Senator from this jurisdiction, the late Fred A. Hall, to this city.

It was reported last Saturday that a consignment of Lanston machines had arrived for the "Spess" and would be speedily set up and put in operation. The monotype machines are believed to be better adapted to the specifications work than the linotypes, I understand, and probably are because of the great number of unusual characters used. The linotype machines for the Record room will soon be in position, according to the papers. The coming of the machines is being accepted so philosophically that there will probably be no occasion to send for Sherman Bell and his militia when they are installed.

That strike of the firemen of the Heurich Brewing Company is one of the most remarkable in the history of trades unionism, as far as I can understand it. But it is not well for us to criticise unfavorably the action of unions simply because we are not acquainted with the ethics of their organization. There have been times when strikes of typographical unions seemed entirely unwarranted by those unacquainted with the technique of the trade, as, for instance double pay for rule-and-figure matter when it was actually "fatter" than straight matter at single price, or for full agate measurement for great displayed advertisements in which there may not have been a line of type as small as pica, the theory in each case being perfectly right— in the former, that all tabular matter shall be paid double price because on an average it is worth it, and in the latter that the price set is not the price for straight matter, but for all that goes in the paper. Each trade must of necessity be the judge of its rights and wrongs, and it is the duty of all other labor organizations to accept their judgment. That is the only rule by which we can except the support of other trades in our contentions, and we must concede to others all that we demand for ourselves.

Henry W. Gray, of the First Division, has about the meanest disposition of anyone I know. A few mornings ago, attempting to board an H street car, the only vacant seat he could find was an inner one, and the end-seat hog who blocked his way to it, after Gray made two or three ineffectual attempts to climb over him—Gray weighs 320 pounds—rose and stepped onto the footboard to enable him to get in. Instead of taking the inner seat, Gray played end-seat hog himself, and so far as history records has not heard the expostulations of his porcine predecessor yet. After riding a square or so on the footboard the original proprietor dropped off.

"There never was so much copy in the office before at this time of the year in its history" is the story I have heard two or three times from those in a position to know. This is very welcome news indeed, for generally work is scarce during June, July, August, and a good part of September. The growth of the work is steady and regular, doubling every seven or eight years. It makes a fellow notice it who can remember when thirty men set the specifications, a similar number did the work of the Job Room, fifteen read all the proof, less than a hundred comprised the "Document Room," and forty or fifty worked in "Botany Bay," the other divisions not having been yet thought of, much less organized.

Now, if anybody wants to subscribe for the Masonic Disciple, I will be his messenger and see that his dollar, name, and address reach the office of that paper. In my capacity as assistant editor I am not too swelled to do a little in the way of vulgar business details. It is a paper that every Mason ought to have, who feels interested in the news of the order. I know that, because I am helping to make it such a paper.

The Post a few days ago had a copied article on the insolence of unions in demanding that manufacturers place the union label on their goods. I don't believe in insisting that anyone shall use the union label who does not want to; but if all union men will refuse to buy goods that do not have it, the manufacturer will soon want to. I firmly believe in persuasion in preference to arbitrary demands. Let us persuade the manufacturer to use the label.

I am going to take my leave in a lump this year. Last year I took it a day at a time, and when it was all gone I felt as though I had not had any. But whichever way I have taken it I have never let any of it get frost-bitten yet. Of course it is a good thing to have on hand if one gets sick, but it has been my experience that I never get sick as long as I have any leave coming. Thirty days' leave in a lump, to be spent in the valley of the Tiber—that is as great happiness as anyone should want and the one thing to make a man willing to go to work when it has expired.

The National Union check in payment of the death claim in the case of the late Fred A. Hall arrived in this city before his body did after his sad passing away at Mackinac Island last week. This was the quickest work that I ever heard of. Of course, the death occuring almost in the presence of the Senate officers, there was nothing to investigate and nothing to verify, but it was astonishingly quick work in any event.

It is with the deepest sorrow that I am compelled to state, on unimpeachable authority, that on last Monday night, the Third Division having worked overtime, my friend Belcher, at the release, after washing up preparatory to going home, failed to Pull the Plug, and when his attention was called to the fact of such failure on his part he still refused to Pull the Plug, and that he actually left the office persisting in his refusal to Pull the Plug. Now, what is he, in the light of what he has said about other persons similarly offending.

Marshall Cushing.

In the current issue of the Labor News (Colorado Springs, Colo.) W. E. Shields pays his respects to Marshall Cushing, secretary of the "Parry" Business Men's Association:

"After criticising 'irresponsible labor agitators,' it passes comprehension why a set of so-called hard-headed business men should select such tools as Craig and Marshall Cushing to run their business for them. These human derelicts, failures in the business world, have fallen into soft places through the gullibility of these same "hard-headed" business men. Cushing, as secretary of Parry's business wreckers, tried to keep the National Democratic convention from inserting a 'labor' plank in its platform, but, as usual, failed. I heard a story that Craig had to get out of Detroit on account of a questionable transaction, but can't vouch for the truth of it—yet, I do know Cushing and his record, however, and will give the latter as it was passed before my purview. The first known of Cushing he was private secretary to Postmaster-General Wanamaker, and was dropped off by the latter. He married a rich woman and tried to enter the literary and business world. He bought a printing plant in Washington, hiring union labor, but one of his peculiarities was that he never paid off until the writer held a seance with him and threatned to call the men out unless they were paid according to agreement. Cushing would groan over the tyranny of unions, but finally dig up. This state of affairs went on for a few weeks and as Cushing had blown in about all his wife's dowry, or all she would give him, his business was closed up and he had to hustle. The next I heard of Marshall he was in Salt Lake, from where he wrote me asking for a letter of recommendation telling what a stanch friend of labor he was and wanting me to blow his name in the union bottle. As I couldn't answer his letter in the way he desired I have never learned the graft he was trying to work, but that it didn't succeed is evidenced by his present position. Workmen may be gullible, but they are not a marker to the Parryites, it seems. As a literary genius, Cushing didn't rank with a college boy reporter; as a business man he was a flat failure; as a buncoer of union men he was caught in clumsily trying to turn the first trick. At last he has struck his level as secretary of an organization for the destruction of labor unions. For the good of the workmen it is to be hoped the Parryites will hire more men of his caliber. Cushing and Craig. Arcades ambo."

THE LATE FRED A. HALL.

Resolutions of Respect Passed by the Combined Proof Room Chapels.

The Proof Room Chapel, Dr. James R. Armstrong, chairman, having invited the members of the Annex Proof Room Chapel to meet with them, passed the following resolutions at a meeting held last Friday to pay respect to the memory of the late Assistant Foreman Fred A. Hall:

Whereas though the coming of death to those with whom we have long been on terms of intimate friendship is at all times saddening and a reminder of the end that must come to all, grief is more poignant and the loss more deeply felt when the stricken one has been as a brother to us, and by having but reached the meridian of life has not prepared us as we are prepared for the going of those the shadows of whose lives have begun to lengthen; and

Whereas long association with him who is the subject of these memorial resolutions has endeared him to us all and brought to many a truer appreciation of the depth of the friendship of the loyal and noble-hearted; and

Whereas the unexpectedness of the call by which our friend and brother was taken from us has intensified the grief felt at his demise; therefore

Be it resolved by the Proof Room of the Government Printing Office, That in the death of our late friend and assistant foreman, Frederick A. Hall, with almost startling suddenness, at Mackinac Island, whither he had gone in the execution of a duty placed upon him by a noble society, which had honored him in appreciation of his merits and ability, we recognize the Divine will and as such we bow to it, though deeply mourning his untimely death.

Resolved, That we tender our sincerest and most heartfelt sympathy to his grief-stricken widow and his sorrowing relatives in the loss of one whose life was so much to them and who have so much reason to treasure his memory, firm in the faith that he has gone to the reward a well-spent life and faithful service have merited.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the widow of our departed friend, and that copies be furnished to the TRADES UNIONIST, The Typographical Journal, and the city papers for publication.

Abuse His Reward.

The most abused man in the ranks of organized labor is he who tries to better the condition of his fellow-workers. It does not matter how sincere he is, or whether he is paid for the time he loses. And it is often the case that the man who does the most work in this line is the less thanked, not to say paid. Employers call him the agitator, and assert if it were not for him they could hire cheaper help. Employers do not stop to think that the poorest paid people in the land to-day are the officers of the labor organizations. If some employers had to do all the work that is performed by good and true union men they would throw up their hands in holy horror. The labor leader is a benefactor. It is through his efforts that fair and short hours are granted; it is he who fights the battle of his many followers, and it is he who is first discharged when the occasion requires a laying off or a reduction of expenses. He is a bold, bad man—in the eyes of his employer. And yet this same man may have a large family to support, and the time he loses is his own loss. The men who stump the corridors of the legislative halls looking after labor legislation are dubbed agitators. What should you call the well-paid lawyer who looks after the interests of corporations around the capitol? They are not agitators. Oh, no! They must be called legal gentlemen. It is only the man who has the courage to voice the sentiments of the oppressed toiler that is an agitator.—The Labor Leader.

THAT "BRILLIANT RETREAT."

DAVID ECCLES.

Instructed and gagged, I am neutral, you know,
And don't care a clam how this Jap war may go;
But I rise to inquire, and in language discreet,
Why these Pagans ne'er yet made "a brilliant retreat."

Don't we read every day how they ought to have won,
And how the brave Cossacks were well-nigh undone
Had they not at the last snatched success from defeat
By cunningly planning "a brilliant retreat?"

It is plain as can be that these heathens unskilled
Are being outwitted and outgeneraled,
Though forts they may capture and skirmishes beat
Till they learn how to manage "a brilliant retreat!"

He who fights, it is said, and will then run away,
May "bob up serenely" on some other day!
And who can this maxim apply and repeat
Like the wonderful Slav in his "brilliant retreat?"

Oh, why have these Buddhists and Babes of the Sun
Never yet learned the art how to skillfully run,
When all they now need to make glory complete
Is to know how to dodge in "a brilliant retreat?"

Forever retreating the Russians will go
Till they wear out the patience and strength of their foe,
As a Kansas jack-rabbit by doubling neat
Tuckers out the poor dog in "a brilliant retreat!"

WASHINGTON, July 24, 1904.

The latest reports of the great victory for the union shop in New York City shows it to be more decisive and complete than was anticipated. The Manufacturers' Association, which was behind the building contractors, has met a veritable Waterloo, the union having won out on every point all along the line. The victory of the building trades unions is one of the most complete ever won anywhere by organized labor and is the most disastrous defeat experienced by the Parryites since they started the campaign in favor of the open shop. That question is as dead as a door nail in New York City now, and the union shop is a fixture.

Judge Brown, of the Supreme Court of Minnesota, rendered a decision recently on the open shop question. Among other things he says: "Labor organizations or unions are not unlawful, but are legitimate and proper for the advancement of the members and those dependent upon them. The members, therefore, may singly or in a body quit the service of their employer for the purpose of bettering their condition, and may by peaceful means persuade others to join them, and as a means to that end may refuse to allow their members to work in places where nonunion labor is employed."

When a man constructs air castles he is apt to have lofty views.

The Colorado Mining Trouble.

Chauncey Thomas, in August Success.

I have worked with a shovel in a Denver smelter and know the conditions there—they are inhuman. They turn stone into gold and men into stone. Three shifts of eight hours each can be worked just as well as two shifts of twelve hours each—but the twelve-hour shift is cheaper—cheaper in money—but not in men. The smelter men asked for shorter hours. Capital refused—or dodged, gave excuses, delayed, and acted in bad faith. The smelter men did not strike. Labor and capital and the people in general—all three dreaded a strike; so labor, through the ballot, requesting the public to give it human hours before the furnaces, and, when the ballots were counted, it was found that the people had said "Yes."

But capital said "No," and capital fought its determined fight, fought it as slowly as ever paid lawyers could drag it, through one court to another, and at length up the Supreme Court of Colorado. There capital won. The law that the people of the whole State had said should be a law, the Supreme Court held to be unconstitutional, although five neighboring States—Utah, in particular—had almost exactly the same law, which the Supreme Courts of those States all had held to be valid in itself and good for the people of their respective States. Capital paid its lawyers—and smiled. The smelter men still sweated twelve hours, seven days a week, in the cool furnace glow. They did not strike.

Once more they asked the people for help, that they might be men and not brutes, and once more the public, through the ballot box, by the overwhelming vote of 42,000 majority—irrespective of political parties—in a voting population of about 120,000—two to one—said "Yes; the State Constitution shall be so amended." Capital again said "No"—but in a whisper. When the Legislature met, bribery defeated the twice-ballot-expressed wish of the people. The Legislature adjourned without making operative the amendment to the Constitution—or even trying to.

Then the smelter men struck. Six long years had they toiled twelve hours a day, Sunday included, before those scorching furnace doors while waiting, not for justice, but for humanity—and the law had once said it was helpless, and a second time had answered, "There is no law—there is only bribery." Then the smelter men struck. The gold miners seeing that, if the smelter men were sent back to their blazing toil for twelve hours every day in the year, and made into slaves as were the coal miners, their own turn would come next from the same masters, struck in unison.

In purchasing goods from advertisers in this paper, do not fail to mention the fact that you saw the advertisement in THE TRADES UNIONIST. It will accord you good treatment at the hand of the salesman, and incidentally help the paper.

Makers-up Will H. Chase and W. E. Lewis, of the Y, are on leave of absence.

A little girl baby, the first to brighten the home of Winslow Lewis, arrived last Thursday.

Jimmie Weaver spent Sunday in Baltimore, and wined and dined with the exclusive Back Bay set.

W. F. Crump, C. C. Auracher, and John T. Haskins resumed labor last Friday after an absence of fifteen days.

Philip Steele is at present a member of the bachelor's club, Mrs. Steele and daughter being at Bethany Bay, on the Jersey shore.

John Greene, jr., was transferred to the proof room on Monday. Since the breaking up of the night force Johnnie has been connected with the Y.

Two more temporaries have "accepted" positions in this division and went to work on Monday. Jas. Perkins was placed on slug 55, and Charles Hildebrand on 56.

Three temporaries were assigned to this division last week. Jas. F. Small was placed on the same slug he occupied last winter—18, while John S. Macklin is on 21, and C. S. Shutterly 27.

Geo. J. Woodgate and Dan L. Sansom were the only compositors to start on leave last Thursday. Both are firm believers in Washington as a summer resort and will spend their vacation in the city and vicinity.

Fred Berger has joined the northeast Washington delegation, having moved over on F street last Saturday. And that reminds me that he is the gentleman to leave your subscription with for THE TRADES UNIONIST.

The timekeeper's desk has been supplied with a top piece that is a work of art. The cabinet makers employed by the Government are about as fine as they make them, and the work turned out by them would be hard to excel.

James F. Small, who has just returned from his home in New York State, brought with him a number of beautiful illustrated books of Lake Keuka, N. Y., which he will be pleased to give to anyone desiring information of an excellent place to spend a vacation.

After completing fifteen days' leave, Frank Lloyd has been compelled to get an extension of another fifteen days on account of the serious condition of his leg. The original trouble started from a bruise, and most skillful treatment has been required to save the limb from amputation.

Last week I received word from Mrs. Phillip, wife of Morris L. Phillip, who recently went to his home in Illinois to undergo an operation for appendicitis, saying the operation had not been as successful as expected, and several months would probably elapse before Mr. Phillip would be able to return.

C. L. Williams gave a fine exhibition of an absent-minded man one morning last week. That is, I suppose it would come under that head, for after getting on a crowded elevator he presented the elevator man with a street car ticket. Mr. Williams says it was force of habit, but the boys in the bill end express doubts about it.

It is with pleasure I acknowledge the receipt of a copy of I. T. U. officers report for 1904. Whether the distribution was general or whether I am particularly favored I do not know, but anyhow, Messrs. Lynch and Bramwood, here's to you. I should like very much to attend the convention, but this is a poor year for alternates.

E. F. Geyer has returned to this division. For several months past Eddie has been doing duty in the upholstered division, where the silk-stocking force look after the averages of the other fellow. It is a pleasure to note that he returns with the same genial disposition he possessed when he left us last winter, unspoiled by his sojourn in the fairyland of the G. P. O.

By the prompt payment of the claim for insurance on the life of the late Frederick A. Hall, the National Union has established for itself a record unprecedented in life insurance circles. Two days before the burial of Mr. Hall, a certificate of $2,000 was forwarded to the widow. In the matter of the payment of death claims the National Union is always prompt, but in this instance it stands the unchallenged champion of them all.

I have been taken to task by some and congratulated by other members of the Auxiliary for my alleged interference in the affairs of that organization. I assure the ladies I have no desire whatever to interfere. I sincerely hope that no dissensions may arise in their ranks. However, there will hardly come a time when the entire membership will see things in the same light. I wish it were possible that at the next convention Miss Laura Gordon might be elected national president; Mrs. Huston vice-president, and Miss Katherine Spencer secretary. But as that is hardly within the range of possibilities and it is possible to elect Miss Gordon, I trust the ladies may see their way clear to work hard and bring to Washington the presidency of the Ladies' Auxiliary.

Second Division.

F. H. Jones resigned Monday.

The First Division correspondent writes very snappy readable locals these days.

Country life is the title of a verbal serial story now running in this division. See Tom L. Jones.

Messrs. Frank D. King and John E. Wayson were new temporary men who went to work Monday.

All who have explored that strange land and consorted with the natives thereof appreciated Oliver McCardell's treatment of his visit to the "Spefs" which appeared in last week's paper.

If Organizer Deitrich, of the Central Labor Union, succeeds in organizing the typewriters, he will have done a mammoth work, which will result in much good to themselves and to the older unions as well.

A badly worked-up department proof came to this room the other day with the marginal request to the foreman of printing as follows: "Please see that this gets into the hands of an intelligent workman." Sometimes department copy is not all it could be.

The chairman's report for the second quarter showed that this room had given out on subscription papers over $82. Counting if 1,200 printers in the office gave at this rate, it would make nearly $4,000 a year. And this is besides the charity of the union.

It is reported that among the many fines a Jefferson Guard of the World's Fair is liable is that for flirting, which is from $1 to $3, owing to the flagrancy of the case. That is indeed punishment, for if any man has chances to flirt, it is a soldier with a uniform.

Tom L. Jones, treasurer of G. P. O. Council, National Union, had a check for the amount of Fred A. Hall's policy before the remains arrived in Washington. Had he have been at Mackinac he could have paid the widow within a half hour after her husband's death.

"Billy" Briggs, as he is known by his friends, was elected president of the National Union at their late convention in Michigan, although he left before the election took place. Mr. Briggs has been the estimate clerk of the G. P. O. for some time, but before that worked on the Star.

If there is to be a new paymaster, no more efficient man could be secured than Eddie Wilbur. He is accurate, safe, and accommodating. As he sharply calls out the names and glances quickly at the recipient he seems to know every one. His visits are very popular in every division and their latch string always hangs out to him.

The proposition to fine members of Columbia Union $5 if they patronize Chevy Chase will not meet with much approval. First, because there is two sides to the musicians controversy and secondly, this place is generally the only respectable place people can go for an evening of pleasure or dancing. Most other resorts sell intoxicants. An unpopular boycott will never succeed.

The average laboring man has trouble enough already trying to refrain from intemperance and gambling, without his central body arranging an annual outing at a betting and drinking resort, such as a race track. It puts temptation in the way of many and makes a rough place, where men do not care to take their families. The unions would be stronger if their members were not so profligate with their money and conducted themselves in a more dignified manner.

Third Division.

Public band concerts will be given as follows during the week ending Thursday, August 4:

Thursday, July 28—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Calvary Band, Fort Myer and Iowa Circle.

Friday, July 29—Engineer Band, Engineer Barracks and Smithsonian Grounds.

Saturday, July 30—Marine Band, White House Grounds.

Monday, August 1—Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Dupont Circle.

Tuesday, August 2—Engineer Band, Engineer Barracks and Iowa Circle.

Wednesday, August 3—Marine Band, Capitol Grounds.

Thursday, August 4—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Judiciary Park.

Messrs. R. L. S. Halpenny, H. H. Brayton, R. L. Townsend, and J. W. Belcher begin their leave on Thursday morning.

W. C. Krause, who recently concluded his term as a temporary in this division, intends taking a course of study at the Washington Linotype School.

Last Monday night I got the "all," and in my haste to turn in my take neglected to add the "all mark." Tuesday morning five people brought me the proof at different times "just to show me what I had lost."

That's right, dear Bloomer, I know you must feel a heap better, now that you have confessed you didn't know what you were talking about. It takes courage to give in, but you have taken the only wise and manly course.

It has happened just as I supposed. All Cliff Scott wanted was a rest. Now he is beating all comers at checkers. If any further proof were needed that his vacation did him good, it would be found in the fact that he passed around the cigars last Tuesday night.

With all his other moral and social accomplishments, Will W. Frye is something of a singer as well as a poet. One of his favorite solos, the words of which he is credited with composing, and which he may often be heard singing, is the following:

The gilded saloon is inviting,
Decked out with its tinsel and show;
But if you are tempted to enter,
Have courage, my boy, to say No!

Robert J. Mears was dropped from the roll last Thursday night, his term as a temporary appointee having expired, but was reappointed to the force Friday and assigned to a frame in the Official Gazette division. Mr. Mears showed himself to be a capable workman during his stay with us, and while we are sorry to lose him we are glad for his sake that the Public Printer is not unappreciative of his merits.

It seems strange to have so much rush copy in midsummer. It is amusing at times to hear the boys planning what they will do after 4 30, and then to watch the expression on their faces when the message, "Work to-night!" is passed along the room. It is always my luck to have given away what little luncheon I have left over, just a few minutes before I discover we are to remain for an hour or two; then if anybody asks if I have anything to eat, it makes me feel twice as hungry. So I have concluded to do my own eating in future.

In the Post last Monday morning one of the knockers wanted to know why the Marine Band played such "heavy music." With very little exception, the music furnished by the Marine Band is, in my opinion, delightful. There are usually seven numbers on the program, only one of which, as a rule, being what may be called "heavy" music. The selections are nearly always from the most brilliant compositions of the best musicians, the only exception being when a soloist interpolates a popular song. I presume this knocker would have us substitute the music of the "Idol's Eye" or "Wizard of the Nile" for such overtures as "Tannhauser" and "William Tell;" he would prefer a waltz by DeKoven to one by Strauss; or he would prefer such trash as "Navajo" or "Anona" to "Invitation to the Dance" or Mascagni's "Intermezzo." Lieutenant Santelman, in my opinion (and I say it in all modesty), has trained the Marine Band with consummate skill, and not the least of his accomplishments is that of making a program. If my friend the knocker wants to hear "light" music, he can be accommodated all winter at some of the theaters, or he can listen to that furnished four nights in the week by the Cavalry and Engineer Bands at the various city parks; but in the name of all that is elevating and inspiring in music, let us keep the Marine Band up to its present standard.

Wageworkers of Bohemia.

In Bohemia every wageworker, of whatever sex or age, must have a "work book," which contains his personal description and history and his employer's indorsement. Permission to travel in search of work must be indorsed by one of the local authorities. In changing locations a certificate from original place of residence must be secured and filed at the new location.

Stubbs at the Fair.

"Billy" Stubbs is now instructing on the Merganthaler machine at the St. Louis fair. Anyone can find him in Section II, Liberal Arts building. He writes a friend in this city: "Greetings from the fair: I shall deem it a pleasure to have the privilege of explaining the new features of the linotype to any of the Washington boys who may visit the fair."

LONG PRIMER SORTS.

Hereafter (unless unduly provoked) the writer of this column will abstain from too vituperative personalities. He did not commence the unpleasantness which has raged of late, and only prodded Brother Belcher because he thought it well to teach that gentleman a needed lesson. The lesson having been taught, it would be needless cruelty to cause further suffering on Brother Belcher's part. At the same time it will be well for our friend to behave himself. For he may rest assured that future offensive outbreaks by him may lead to unpleasant results. And, among other things, this means that us sawbuck poets shall be permitted to hand out all the "dreadful stuff" we please without frivolous interference by Brother Belcher.

It is stated that there are individuals in the Government Printing Office who eat pie with a spoon. The plug question being settled, here is a great chance for some intrepid reformer.

***

PITY THE POOR OLD POET.

A poet old, spavined, and slow;
Wrote verses as pure as the snow
But they called his stuff bad,
And then he got mad
And howled like the demons below.

***

"Vacation at the Spefs," by Oliver C. McCardell in last week's paper, was a most enjoyable contribution. The Spess has been the subject of considerable readable matter, but none better in its way than this. Let us hope that Oliver will contribute something more of the same kind.

***

"DREADFUL STUFF."

The maiden just free from boarding school
Thinks life an Elysian dream;
Ah, how should she know of life's sorrow and woe?
She doesn't pay for the cream.

Oh, gaily the young man humps his spine
In pursuit of the fleeting baseball;
But little he sees of the agonies
Which may come to us one and all.

And we ever shall find in this good old world,
Where the sheep must mix with the goats,
That the warp of woe has its woof of joy,
If we only get down to our oats.

THE PULL LE PLUGGE CONCERT.
(With Apologies to the Musical Critics of the G. P. O.)

The recent concert by Maestro Pull le Plugge's Sublunary Serenaders was a big success. The most intricate passages from the compositions of such eminent masters as Bhadkhatz, Thomkatz, Waulercauler, and Scratchnybach were rendered in a manner creditable alike to the energy of the performers and the forbearance of the audience, which latter, it may be well to remark, was large and intelligent.

The first number was a masterpiece entitled "Dreadful Stuff," sung by Signor Pull le Plugge. It brought down the house. Signor Pull le Plugge received an ong core, to which he responded with that old familiar favorite, "What I Don't Know Ain't Worth Knowing."

The eminent basso, Herr von Bugg, followed with a serio-comic song entitled, "Softly Now the Washbowl Gurgles." The Herr Basso likewise received an ong core.

Young-Man-With-His-Nose-Against-the-Pane sang with much feeling the beautiful "Song of the Preadamite Bugg." Unfortunately this singer's high notes got entangled in the rafters and were not recovered in time for an ong core.

Ole Phard sang the Swampoodlese ballade which has made him famous, "Come Let Us Reason Together; or, Don't Hit Your Brother Till He Hits You." In response to an ong core he sang "I Have Swatted the Swatter Who Swatted Me."

The song and chorus, "Claw His Hair," was rendered feelingly by the troupe. It was ong cored.

The performance concluded with the mournful moonlight madrigal, "See the Bugg So Madly Raving," sung by Signor Pull le Plugge. One ceases to doubt the stories told of the Signor's wonderful volume of sound after the first whiff of ragtime rises from his throat. He has one of those prehensile voices which cling to the coat-tails of utterance in silvery discords of gnarled and twisted melody. And again it rises on cyclonic wings which beat against the very battlements of the Temple of Silence itself and grind its granitic walls into a dusty swirl of sound that makes the smiling landscape think it is about to be rolled together like a scroll and filed away for future reference. The truth is that Signor Pull le Plugge's voice has too much ego for its compass. He received a sour apple core, as it was discovered at a late hour that there were not enough ongs to go around.

Victory for Plumbers.

The Journeymen Plumbers Union, of Cincinnati, Ohio, after a ten-months struggle with the master plumbers, assisted by the Manufacturers Association, in endeavoring to create the "open shop," have won a complete victory. Few strikes in recent years have been fought with such determination on each side, the courts being invoked to punish alleged assaults on "scabs" and injunctions were constantly sought by the master plumbers to break the spirit of the strikers, who were compelled to have counsel employed to watch their interests in the courts.

The terms agreed upon are as follows: The shops to be union in all branches; arbitration to be substituted for sympathetic strikes; journeymen to receive $4 a day; one apprentice to be allowed to every two journeymen; all nonunion men to be displaced; eight hours to be the work day.

The arrangement is to last two years, and all litigation against the union and the Building Trades Council is to be withdrawn.

A tailor died in Chicago at the age of thirty-three, and the doctor gave the cause of his death as "premature senility." In other words, the tailor died of old age. A resident of a college settlement made an investigation and found that this tailor had been running a sewing machine ever since he had been a six-year-old boy. Hard work had stopped his growth and made him an old man at a time when he should have been in the prime of his manhood.—Exchange.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of July 26, 1904.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8 o'clock p. m. by Chairman Wells.

Roll call disclosed the presence of all officers.

CREDENTIALS.

Tile Layers, No. 2: W. E. Thompson, Fred Richardson, and Daniel Dowd.

Steam Fitters, No. 10: Charles E. Allison, Thomas L. Hess, and E. J. Ratigan.

Steam Fitters Helpers, No. 28: B. L. Harris, Edward Dewdney, and T. F. Flanagan.

The credentials were examined by Delegates Russell, Sheetz, and Desmond, and the committee making a favorable report the delegates-elect who were present were obligated and seated.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Chr. Heurich Brewing Co., acknowledging the receipt of contract. Placed on file.

From Maj. John Biddle, Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, stating that, after investigation by the Commissioners, he had directed the superintendent of repairs to pay the tinners employed in the repair shop $3.50 per day.

The secretary was directed to acknowledge the receipt of the letter and to express to the Commissioners the appreciation of the action of the Commissioners by the Council, and to forward a copy of the letter to the Tinners Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Delegate Daly reported the action of the Central Labor Union in refusing to enter into the controversy between the different breweries, brought on by the strike of firemen employed in Heurich's brewery. He also reported that Secretary Winslow had been exonerated of the charges made on the floor at the previous meeting, by delegates from Carpenters Union, that he had withheld from the central body a certain letter from the Joint District Council of Carpenters, by producing the letter and showing that the letter was dated several days after the Carpenters' representative made the statement.

The committee to whom was referred the submitted amendments reported progress.

The Business Agent made his report, which was accepted.

ROLL CALL OF UNIONS.

Under roll call of unions to submit business, twenty delegates representing fourteen unions were present.

Delegate Daly, from Sheet Metal Workers, tendered the thanks of his union to the committee who had met the Commissioners of the District and the Council, for their efforts in behalf of their union in having the wages paid to tinners in the District repair shop increased to what was paid by the local employers.

Hod Carriers again called attention to the attitude of the Geo. A. Fuller Co. toward their union, and asked that the Business Agent renew his efforts to have the agreement made by Mr. Dinwiddie lived up to. The request was granted.

The secretary was directed to notify all unions whose delegates had not been present at the Council meetings, in compliance with law.

The term of trustee E. L. McClelland, and made vacant by the withdrawal by Carpenters Union, No. 190, of their delegates, was ordered filled at the next meeting.

To Wives of Union Men.

Ladies, do you ever realize that the carpet on your floor, the pictures upon the wall, the organ or piano, and all the luxuries you may be enjoying, you owe to the labor unions of this and other countries? Poor as your living and your condition may be, they would be infinitely worse but for the work that organized labor has accomplished in upholding wages to their present standard.

There is something you can do to help this movement for the betterment of wages and conditions, if you will. It is your duty as the wife of a union man, to trade only with stores employing union clerks and to demand the label on the goods you buy; and, if you do so, it will help wonderfully. Union labels are placed on shoes, brooms, crackers, bread, shirtwaists, clothing for your boys, and a host of other things. These things will cost you no more than the nonunion goods, and when you buy them you can have the satisfaction of knowing that you are using goods made by men and women who are paid good wages and work in clean, well ventilated factories and shops.

When you use goods that do not bear the label, you are encouraging the employment of men, women, or girls at starvation wages—wages often, and generally, so low in the case of women, that begging, or even worse, becomes a necessary adjunct for money to live on.

Can you, as women, as a mother, to say nothing of your being the wife of a union man, afford to aid or encourage such conditions? Remember, when you and your husband are gone (as you soon may be), your daughter may be forced up against the problem of living on $2.50 to $3 per week, or an awful alternative—a condition that you even now, by unwise buying, may be encouraging and building up. To be sure, you hate to go into a store and demand union label goods and union clerks and walk out if you don't get them, but you will soon be proud of the fact that you have had the courage to become a missionary in the cause of unionism.—Industrial Record.

Hall No. 1, "Building Trades Halls," 610 G street northwest, is open daily from 8 o'clock a. m. until 5 p. m. as a reading room to all members of building trades unions affiliated with the Council of Allied Building Trades.

Treasurer Heisley Elected Member-at-Large to Validate Election.

MUSICIANS HAVING TROUBLE

J. L. Rodier Addresses the Council—Electrical Workers Have Grievance Against Hub Furniture Co.—Butcher Workmen Receive Assistance.

The regular weekly meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8 o'clock on Monday evening, President Dickman in the chair.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

Mr. J. L. Rodier, representing Philadelphia Typographical Union, No. 2, was granted the floor, and spoke briefly of the fight made by that union against the Philadelphia Inquirer, and asked the delegates to take an active interest in aiding Philadelphia Typographical Union to fight the Inquirer.

CREDENTIALS.

The following credentials were presented, and being reported favorably by the committee were accepted:

Musicians Union, No. 161: W. J. Kerngood, vice J. I. McWilliams.

Electrical Workers: W. J. Fish, S. W. Grim, C. E. Young, H. Polan, and C. C. Moberly.

Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen, No. 148: Martin Hellmuth, Joseph Neuland, Frank Dudley, Robert Kuhn, and Fred. Mack.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Electrical Workers, No. 26, requesting that the Hub Furniture Co. be placed on the unfair list for having work done on repairs done by unfair electricians. Referred to Grievance Committee.

From Benj. F. Hoffman, formerly a delegate from Local No. 190, Carpenters, stating that he erred in claiming that a certain communication from Carpenters Joint District Council had been withheld by the secretary of the Central Labor Union, and apologizing for haste in making the charge. Placed on file.

From E. J. Ratigan, seeretary of the Council of Allied Building Trades, asking that the secretary of the Central Labor Union be requested to notify the general officers of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, and the general officers of the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, that the local unions representing those organizations in this city have been suspended from the Central Labor Union until such time as they comply with its laws. Request granted.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Bartenders: Called attention to their excursion August 5, and invited all delegates to attend. They also reported that they had decided not to parade Labor Day.

Butcher Workmen: Desires assistance from Central Labor Union with certain butchers, and asked for a committee of three to assist them. Request granted.

Musicians: Report that musicians had struck at Kernan's, as published in an evening paper, was untrue, but that a certain time had been fixed for new scale going into effect. The request that the matter be referred to the Grievance Committee was refused on account of irregularity.

Mill Workers Helpers: Wanted report from the Contract Committee, and was informed that matter was in hands of Organization Committee.

Allied Council of Building Trades: Reported that Painters would receive the scale on repair work under jurisdiction of District Commissioners.

NEW BUSINESS.

Musicians asked if Kernan had a contract with the Central Labor Union. On being informed that he had, they requested that a committee be appointed to investigate the Kernan-Musicians agreement. The matter was referred to the Contract Committee.

The request of the Council of Allied Building Trades that the office of treasurer be declared vacant, was denied, and on motion ex-Delegate Heisley was elected delegate at large.

Adjourned.

Union Ball Players.

The Union Base Ball Club was organized from players of the Government Printing Office and Bureau of Engraving Trades League, which closed its season July 1. Each team of the League, namely: Bureau of Engraving, Blank Room, Cow Boys, Foundry, Pressman and Reserve, is represented on the Union team, and it only requires one or two of our "typographical allies," among whom we know are some crack ball players, to make the Unions a representative team of Uncle Sam's printing and binding establishments.

The Unions have gone to considerable expense for uniforms, bleachers, and fixing up its grounds, Mahone lot, North Capitol street, between L and M streets, and to meet these expenditures, have issued season member cards at 50 cents each, which insures the holder to a seat at all games, and which can be obtained in nearly every division from some player or friend of the team.

The team started off poorly with three defeats, but since have been playing good ball, as their seven straight victories show, and will continue to put up a superior class of ball for its patrons. They play on their own grounds every Monday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday with some of the strongest uniformed teams of the District.

Manager Geo. F. Kirch, of the Job Bindery, has made arrangements with the following teams so far:

Saturday, Aug. 6—Law Reporters.
Monday, Aug. 8—Turner Athletics.
Wednesday, Aug. 10—Petworth Athletics.
Friday, Aug 12—Fifth Baptist Club.
Monday, Aug. 15—Kismets.
Friday, Aug. 19—Carroll Institute.

Every lover of the national game is invited to attend these games. Bring the ladies, as we have ample police protection, to insure against rowdies and tough characters.

On the Death of Maj. E. A. Clifford.

WHEREAS, The Portals of Peace have opened to receive the spirit of our friend and associate, Edwin A. Clifford, late disbursing officer of the Government Printing Office; and

WHEREAS, It is with profound sorrow that the Record chapel of the Government Printing Office have learned of the passing away of our efficient, courteous, and obliging coworker; therefore be it

Resolved, That by his dealings he displayed a type of altruism which won for him the esteem of a host of friends and made him a safe, prudent, and capable official, endowed with sympathetic kindness and tender regard for those in distress.

Resolved, That we extend to the bereaved wife our sincere condolence and sympathy in her sorrowing affliction, feeling our own loss most keenly we know that her grief is irreparable.

Resolved, That these resolutions be printed in THE TRADES UNIONIST and a copy thereof sent to the wife of the deceased.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

Philadelphia I found to be flooded with "hoodlebugs;" and a "hoodlebug," be it known, is a paper having no office but issued from a central plant, the heading, date line, and a portion of the reading matter being changed to suit the locality. The same condition existing in Washington would mean that we would have the Eckington Eagle, the River Front Chronicle, the Mount Pleasant Protector, and the Swampoodle Vindicator. A stringent law is on the Quaker City statute books against the distribution of handbills or dodgers, which is one reason given for the appearance of the numerous publications.

The trend to fine printing persistently continues. I had an idea the acme had been reached in the lithos put out by the Stoll Distilling Co. This was eclipsed by Schindler & Lind; but now the Talcutine Company of this city distances all competitors with an imported production.

Our Convention Correspondent.

Henry S. Sutton, who contributes bright and breezy items to this paper under the head of "Just Every Day Life," will send us convention news. Mr. Sutton is an old campaigner at conventions and will have a fund of new stories to write about.

Colorado vs. Russia.

No important change appears in the Colorado situation; the autocratic rule of Governor Peabody continues, military rule still reigns supreme, and "deported" or exiled miners and other citizens have not been permitted to return to their homes and their families, from whom they were ruthlessly, brutally, and illegally torn.

We have said and repeat that our movement set its face against and its seal of condemnation upon lawlessness, but we can not condemn lawlessness in the one and condone it in the other. If the miners have been guilty of crime they can be punished by the methods provided by the law, not by a process unknown to the law, and in direct conflict with constitutional rights and guaranties—the American concept of human justice.

In referring to the Colorado official outrages and tyranny in the last issue of the American Federtionist, we said that it is neither better nor worse than Russia. Now, however, comes the information in a cablegram which must shake the very marrow in Governor Peabody's bones; it must be as wormword to him and his cronies of the Mine Owners' Association, otherwise known as the Citizens' Alliance. This is the cablegram:

ST. PETERSBURG, July 11.

The system of condemning political prisoners by administrative order has been abolished by imperial decree, and persons accused of political crimes henceforth will be tried by the courts under the regular procedure.

This reform is far-reaching, ending forever the arbitrary condemnation to exile of political suspects without the intervention of the courts.

It is considered one of the most sweeping reforms of this generation, and it is understood that it was recommended by the council of the empire, with the acquiescence and approval of the minister of the interior, M. Plehve.

How much all this reads like current history, not in Russia, but in the sovering State of Colorado in the Republic of the United States.

And to cap it all, at this of all times, upon the heels of the inauguration of "exile by administrative process" in Colorado, the Czar, the autocrat of Russia, abolishes the injustice which has grown from a complete governmental system of tyranny.

Perhaps Governor Peabody and the Citizens' Alliance entertain the hope that the brutal rule which they have established in Colorado will endure, but in this they are counting without their host—the outraged public conscience, when aroused. Their names will be hissed in the same breath with Judas, Nero, Arnold, and Steunenberg.

And this when the organized labor movement will still live and its men will be accorded the honor, and the movement the credit, to which both are entitled in maintaining aloft the spirit of liberty, the cause of human justice. —American Federationist.

Growth of German Unions.

"The remarkable growth of the German trade-union movement during the year 1903 has exceeded even the boldest expectations." Thus reads the first sentence in an editorial in a recent issue of the German Correspondenzblatt, the official organ of the German Federation of Labor (Generalkommission Gewerkschaften).

The total membership of the sixty-one national unions affiliated with the Federation is 950,082, which is an increase of over 25 per cent in one year. The following national unions record the largest increase in membership during the year 1903: The metal workers gained 31,293 members; masons, 23,489: miners, 20,750; textile workers, 18,644; factory employees, 13,677; wood workers, 12,811.

The increase in membership during the year 1903 has never been exceeded in any preceding year, and is in itself approximately equal to the total membership of all the independent unions which are not affiliated with the German Federation of Labor. The independent trades unions in question are the so-called Hirsch-Duncker organizations, with a membership of 110,025, and the so-called Christian industrial organizations, with a membership of 84,652.

Off For St. Louis.

The delegates and visitors from this city to St. Louis, on the occasion of the I. T. U. convention, are not apparently going en masse. It was the intention of the local committee in charge of rates and railroads to send all over a favored road at a certain time. This plan has not been followed out, owing to arrangements of some of the visitors to get stop-over privileges en route.

John A. Huston and wife left on the B. & O. to-day (Thursday) at 10 a. m.

Miss Laura Gordon, vice-president of the National Woman's Auxiliary, and candidate for president at this session, left on Sunday.

Miss Anna C. Wilson, accompanied Miss Gordon on Sunday, and will stop over en route in Illinois.

The following delegates-elect and visitors will leave on the C. & O. at 2.30 to-morrow (Friday): Frank A. Kidd, Dan C. Vaughan, J. R. Lamson, Miss Theresa Vaughan and sister; L. C. Hoover, wife, and son; T. A. Bynum and wife; John R. Berg, wife and daughters; H. S. Sutton, J. L. Holland, Miss Katherine K. Spencer, Frank S. Lerch and mother; D. J. Murray, Harry F. Sauter, and Messrs. Lampe (Newark) and Busche (New York).

F. N. Whitehead left last Saturday to meet his brother in Chicago, and will go on to St. Louis.

T. C. Parsons, delegate-elect, left on Tuesday to be present at the first session of the Laws Committee, which meets to-day in St. Louis.

The Australian Labor Movement.

Much is being said of the alleged tyranny of labor unions in the British colony of New South Wales under the new labor laws, and the statement is circulated that the country is going from bad to worse and pregnant with the possibility of disaster for the interests of the colony. The contention is made that compulsory arbitration has been enacted only in the interests of the 52,000 trade unionists, and not of the million odd citizens of the community. All fines imposed on employers by the arbitration court are paid into the funds of the organization involved in the difficulty. Frivolous cases are continually being raised.

Admitting, for argument's sake, that the statements of those in Australia opposed to compulsory arbitration are true, it simply bears out what the opponents of compulsory arbitration have always contended; that it would be unfair to either one party or the other. Under the Australian law, seven members of a craft organized as a union would have the power of regulating wages and conditions of employment of all others employed in that craft provided its acts were approved by an arbitration tribunal.

Compulsory arbitration may succeed temporarily, but eventually it is bound to create widespread dissatisfaction. It may be that the unions of New South Wales are tyrannical, and largely so on account of being upheld by the courts; but if capital was the dominant power in the colony it is fair to assume that it would be just as tyrannical towards labor. Intelligent workers the world over favor voluntary arbitration for the settlement of trade difficulties, rather than being forced to submit their grievances to professional arbitrators.—Woodworker.

Labor Notes.

A compact has been formed between the machinists of the Northern Pacific and the great Northern roads which practically brings the workmen of both under one jurisdiction.

A plan for the systematic raising of funds for strike purposes has been submitted to the San Francisco (Cal.) Labor Council, and will be sent to the affiliated unions for approval.

At least 10,000 men have been discharged from the Russian railways since the war began, and together from 300,000 to 400,000 men have been thrown into idleness by the war.

International Brewery Workers Union, Local No. 4, has just completed a contract with the Buffalo, N. Y., breweries that is regarded as very satisfactory and liberal to the workmen.

There are few able-bodied paupers in Holland. A tract of public land, containing 5,000 acres, is divided into six model farms, to one of which the person applying for public relief is sent.

IN BERLIN THE BEAUTIFUL

Leaving Switzerland—Zurich An Interesting City—Over Lake Lindau—An Experience With "Steins"—Munich Quite Charming—On to Potsdam.

BERLIN, July 18, 1904.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

Leaving Interlaken on the morning of the 12th instant, we boarded the steamer on Lake Brienz, which carried us to Rothorn, about one and one-half hours' sail, stopping at several well-known resorts on both sides of the lake. At Giesbach we obtained a fine view of the falls, a sight that attracts many tourists. At Brienz we changed to a mountain-climbing rack-and-pinion train, which carried us over the Brunig Pass to the town of Brunig, charmingly situated on the summit. From this point our train slowly descended the mountains, presenting to our view a grand panorama of lakes, valleys, villages, the Rigi, and Mount Pilatus. At 2 o'clock we drew into beautiful Lucerne, where we only stopped two hours, waiting for the train to Zurich. As we had visited this city on a former trip we took up our journey at 4 o'clock for a city that, in our estimation, is equal to any in Switzerland. While we had visited Zurich before we found this attractive city more interesting than ever. We spent one afternoon in the museum, a place that is full of interest from the beginning. It contains a vast collection of antiquities pertaining to Swiss history. The trip was resumed Thursday morning for Germany, our train taking us to Winterthur, where we changed to a train landing us at Romanshorn, situated on Swiss side of Lake Constance. Here we boarded a pretty little steamer that carried us across this beautiful lake to Lindau, where we had to pass the muster of the German customs officials, which ordeal was made very easy by those obliging gentlemen.

At 6 o'clock we arrived at Munich and were soon located in our hotel. We visited the famous Luitfrold restaurant for dinner. This is a magnificent place and is said to be one of the largest restaurants in Europe. I can assure your readers of one thing—the beer is worth coming over for. It is served in large stone steins, so large, indeed, that it takes both hands to handle it, but I succeeded in this instance as I did on several succeeding occasions.

The next day we visited several of the art galleries and the celebrated stained-glass factory. In the afternoon we joined an excursion drive over the city that lasted three hours, covering all points of interest, even to the locality where the mad Bavarian King is confined. We saw the son of the Prince Regent and his princess driving out of the palace yards and lifted our hats and were rewarded with a smile and salute. Munich is a charming city, with many fine buildings, both private and public. The streets are nicely shaded and there are a large number of parks and monuments.

On Saturday we went to old Nurnberg, one of the quaintest cities in all Germany. The old buildings are so attractive in their odd architecture that nearly every building in the old town is worth an inspection. The heat was intense, but we started out to see the curious old town, making our way through the busy streets, crossing the river Pegnitz, through the market to the famous restaurant Posthornlein, founded in 1489. The proprietor is a descendent of the founder and showed us a book containing the names of his predecessors and the number of years each had conducted the place for over four hundred years. The place is a very interesting one and filled with curious old souvenirs. He handed us a visitors' book to write our names in. The book contained the names of celebrated people who had frequented his restaurant for many years back. We next visited the castle, from the ramparts of which we obtained an excellent view of the city and surrounding country. The churches, monuments, and fountains of note were also visited. This city retains its old walls and moat to a greater extent than any other German city. I might mention that this is the home of the Faber lead pencil.

Owing to the intense heat we boarded the fast express at 11 o'clock and, after one of the quickest trips of our lives, arrived in Berlin at 6.42, the train only making three or four stops on the way. The rural scenes throughout Germany are more than interesting and we thoroughly enjoyed every mile of it, fast as it was. Germany may be slow in some things, but she knows how to run railroads all right.

We put in this day around the city of Berlin, including a two hours' ride over the leading boulevards, admiring the many parks, beautiful buildings, and more numerous monuments than any city on the globe. To-morrow we make a pilgrimage to Potsdam, and Thursday resume our journey to the cities along the Rhine.

Yours respectfully,

F. E. BUCKLAND.

What Labor Unions Do.

They elevate the workingman on the social scale and make him a better member of society.

They compel those learning trades to serve an ample apprenticeship and to thereby acquire a full and sufficient knowledge of their trade.

They oppose child labor and advocate the sending of children to school in order that their intellectual faculties may be developed and their capacity for becoming good workingmen may be increased.

They aid the health departments and sanitary commissions of the country by insisting on clean, well-lighted and ventilated factories and workshops.

They ask only for what is right and just in the matter of wages in exactly the same manner as their employer asks a fair price for the goods they manufacture. They teach the doctrines of freedom and self-confidence, and by so doing tend to make future generations better men and women.

They demand their rights as the Constitution of the United States gives them authority to do, and seek to better their condition as God gives them right to do.

They provide comfortable homes for their members and their families, and enable them to earn wages which will provide them with comforts of life.

They dispense charity to all who are in need of assistance, and thereby do much toward eliminating the pauper element and reducing the number of public charges.—Leavorworth Labor Review.

Automobile Races.

Among the features at the Labor Day outing of the Central Labor Union at Benning will be five automobile races. Two prizes are to be given in each race. The committee now have over thirty entries and the success of the races are assured. Two prizes are to be given in each case.

Machinists Wages at Navy Yard.

A committee from Columbia Lodge of Machinists, with President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, and James O'Connell, of the International Association of Machinists, had an audience with President Roosevelt to-day relative to securing a reconsideration of the action of the navy yard wage board, which has declined to increase wages at the Washington Navy Yard.

The matter was ordered placed before Secretary of the Navy Morton, who will give the committee an opportunity to be heard on the question of increase in wages.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

There is little consolation for young or old in the determination of the Maccabees to so increase the monthly payments as to make them practically prohibitive to the middle-aged man. It is true that they offer the young rates but little more than they have been paying, but no young man takes out insurance with the expectation of dying young. He goes in when young in order to have the advantage of moderate rates when he becomes old, and with the recent example before him of being weeded out as soon as he passed the meridian of life, he will see the futility of trying to provide for his family after his decease by becoming a member of a fraternal insurance order. The old-line companies also offer him advantages because of his youth, and they can not afterwards repudiate their contracts when the risk becomes greater—a time which they must have contemplated when they fixed the amount that he should pay.

It is stated that trained actuaries have been employed to estimate the rates necessary to be charged in order to make the risk safe—actuaries who have made life insurance the study of their lives—and that the new rates have been decided upon on their reports. But trained actuaries are not a new discovery. They are as old as life insurance, and their figures were made long ago. Nothing new has been discovered by the actuaries. They have always argued that the rates charged by the fraternals were too low, which the fraternals denied with so much vehemence that they made me believe them. When I saw the old-line companies erecting five-million-dollar buildings I was ready to believe that their insurance rates were extortionate, especially when they indulged in the luxury of fifty-thousand-dollar presidents. Now I am told that the fraternals realize that they have not been charging what the insurance was worth and that they must increase—not equitably, all along the line, but on the old and middle-aged men, leaving it inordinately low for the young man, in order that he may be seduced into joining, to be weeded out too when he has reached the age when life insurance is really desirable.

According to my information, the Maccabees are but the pioneers in the movement, and if that prove to be true it is the ringing of the death knell to fraternal insurance.

Joe Saunders, now a letter carrier attached to the G street station, is a printer and was a tourist of more than ordinary attainments and experience. Among his peculiarities is the fact that he invariably "gets off" on circus day. He just can't resist the desire to take his little family and go to the circus. Pressed as to the reason for his extraordinary affection for the sawdust arena, he said:

"I used to travel with a circus. I joined at Zanesville, Ohio, being on the road, without any other prospects, and stayed with it some time."

"What part did you take, Joe?" he was asked.

"I was what they call a 'spangle man,'" he said. "It was my work to help get out the costumes, brush 'em up, and put 'em away again; and when the performance was going on, I was one of those, dressed in a spangled uniform, to carry into and out of the ring the different properties needed. I rode in the big parade, too.

"One of the worst trips I ever had was as roustabout on an Ohio River stern-wheel steamer down from Pittsburg. When I shipped I wasn't onto all that an Ohio River sailor ought to know, and when chuck time came I learned that every one was expected to furnish his own knife, fork, tin plate, and a tomato can for coffee. Therefore I had to eat with sticks for implements and go without coffee until I had supplied myself. As we stopped at every landing and had to load and unload cargo, there wasn't much time lost in sleeping. At Wheeling I caught on for a night's work on the Register and deserted."

He had traveled in every conceivable manner known to tourists from one end of the country to the other, but, finally tiring of it, he took a civil service examination and settled down to the uneventful life of a letter carrier in Washington. But he likes to go over the old days—tramp over his old tramps and go over his old adventures. He keeps up his membership in the I. T. U., but it is a source of great grief to him that they won't let him vote for local officers.

* * * *

I have received from President James M. Lynch copies of Circular No. 7, issued by the Eight-Hour Committee of the I. T. U., consisting of James M. Lynch, C. E. Hawkes, Hugo Miller, and J. W. Bramwood, containing that portion of the report of President Lynch dealing with the eight-hour campaign and the progress that has been made, together with excerpts from the reports of officers to the convention of the United Typothetæ of America, recently held at St. Louis. It is an interesting document and ought to be read by every union printer.

* * * *

"Spadge" Parsons departed for St. Louis on Wednesday to begin his duties as a member of the Laws Committee of the I. T. U., which always meets three or four days in advance of the convention, to act on the propositions that have been presented. I expect to receive favorable reports as to the value of our member of that committee.

* * * *

Foremen Berg, of the Record, and Hay, of the Job Room, spent a good part of last week at the linotype factory in Brooklyn, looking after the machines which have been ordered for their respective divisions, which, I am informed, are expected to arrive and be placed in position about the middle of this month. They will all be double-deckers, and undoubtedly a crew will be fully trained for their operation within a very few weeks.

* * * *

It grieves me to say that I am going to "take my leave" next week, for I am satisfied that during the whole thirty days I will not find so cool a place as the Annex Proof Room. But I've got to do it, having the same reason that the Western landlord had for charging three prices at his hotel—I need the money. Besides, the leave has got to be taken some time, and I might as well get rid of it and stop the foreman from coming around every little while and looking reproachfully at me. And speaking of foremen, since the lamented death of Fred Hall Mr. Wheat has been detailed to the big room and Johnny Huston left in charge of the Annex, so that there is no vacancy, though there probably will be when the night forces are again organized, if you have any intention of applying for it. And speaking of night forces, I had heard from two or three sources, none of them entitled to serious consideration, that the night forces will be established very early this year—"next week," the rumor mongers said, though two or three next weeks have passed since the first member of the committee mentioned it to me. And speaking of the rumor committee, its members are the only employees of the office who get no leave, for they work the whole year round. And speaking of leave—but I've got back where I started from, and that's where I'll be in about a month from now.

* * * *

I received a letter from Billy Wilkinson, of Austin, Tex., a few days ago, in which he said he has been suffering from muscular rheumatism so severely that his avordupois has run down to 112 pounds, but with all his suffering he is as chipper and full of fun as a six-month-old pup. He is compelled to forego the pleasure of attending the I. T. U. convention because of a rush of work, but expects to view the Exposition later.

* * * *

I have not heard of any very hard fight being put up for the 1905 I. T. U. convention lately, though a year or so ago we heard that Montreal wanted it. As it has not been in Canada for a good many years, I hope Montreal will get it, if she still wants it, and if she gets it I will attend. It is always easy for me to attend the convention next year. Colorado Springs has resigned her pretensions, I believe, and it is well, for if the convention were to go there the chances are that Peabody and Sherman Bell would get the whole push. Which suggests to me:

When Peabody and Bell
Have arrived safe in the hereafter,
They'll find they have lost their vocation;
They do not deport
Rats, scabs, and that sort,
Which comprise hell's great population.

It isn't often that I can agree with my friend Belcher and I am proud of him when I can, but I am in perfect accord with him on the subject of the character of music that should be played by the Marine Band. It is the intention, in aggregating a large number of instruments, with a large number of musicians sitting behind them, that they shall play good music—music which requires a large number of musicians and instruments to bring out the fine shades of harmony that are to be found only in what rattle-bang, slap-dash audiences denominate "heavy music." A band of half a dozen pieces, or even a good hand organ, is all that is necessary to do justice to the so-called "popular music," which is neither educating nor edifying, and if it is only to play such slop that the great Marine Band is maintained there is a woful waste of money and talent.

Carlos B. Tomlin, a member of Columbia (Washington, D. C.) Union No. 101, arrived in Colorado Springs and his name was added to the Home membership roll on Saturday afternoon, July 23. Mr. Tomlin spent several months in Colorado in 1903 seeking the betterment of his health, returning to his home city in the fall of last year, where a short time ago he again became ill. He is now domiciled in the hospital annex.—Hubbard's Colorado Springs Labor News.

* * * *

Mount Vernon Tent, No. 4, Knights of the Maccabees, I am told, at the last meeting appointed a committee to devise ways and means and inquire into the feasibility of setting up housekeeping for themselves, cutting loose from the parent body, which has so heartlessly and dishonestly raised the rates on the older member, with the purpose of driving them out of the order. I hope that they may succeed in the secession movement, and that all the other subordinate (now justifiably insubordinate) bodies will join them and by a reorganization turn out the scoundrels who are trying to wreck the institution, and I hope that similar action will be taken by the other fraternal associations whenever the effort is made to unload those who have arrived at the age when insurance is desirable. The supreme officers have evidently counted on the younger members helping them to carry out the infamy which they have devised, but so far as I have heard they are standing by the older members, seeing in their fate their own in a few years. Nobody could object to raising the rates equitably all along the line, if necessary, but to arbitrarily raise them on the older members unreasonably will necessarily drive all honest members out, whether they be young or old. Success to this secession, say I!

The Bristol (Tenn.-Va.) Courier of August 2 announces that the company which has been publishing it has reorganized, with $25,000 capital, and that ex-Governor Robert L. Taylor, of Tennessee, will be president and our own Col. Charles H. Slack will be the editor. It will be a pleasure to me to see Colonel Slack in a position where his pretty wit will have full flow and his ready pen opportunity to convey his always brilliant ideas to the people, and I predict for the Bristol Courier a successful career.

It was with universal sorrow last Wednesday that the not unexpected news of the death of Maj. Edwin A. Clifford was received at the G. P. O. During the years he served as paymaster he made friends of all by his accommodating disposition and many have reason to long remember his kindnesses. The many floral offerings from the different parts of the office attested the gratitude with which he is held in the memory of the employees.

Death of E. A. Clifford.

In the death of Maj. E. A. Clifford, late paymaster at the Government Printing Office, the employes of that institution loses a stanch friend and an accommodating official. Mr. Clifford anticipated the wants of the thousands of employes of the big printery in such a manner and with such little show of of patronage that he endeared himself to all about him.

He was a sufferer from Bright's disease and had been confined to his home for the past five months. The funeral services took place from the family residence, 1324 Yale street northwest to-day, Rev. F. M. Bristol officiating.

WORKING AND LOAFING.

Since labor at best is a hardship,
No matter the pay,
And loafing's a nuisance at even
Four dollars per day,
Would that some aspiring genius, with
A heart big and kind,
A medium happy in swelt'ring
Hot weather may find
'Twixt working and loafing, in some way
To Eden akin,
Where us poor mortals our mugs ugly
Might sometimes poke in—
An elysium pleasant, neither too
Hot nor too chilly,
Where "av'rages" come nearer a poor
"Comp." to knock silly:
Where "pink slips" are unknown, and setting
Line type by machine
Has gone glimmering forever to
The land of "has been."
Yes, indeed, there is great need of some such
Sweet haven of rest,
Where dull care is tabooed and there's no
Offense in a jest;
Where Belcher, the "squelcher," no more can
Our poets decry,
And not Adam Bugg e'ermore invade
The soup or the pie;
Where all "plugs" are "plugged" and there's no one
To fret or to frown
When Bloomer's "Flotsam and Jetsam" goes
'Way back and sits down.

Why Not, Mr. Parry.

Mr. Parry, why not revive the old system of lettre de cachet? This would justify and legalize all that you do. In fact it might give a mantle of legality for the action of Governor Peabody and General Sherman Bell. The Citizens Alliance could then issue its edicts with greater effect. You, of course, remember in the "good old times" they branded their dissatisfied workmen upon the forehead, signifying vagabond or villain, which prevented the victim leaving the domain of his original employer or seeking employment elsewhere. If he escaped and was overtaken and returned he was branded upon the forehead the second time with the letter "S," signifying slave. If the offense was repeated the third time the charge was "robbing the master" of his labor and the workman was hanged.

Of course the blacklist is rather effective in our time, but the branding iron could never be effaced, not even after death, and then the members of the Citizens' Alliance, these patriots (?) and humanitarians (?), could at a glance distinguish who was a union man or otherwise. Would it not be quite an idea to have the Citizens Alliance adopt the system of branding?

Of course to avoid confusion the local citizens alliances should not have authority to use their own devices, for that might lead to confusion. Why not have a uniform brand issued from the office of the factory or "buggy" house of Mr. Parry? There could then be uniformity in design, device, and character, and it would be a most effective means of inaugurating a new era of "master and slave."—American Federationist.

Election of Officers.

At the June meeting of the Allied Printing Trades Council the following officers were elected: Emil Petersen (pressmen) president; Frank Hall (printer) vice-president; Elmer Johnson (electrotyper) secretary-treasurer; G. H. Thayer (stereotyper) sergeant-at-arms.

Last Saturday a committee from the Council presented E. E. Calhoon, the retiring president, with a handsome gold pin, representing the union label, in appreciation of his efficient services during the past two years.

Jonadab Memorial to Judge Weed.

Memorial services in honor of the late Judge John J. Weed will be held at Jonadab Hall, 623 Louisiana avenue northwest, Friday evening at 8 o'clock. The ceremonies will be in charge of the members of the council who assisted at Judge Weed's initiation into the order, and the meeting will be open to the public. Addresses will be made by prominent members of the bar. Judge Weed was an active member of Pioneer Council for twenty-four years.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

First Division.

J. L. Getman has taken thirty days and gone to Herkimer, N. Y., his old home.

Fred. W. Follett is in charge of the "Y" during the absence of W. M. Leavitt.

C. P. Brown, the title page man, has returned from thirty days leave. He says he has had his money's worth.

There are upwards of 500 Masons connected with the Allied Trades. Why not put the label on the Masonic Disciple?

"Mike" Serrano, formerly of this division, called on us last Saturday. "Mike" is taking his leave and looking over New York city.

N. J. Lillard has set the pace for the Fort Saratoga four hundred. "Lill" wears a Stanley South African top piece that is a work of art.

George H. Ball passed around the cigars Friday morning over the arrival of a little girl at his home. "Ye scribe acknowledges the receipt," etc., etc.

N. H. Lytle took fifteen days in order to be by the bedside of a sick child. The little one died on Sunday. Mr. Lytle has the sympathy of the entire room.

Imposers T. M. Donn and Geo. Wetmore, and compositors Wm. Lawlor, A. L. Huss, Geo. H. Ellis, H. Van de Bogert, and P. M. McCallum resumed work last Friday.

Daniel J. Hegarty is off for thirty days. He journeyed by boat and rail to Maine, where most of his time will be spent, enjoying the pleasures offered in the Pine Tree State.

A. W. Bentz is visiting his old home in Carlisle, Pa. He told me he expected to meet Harry Templar and two or three other Indians, and would bring back a few scalps for souvenirs.

The day before Dan Hegarty went on leave I asked his side partner, W. H. Guthridge, what he would do when his partner left. "Why," said Hegarty, "the first thing he'll do will be to take my sorts."

F. M. Penn is taking a few days' rest. I have it from Harry Nesbitt that the doctor prescribed surf bathing, and that Mr. Penn is at present jumping the waves at Colonial Beach—whenever a steamer passes.

B. C. Wright has gone to Deer Park, Md., to spend thirty days. The four-score years that rest upon Mr. Wright's shoulders are no barrier to the enjoyment of life, for he has the activity of a man many years his junior.

W. L. Pierce is visiting in Atlantic City. Sunday's paper contained an account of the capture of a peculiar species of sea fish, which baffled even fish commission experts. Jack Burnside says it was our "Larry" in bathing.

Simon Pocher is on leave. Before going, however, he placed the house in good order, put his floor preparation in the vault, and his broom in cold storage. And now he, as well as the rest of us, are enjoying a much-needed rest.

Chas. Alexander reported on Monday that his wife had fallen down the steps at her home, 49 M street, on Sunday afternoon, and had dislocated her shoulder and otherwise injured herself. It is the wish of all that nothing serious may result.

By the way, I owe someone an apology. Last week I referred to a certain force as the "silk-stocking" boys. Since then I have been informed that some prefer a very fine grade of imported open-work lisle thread. Forgiveness is implored.

W. M. Leavitt is spending his vacation among the hills of his old New Hampshire home. Mr. Leavitt was born and spent his boyhood days in the old Granite State, and will undoubtedly pass a pleasant vacation midst the scenes of his childhood.

The young ladies of the Gazette, who spent their hard-earned dollars and time to learn the Mergenthaler last winter and are now brought face to face with the Lanston, have my sincerest sympathy. But never mind girls, the knowledge won't hurt you.

The following members of this division have laid aside the tin and become real soldiers, being in camp at Harper's Ferry: W. H. Chase, G. G. Wilson, Edward Coleman, Frank O. Jones, R. H. Mayers, R. N. Carter (laborer), and Geo. A. Robey (laborer).

Somewhere down on the lower Potomac the river is being emptied of fish. That is, if the promises of Guy McCord hold good. He promised to send the first schooner full Washingtonward not later than Monday, but it hasn't arrived yet. Before starting on his vacation Wednesday he was presented with a "fishing outfit" by his friends.

A. W. Sefton is confined to his home, 1248 H street northeast, suffering from injuries received last week. He was rendered unconscious for several hours and could not recall name of his closest friends. I could not learn particulars as to how the accident happened, but understand he has concussion of the brain and otherwise badly injured.

G. P. O. baseball fans should not overlook the fact that most every evening there is a good game of baseball played on the Mahone lot by teams composed of employes of this office. It is true, there is no team composed wholly of printers, but there are a number of such who form part of other teams. Encourage them all you can—for I guess they need it.

Passing along H street Saturday at 1 after the office closed for the day, I was impressed with the business-like appearance of the second floor of the old building. The Spec. had to work. A few years ago all hands would have crowded into the windows and watched their departing craftsmen, but Saturday I saw but one or two instances of "rubbering," and in those cases they never lost a stroke. My, my, how times have changed.

By the death of Paymaster Clifford on Wednesday morning, printers in particular, and printing office employes in general, have lost a true friend. Major Clifford was obliging to a fault. Although in poor health himself, he found comfort in looking after the wants of others. In rain or shine, hot weather or cold he was ever ready to take the pay of some distressed employe to his home. Other paymasters will come and go, but pleasant recollections of Major Clifford will live long in the memories of those whom he found such pleasure in serving.

Saturday afternoon I paid a visit to the Star composing room, and through the courtesy of Foreman McLean and Alex. Gordon, machinist in charge, was permitted to make a close inspection of the new double-decked, two-letter Mergenthaler machines, which are like those to be placed in this office. The machine is a wonder, and while at the outset of their installation into this office complications of a serious nature may arise, the inevitable result can be nothing but success. In times past I have visited a large number of machine composing rooms, but for a well-kept, fine-appearing, up-to-date plant the Star is excelled by none, and the courtesy shown a visitor by the entire force such as to make his visit one of pleasure.

In a heated argument with a friend of mine the other day over the merits and demerits of the Mergenthaler machine for Government work, he wound the conversation up in a manner that makes me feel as though someone should step in and save the Government from making a fatal mistake. This is what he said: "Just you wait! You'll see. They may be here this winter, but the junk pile will get them next. You wait until some morning you pick up a Record and see something like this in a speech of Senator Hoar: 'Mr. President, as I was about to reply to the Senator from Pennetaoinshrdlu I was interrupted by a question by the Senaoinshrdlu from Indshrdelucm!' Remember what I say, the Mergs. get one season only."

CHAS. S. GUNN.

Ladies' dining rooms. R. A. Driscoll, N. Cap. and G. Clams and Crabs.

Second Division.

Foreman Shanks is on leave.

V. M. Boyd returned to work Monday, after enjoying some of his leave.

E. E. Richards has returned from a trip to Dayton, Ohio, and West Virginia.

On last Friday Milo Shanks became the proud father of a "Kentucky Colonel," as he puts it.

John Mason, delegate to St. Louis from "Big 6," was a caller in this room Saturday. Mr. Mason works at Butterrick's, in New York.

Oliver C. McCardell and his sister, Miss Kate, left Thursday night for the World's Fair. They will stop over in Cincinnati for a few days.

Wednesday we were all pained to learn of the death of our late paymaster, Major Clifford. By his efforts to please the G. P. O. employes he had endeared himself to all. Floral tributes were sent from every division in the office.

Ten hours a day for five days a week seems to be the rule now. Those printers whose style and prosperity demand that they have a summer residence in the country, thus have the pleasure of sleeping there at least.

August Paland was asking the other day how to spell the word, meaning one who blows a cornet. Every one said "cornetist," when "Augy" corrected them, "corneter" is correct. That "quire" meant a body of singers was also disputed until reference was had to the dictionary.

To avoid much trouble and loss of time, I would suggest that the copy preparers who mark indentions, casts, etc., have a frame and assortment of type and a break stick in their division for the purpose of trying their casts. Then the compositors will be saved many trips to the Proof Room.

D. J. McDonough, of this room, who hails from sleepy town by the Schuylkill, was one of the lucky ones to get reappointed before his emergency term run out. Reporting at the front, he was escorted back to this division by a messenger and assigned to the same frame, where he finished the take he had been setting.

My attention has been called to the fact that the Masonic Disciple, which expects patronage from the printer and other union members of that order, does not carry the label, although that faithful old label agitator is one of the editors. "If all union men will refuse to buy goods that do not have it [the label] the manufacturer will soon want to," says this label supporter in last week's TRADES UNIONIST.

There are a few more than 350 men over 60 years of age working in the G. P. O., while only a little over 50 women of that age are here. In this room A. T. Maupin, who is over 70, can do as good a day's work as many younger men. Knowledge and experience counts more in the printing business, as well as many other occupations than youth, while some are suggesting that the old men be dropped from the department roles. I think it is ill-advised, except in positions where main strength and agility are required.

Col. Chas. H. Slack's host of Washington friends will be glad to know that he is to embark in the daily newspaper business. He is one of the incoporators, says the Bristol Courier, of August 2, of a company, capitalized at $25,000, which is to take over the Bristol (Tenn.—Va.) Daily Courier. Ex-Gov. Bob Taylor is to be president of the company. The colonel and his father, the late Senator Slack, first made the Courier famous editorially. The article further says:

"Mr. Slack is a noted paragrapher, and one of the cleverest and brightest editorial writers in the land. His proclivity for editorial work has by no means left him during his stay in Washington, and all the while his mind has been effervescing with original editorial ideas that have now and then bubbled over into some newspaper in spite of his determination to hold them in subordination to his regular duties at the capital."

Third Division.

By request of our regular correspondent, who is on leave, I will send in a few items this week.

W. H. Davis is on leave.

Fletcher Bowden returned from leave last week.

Friend Goodkey came off leave last week all smiles.

G. D. Ellis and A. J. Campbell are billed for leave this week.

Ed Nash came to work Monday after an absence of seventeen days.

William McEnany came to work Friday, having been off for two weeks.

T. J. Arrington is all smiles over the arrival of a fine girl baby at his house.

Johnnie Adams has returned from his vacation, which he took in Pittsburg, Pa.

Frank H. Manderfeld, of the State Branch, was down to the big shop Saturday.

Foreman Bass, of the State Branch, was down in the Third a few minutes Saturday.

Walter Brooks is working in the ring alley in the absence of R. M. Christian, who is on leave.

J. W. L. Dillman is maker-up in the absence of F. C. Kemon, and Allen E. Cowles is the assistant.

Edgar B. Merit returned Wednesday from a three weeks' trip to his old home in Fayetteville, Ark.

Out of a total number of 113 employees in this division 80 are subscribers to THE TRADES UNIONIST.

R. L. S. Halpenny is on fifteen days' leave. He and his family will spend their vacation near Colonial Beach.

We are glad to see Millard F. Peake again manipulating the silent messengers of thought in the Fourth Division.

Wm. P. Francis, as far as we are aware, enjoys the distinction of being the only Lanston operator in this division.

T. L. McEneany returned to work Monday after having been absent one week on account of sickness in his family.

John Kelso, Wm. B. Padgett, Joseph Cohn, George Terwilliger, and Fred C. Chase are recent appointees to this division.

Any lack of the usual terseness in the items this week can be attributed to the absence of the regular correspondent.

Clay Unger is on fifteen days' leave. He is down the river below Colonial Beach, and expects to put in most of the time fishing.

Thomas A. Stevens, who has been working in the place of Richard Taylor, laborer, while on leave, has been sent to the press room.

H. H. Brayton is on fifteen days' leave. He and family left immediately for Harpers Ferry where they will rusticate for that period.

As I am something of a novice in the journalistic arena, I shall try not to rub the fur the wrong way on any of the other correspondents, and steer clear of poetry, music, washbowls, plugs, etc.

J. W. Belcher is on fifteen days' leave and has his plan mapped out to move during the time and afterward to "do Washington." He expects to visit Mount Vernon and other places of interest.

The papers have said a great deal about the dissatisfaction in the departments about the Saturday closing hour. We don't know about the departments, but the G. P. O. boys all seem well pleased. We have heard no grumbling whatever.

Chairman Goldstein has been wearing a broad smile for a week, and when asked the occasion of his happiness he said it was in anticipation of his vacation, which he will spend in the Catskill Mountains of New York. He will go about the 10th of this month.

R. L. Townsend is on thirty days' leave. His health forced him to take his leave sooner than he intended. He underwent an operation at the hospital about two months ago, and now goes back for treatment and possibly for another operation. We hope for a speedy recovery.

The resolution offered by Joseph E. Goodkey in Columbia Union last year, and which was carried out in December, to select one day in each year on which to hold memorial services over deceased members, will be brought up at the convention in St. Louis. An effort will be made to pass a law embodying such resolution and making it obligatory upon all unions to set aside one day in each year for such purpose. If this is made a law, and we have little doubt that it will be, the Typographical Union will be the first labor organization in the country to adopt a memorial day. As the initial step has been taken by Columbia Union we have room to feel proud.

Bindery Notes.

Robert Stack is again on the move and will locate next door to his former headquarters, Point Lookout.

Jim Sibre is now the expert on bugs in the Bindery. He says he can tell if there is one around by the smell.

John Burk, the strong man of the bindery, has had a pair of shamrocks painted on his suspenders. You can't beat him.

Bill Kennedy, of the Lone Star State, is feeling unwell and greatly vexed over New York having both candidates for President.

Jim Kearney met with a serious and painful injury. While out hunting he dropped his gun, it exploded and shot off his big toe.

It is reported that Joseph Day is going to purchase an auto. Joe will be right in it with his merry-go-round working and also an auto on his handss

Fred. A. Collins, secretary to the Public Printer, and Chas. McEnaney, of this division, sail from Baltimore for Boston and Portland, Me., on Saturday next. They will be absent about ten days, this being the first vacation indulged in by Mr. Collins since assuming his present duties. Nothing but water on this trip for Mac.

PASTE.

LINES ON DEATH OF ADAM J. SOMMERS.

On the morning of July 27 the many friends of Adam J. Sommers, of the Government bindery, heard with profound sorrow of his death. With his relatives at his bedside he was ready and prepared to die, and passed away at Providence Hospital, his death being caused by typhoid fever. Mr. Sommers was born in New York city thirty-five years ago, where he was educated and learned the trade of bookbinding, and was appointed to a position in the Government bindery September, 1893. The funeral services were held in Aloysius Church, July 28, 9.30 a. m., and were attended by his many friends, Foremen Byrne, Penix, and Assistant Foremen Connor and Feeney. His remains were taken on the 11 a. m. train over the Pennsylvania railroad to New York.

His illness was of short duration. We can hardly realize that he has gone from us forever. I speak of him as my friend and as I knew him. Adam Sommers was a young man of exceedingly mild temperament, never known to injure or say an unkind word of his fellow-workmen, attentive to his church duties, attentive to his work, honest to the core, and a man you could trust. If we are prepared as this man was—

How beautiful, indeed, is life's autumn sunset, amid its crimson glow, whose golden light gently lingers until the curtain which veils our mortal vision, touched by the invisible is softly lifted and the radiant dawn of eternal day appears.

WM. C. CONNOR.

Home Cut Stone.

General Secretary James F. McHugh, of the Journeymen Stone Cutters Association, and a committee from the Washington branch, had a conference Wednesday with the District Commissioners relative to the stone work on the proposed new Muncipal building.

The local branch desires to have the stone used on the building cut in this city in order to give employment to local men. It is a question that has been agitated for some time and not at all unreasonable.

A clause in the letting of the work is all that is necessary to have the work done in this city by our own craftsmen.

That we must sue for favor on a question of inherent right such as this question presents is a commentary on our free institutions, for as a body the wage-earners are the producers of the wealth of all communities, and as consumers create a demand for the articles handled by the merchant. The question is clearly one of equity. If we permit one class of artisans to be militated against logically there is no reason why all others should not expect to be treated in like manner.

It may be safely assumed that in a muncipality where the people elect its rulers the need of an interview on a matter of this kind with the head of the city government would hardly be necessary. An official that would send the work of his city out of its borders, knowing it could be as well handled by skilled men at home, would have a short term in office.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of August 2, 1904.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8 o'clock p. m. by Chairman Wells.

Roll call found all officers present except vice chairman.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

Credentials were read from Bridge and Structural Iron Workers Union, No. 5, certifying to C. W. Winslow, F. M. Biggs, and Charles Sherier. The credentials were accepted after investigation and the delegates present were obligated.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Capt. Chester Harding, acting Engineer Commissioner, stating that the union scale ($3.20) for painters would be paid to painters employed in the District repair shop. The secretary was directed to acknowledge the same and express the appreciation of the Council at the action of the Commissioners and to forward a copy of the communication to the Painters Union.

From G. B. Coleman, superintendent of repairs of the District, acknowledging the receipt of list of firms in the city engaged in tile roofing. Placed on file.

From the Christian Heurich Brewing Co., relative to patronizing a certain firm which is on the unfair list of the Central Labor Union. Referred to Washington Lodge of Machinists.

From Hod Carriers Union, covering their grievances with Norcross Bros. Referred to the Business Agent.

A bill from the Trades Unionist Publishing Co., for $22 25 for working cards, was approved and referred to the Central Labor Union for payment.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Delegate Desmond reported action of the Central Labor Union on request of the Council that the treasurer of the Central Labor Union be directed to tender his resignation as such, to go into effect August 8. The secretary was directed to file a protest on the grounds that the procedure was unconstitutional, and to request all affiliated unions to do likewise.

ROLL CALL.

Under roll call of unions to submit business, twenty-one delegates from fifteen Locals answered to their names.

Stone Laborers asked that the Business Agent give attention to the job of Norcross Bros. at the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Fifteenth street northwest.

Under unfinished business, Samuel Beckett was elected to fill the office of trustee made vacant by the withdrawal by Carpenters Union, No. 190, of their delegates.

NEW BUSINESS.

The secretary was directed to extend an invitation to Bricklayers Union, No. 1, and Stone Masons Union, No. 2, B. and M. I. U., and the Journeymen Stone and Marble Cutters Union to affiliate with the Council under the laws and rules governing the Central Labor Union and the Council.

The report of the Business Agent was accepted, after which the Council adjourned.

Owing to the present glut in the market the average rate of wages for clerks is 30s ($7.50) a week, the proprietor of an employment registry stated in the city of London (Eng.) court.

Report shows that in some of the states at least 60 per cent of the labor troubles occur either among the unorganized of newly organized men. The older unions have learned to avoid trouble.

In Denmark, any person, at the age of 21 years, pays to the state a sum of £6 10c. is entitled, if he reaches the age of 65, to an annuity of £13. But if he dies before that age the money is forfeited.

Labor in Politics.

From St. Louis Star, July 10.]

What is claimed to be the first out-and-out union labor delegation that ever sought recognition and a voice in a presidential pow-wows, received a black eye at the Democratic gathering in the Coliseum.

The delegation hailed from the District of Columbia, and was composed of the following: W. E. Carr, Carpenters Union, chairman; E. J. Ratigan, Steam Fitters; C. A. Pfau, Retail Clerks; Ward Savage, Bartenders, and Herman Shulteis, of the Knights of Labor.

The laborites contested the seats of the delegation, headed by James L. Norris, commonly termed the "machine leader."

Committeeman Ratigan declared that the working people of the District of Columbia were sick and tired of Norris.

"We have no suffrage in the District," explained Mr. Ratigan, "our affairs being managed by a commission."

"Since the system was inaugurated the corporationists have had things their own way. The working people have no chance at all, but we are working patiently to change things, and propose to fight Norris to the last ditch."

The labor delegation was primed for stirring things up a bit. The members were armed with resolutions, to-wit: "The Rights of Suffrage," "Eight Hour Law," "Misuse of the Military in Colorado," and "Government by Injunction."

Ratigan is also secretary of the Labor Lyceum of Washington, a nonpartisan political organization, composed of union men, the purpose of which is to secure from candidates pledges in behalf of organized labor.

The Lyceum, Ratigan asserts, has taken umbrage against a Missouri Congressman, and threatens to "go after him" at the next election.

Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, No. 5: S. Southern, George Scott, and F. M. Biggs.

The credentials were referred to the committee, and being favorably reported upon, were accepted.

Mr. Cunningham, representing the International Association of Tube Workers, was granted the floor and made an appeal for financial assistance for that organization. The sum of $10 was appropriated.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Steam Fitters, No. 10, requesting that Cyrus B. Rees be removed from the unfair list. Granted.

From E. J. Ratigan, secretary Council of Allied Building Trades, presenting a protest from the Council against the action of the Central Labor Union in refusing to declare the office of treasurer vacant, and holding that such action was in contravention of all law. Referred to Organization Committee, with instructions to attempt a settlement of the matter.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Brewery Workers: Requested that the Central Labor Union investigate published statement in the Brauer Zeitung relative to late Heürich case Ruled out of order.

It was moved that the secretary be directed to communicate with the International Brewery Workmen secretary and demand the names of delegates of the Central Labor Union who accepted bribes in the recent firemen's strike as intimated in the Brauer Zeitung. Amended that a committee be appointed, one from each organization, to investigate the entire Brewery Association matter. Ruled out of order.

Firemen: Stated that they neglected to invite the Central Labor Union to be present at the opening of the Stationary Firemen's Association convention, and requested that a committee be appointed to attend a smoker to be given this week. The request was granted.

The Fireman also requested the Greivance Committee to report on their greivance against the Publisher's Association.

Cigarmakers: Requested that the name of W. E. Carney be taken from the unfair list. Granted.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Special Committee on Meat Cutter's case reported progress.

Contract Committee reported progress.

Labor Day Committee reported progress.

On request, Delegate Ratigan was relieved from service on the Organization Committee on the case of the Carpenters investigation and Delegate Nolta appointed in his stead.

By request, Delegate Desmond was removed from the Organization Committee.

Delegate Deitrich introduced the following resolution, which was adopted:

WHEREAS, The International Brotherhood of Stationary Fireman is in annual convention in this city for the present week; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Central Labor Union in regular meeting assembled hereby tenders to the International Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen our hearty congratulations, and an earnest wish that the convention will be a success for the benefit of all organized labor.

Resolved, That the secretary be instructed to forward a copy of these resolutions to the convention of Firemen now assembled.

Adjourned.

New Wage Systems.

In the entire relation of capital and labor there is probably no detail that is more vital than that of the payment to labor of its share in the return for industrial production. On both sides there is at present quickening of interest, evident in the consideration given all proposals for reconciling differences arising out of the very humanly selfish desire to get as much and to give as little in return as possible. This entirely legitimate desire does not involve a necessary antagonism, provided the workman is ready to use his strength and intelligence genuinely, and the employer to consider the wage cost of his product rather than the workman's wage total. Living fairly up to this principle of fundamental equity does away with all serious causes of mutual discontent, as has been proved times without number.

There have been proposed many plans for stimulating the workman's interest in an increase of his production and of assuring him of the genuine identity of his and his employer's welfare. Until lately these nearly all took the form of some profit-sharing plan or other, with no great measure of general success to their credit. Such lack of success was in great part due to the length of time involved before profit distribution could be made, the smallness of the amounts falling to each individual as compared with exaggerated expectations and difficulties of dealing equitably with the voluntarily migratory element among the workers. Latterly more attention has been devoted to plans purposing the direct and immediate participation of workman in the benefits arising from increased activity on his part, the benefit to manifest itself anew with each recurring payday in the pleasant chink of coin, and the result appears in the various adaptations of the piece rate, the premium plan and the bonus system.—Organized Labor.

Labor Day Races.

E. J. Ratigan, chairman of the committee having in charge the automobile races at Benning on Labor Day, has secured the sanction of the American Automobile Association to the meet. The races will be held under the auspices of the Central Labor Union.

All the events will be at a distance of five miles, except for the lightest steam machines. The first race will be a free-for-all, for machines of any motive power, weighing from 1,432 to 2,204 pounds. The prizes will be silver trophies, valued at $25 and $15.

The second contest will be between gasoline machines, weighing from 881 to 1,432 pounds, and the prizes the same as in the first event, and the succeeding contests silver trophies, valued at $25 and $15. Event No 3 will be for machines of any motive power, weighing from 551 to 881 pounds, while the fourth will be for gasoline machines weigh ng from 1,432 to 2,204 pounds. The last event will be the three-mile race for steam machines weighing from 551 to 881 pounds.

Mr. Ratigan will distribute entry applications from his office, at 624 Sixth street northwest, from 4 to 5 o'clock any afternoon.

BROTHERHOOD OF FIREMEN.

Considering Questions Bearing On Trade Jurisdiction.

The convention of International Brotherhood of Firemen are in session this week at Typographical Temple.

The membership of the Brotherhood now comprises 30,000, over 5,000 having been added during the past year.

Local No. 63 has made arrangements for entertaining the visitors during their stay in the city.

One of the first propositions acted upon by the convention was that calling for the insistence of an eight-hour day on and after May 1, 1905. It was adopted without opposition.

The question of trade jurisdiction with the Brewery Workers was given careful consideration, the insistence of many delegates to the carrying out of the findings of the New Orleans and Boston conventions of the A. F. of L. being emphasized.

The Brewery Workers have been ordered to turn over all firemen in breweries to the Brotherhood of Firemen, but have failed to do so

President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, assured the convention that the next session of the Executive Council of the A. F. of L. would consider the question.

The Heurich case comes up to-day in the convention, when Local 63 will present its case to the convention.

On Tuesday evening the delegates were given a smoker at Building Trades Hall, by Local No. 63, under the management of L. S. Crown, secretary of No. 63. Addresses were made by W. H. Sherman, E. J. Roche, R. G. M. Ross, John H. Brinkman, and F. B. Maguire. The affair was one of enjoyment.

"Down Where The Rappahannock Flows."

Down in lower Middlesex where
The Rappahannock flows,
And the sun lights up the valley where
The sweet potato grows,
There is a hallowed spot which in
Mem'ry ever dwells,
Where my friends and kindred meet
For whom my bosom swells.

There are woodlands, there are streams,
Where the cool refreshing breeze
Wakes the echoes of the morn in the branches
Of the trees,
Where the squirrel and the rabbit gambol
All the sunny day,
And the spotted trout and croaker
Sport themselves out in the bay.

There are stately oaks and pines and
The gentle rippling rill,
Meandering through the tangled wood
Close by the ancient mill,
Where the farmers take their grain in
The early dewy morn,
Perchance of wheat, perchance of rye, more
Often golden corn.

There turtledoves and robins and the
Mournful whippoorwill,
Whose plaintive note is often heard behind
Some distant hill,
Just as the twilight deepens and the Evening shadows fall
Wafted on the gentle summer breeze through
Oak and pine trees tall.

There are rivulets and creeks and an
Ebb and flowing tide,
On whose bosom fleet canoes in the Autumn gently glide,
Laden with the luscious oyster, channel
Crabs, and finest fish,
When prepared by any housewife make rich
And wholesome dish.

In the harvest time of autumn when the Grain is gathered in,
And all meet around the fireside the flax
And cotton spin,
With evergreens around the walls the yule
Log on each hearth,
In sweet content it seems to me the Dearest place on earth,

Ah! those happy bygone days
When a lad I used to stroll
And climb the rustic fences, down the grassy
Hills would roll,
Still linger in my memory, though I am
Far away
From the sandy beach and river and the Gorgeous sunlit bay.

When my final day has come and I lay
Me down to rest,
When my soul has winged its way to the Mansions of the blest,
Lay my mortal body down,
Some shady hillock seek
In a grave in old Virginia by the Rolling Chesapeake.

Must Employ Unionists.

The injunction order of the Court Commissioner at Milwaukee, Wis., restraining William and Charles Marnitz and Charles Gusts, merchant tailors, from employing any but union help will, for the time being, compel the firm to carry out its agreement with the local tailors' union to employ only its members. The case is the first of its kind, and if successfully passed on by the courts that will review the injunction, there is no doubt that this procedure in the future will be frequently used as a weapon of organized labor to combat the action of its employers. The decision will also determine whether or not an employer or employe can violate the terms of a wage contract at will.

Attorney W. R. Rubin, who represented the union and obtained the injunction, expressed the belief that this is the first case in the history of labor unions where an employer of labor has been restrained from employing non-union men. The injunction not only prevents the Mornitz company from hiring non-union men, but the company is prevented from discharging members of the union because of their membership.—National Tribune.

John Hay's Signature an Open Sesame—Potsdam a Garrison Town—Through the Reichstag at Berlin—Cologne a City of Beauty—Its Cathedral Magnificent.

BRUSSELS, July 24, 1904.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

My last letter ended with our arrival in Berlin, so I will commence this with our visit to Potsdam on Tuesday last.

Taking a 'bus for Potsdamerhof, we boarded the train and after a run of thirty minutes drew into Potsdam, the seat of Government for the province of Brandenburg, with a population of over 58,000 and containing a garrison of 7,000 soldiers.

We were fortunate in securing the same guide we had two years ago. He proved to be not only very interesting, but a very intelligent, guide and recounted many reminiscences that added to the pleasures of the day.

He pointed out an old lime tree that is closely connected with the life of Frederick the Great, and then conducted us into the old palace, erected in 1670. This edifice contains many objects of interest, one of which is a table Napoleon used when he occupied the palace a hundred years ago.

We were next shown through the Garrison church, under the pulpit of which is the vault containing the remains of Frederick the Great and his father Frederick William I. A large number of French flags, captured during the Franco-Prussian war are suspended near the pulpit.

The Church of Peace, near by, contains the remains of Emperor Frederick and the Empress and their two sons. The atrium is adorned with fine marble recumbent figures of the first two and marble busts of the children.

We then made our way to the great park of Sans Souci, passing a large fountain that throws water to the height of 130 feet. A flight of steps leads from the fountain up to the palace of Sans Souci, a one-story building covering a large area. This building was erected for Frederick the Great in 1745. His rooms are preserved unaltered and contain many valuable articles of interest. In front of the palace are buried eleven of his favorite dogs and his war horse. Here can also be seen the globe and other objects taken from the observatory in Peking two years ago.

We had the pleasure of being shown through the new palace, the Summer home of Emperor William. It contains over two hundred apartments, one of which is the richest room in the world, it is claimed. We closed up our visit to Potsdam with a visit to Charlottenhof Castle and then returned to Berlin.

The next day we went to the Reichstag, the legislative building. The doorkeeper informed us we were too late and could not get in until the next day. We told him we were to leave Berlin on the morrow. He was still emphatic in refusing to allow us to enter, and then we told him we were from Washington. While that seemed to make some impression, we finally played our last card and pointed to the signature of Secretary John Hay at the bottom of our passport. That name opened up the whole building to our inspection, and our guide was some official in authority, for he conducted us through practically every apartment in the vast edifice. John Hay's name on a piece of paper seems to act like a charm, as we have found on several occasions.

In the afternoon we went to the Zoo, one of the largest in Europe, and were greatly amused by the antics of two chimpanzees that are allowed to roam around an open space.

Thursday we came down to Frankfort, one of the richest cities in Germany. We spent some time in driving over the city, having pointed out to us many buildings of note, visited the cathedral, and admired the beautiful streets and its numerous monuments.

The next afternoon we spent in Wiesbaden, a famous resort about one hour from Frankfort, and then run over to Mainz in the evening, visiting the cathedral and seeing the Guttenburg monument.

The next morning we boarded the express steamer Kaiserin Augusta Victoria and sailed down the beautiful Rhine, so full of historic interest. We saw the many castles, some in ruins, lining its banks, and altogether enjoyed the trip very much, although we have been over this route before. We arrived in Cologne about six o'clock and put in the evening promenading the busy thoroughfare and admiring the fine stores. This morning we attended services in the cathedral, one of the sights of Europe. The audience was the largest we ever saw, numbering up in the thousands. At 2 o'clock we took train for little Paris, or Brussels. It has been extremely warm here, no rain having fallen for over four weeks. A storm came up about 8 o'clock and lowered the temperature considerable.

To-morrow we make a pilgrimage to the battlefield of Warteloo, about nine miles from this city, returning in the evening, and the next day start for Paris, where we will spend about one week, after which we will make our way to the Channel Islands, putting in a week or ten days in the islands of Jersey, Guernsey, and Wight.

Yours respectfully,

F. E. BUCKLAND.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of August 9, 1904.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order by Vice Chairman Daly at 8 o'clock p. m.

The minutes of meeting of August 2 read and approved.

Credentials were read from Washington Lodge of Machinists, certifying to Stuart Reid, vice Y. V. Clark, and referred to committee consisting of Noth nagel, Ryan, and Beckett, who made favorable report.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Stone Laborers, protesting against assessment. Placed on file.

From Washington Lodge of Machinists, relative to employment of non-union machinists by National Electric Co. Referred to Business Agent.

From Washington Lodge of Machinists, asking assistance on shops working nine hours. Referred to Business Agent.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Nothnagel, Ratigan, Beckett, Falbush, ahd Desmond reported from Central Labor Union.

By-Law Committee reported their approval of change submitted relative to Article VI, Section 1, and the hour of meeting was changed from 7.30 to 8 p. m.

Business Agent reported progress on Norcross Bros.

ROLL CALL.

Twenty-five delegates from fifteen unions responded to the call.

Sheet Metal Workers asked that secretary have printed roster of members of Employing Contractors Association and forward a copy of the same to each Local. Lost.

Stone Laborers asked for information relative to assessment.

Electrical Workers voted no on assessment, and had ordered protest sent to Central Labor Union on their action in electing delegate-at-large.

Steam Fitters stated that they had adjusted their grievance with the shop of Cyrus B. Rees and thanked all members for assistance rendered.

A delegation from Washington Lodge of Machinists was admitted and through Stuart Reid and J. H. Rice described the conditions of the machinists in the city shops and asked the Council of Allied Building Trades to assist them in maintaining the eight-hour day.

Carpet Workers reported that their union was making rapid strides.

The Secretary was directed to notify unions of the nonattendance of delegates.

Adjourned.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

I hear that Charlie Dietrich is doing something in the way of organizing the stenographers and typewriters and the bookkeepers, and the Lord knows there are no occupations more in need of it, for there are no professions—I suppose it would be highly disrespectful to call them trades—so poorly paid. It is true that it will be hard to enforce a scale of prices in businesses in which the public and technical or business schools are constantly turning out partially formed practitioners, but organization will be worth a great deal to them. It is always well, where the employees of an occupation have been but recently organized into a trade union, that they go slow until they have had some education in trades unionism. Too frequently in such cases, before they are half organized, the hot-headed ones call a strike to enforce a demand, and not immediately succeeding, its members not being educated up to considering unionism as a part of their religion, becomes disheartened and go back to work, convinced that unionism is a failure. The ununionized public always associates unions with strikes in its mind, not knowing that most of the victories of unionism are strikeless ones and that the strike is only the last resort—a club without the threat of which unionism would be powerless. Too great readiness to strike has hurt unionism among the uneducated unionists more than any other thing. It takes years to properly educate workingmen up to a proper affection for the union for itself—to acquire the feeling that the nonunionist is not an honorable man, that the union means more than the advantage of the immediate moment, and that the union of a newly organized trade can not expect to take rank at once with older organizations or to have in the same degree the respect of the employer. Take the case of an employer who employs skilled artisans and bookkeepers and salesmen. He has been accustomed to paying the former rate set by the union of their trade and does so cheerfully, making his contracts and prices in view of what he has to pay for having his work done. But the two latter occupations have never had a scale of prices and he has been in the habit of paying them what he pleased, and though they may be as highly skilled in their part of the business as the artisans are in theirs, he thinks of them as employees whose places can be readily filled—as, while unorganized, they can be—and as a consequence he thinks that in paying them half or two-thirds of what he pays the workmen of the unionized trade he is doing his full duty. It is so all the way through. Say what he may, the employer has ten times the respect for the manhood of his union employees that he has for those of occupations that have not been fortunate enough to be organized. He may hate the union because of his selfish desire to withhold from his workmen more of their earnings, but it is not at all incongruous to respect and hate the same thing. To be thoroughly grounded in the religion of unionism is the first thing that new unionists have need of—to feel that unionism is manhood and that scabbery is dishonor. And it is to me one of the most hopeful things for unionism that the general public is gradually learning to despise the scab and to honor the unionist, as is evidenced more and more in every great strike.

In H. Herbert Stell's recent letter to me is this paragraph:

A printer who once subbed on the Congressional Record asked me what they will do with the idiotic custom of thin spacing fat-faced type when machines are put on the Record. I tell him it had also impressed me as a piece of blacksmithing for which there could be no valid excuse.

As this is the second time Herbert has referred to this subject to me, I will take the trouble to inform him that it never was the custom to thin space fat-face type on the Record. But the readers would not permit "shoemakers" to space over words that would easily go in, frequently to make a fat quad line at the end of a paragraph. As the Record has always been solid, the proofreaders have always insisted that it should be spaced as solid matter should be. I am afraid that Herbert got his information from a "blacksmith."

H. Herbert Steele writes me from San Francisco, under date of July 28, as follows:

Of things ancient I mail you a copy of the Evening Post having an editorial on the Government Printing Office. Assuming that this is a stab at Messrs. Palmer and Brian, you and Wheat and Charlie Robinson, it is but just that you should Flot him with your Jetsam. The Post is the Citizens' Alliance organ paper of 'Frisco. Its publisher was discharged from the Examiner (Hearst's paper) and got the management of the Post, at the time owned by the Huntingtons, of the Southern Pacific Railroad. The death of Collis P. Huntington a couple of years ago and the subsequent squeezing of the younger Huntingtons out of the Southern Pacific put the Post on the bum, and in desperation the publisher floundered into the Citizens' Alliance camp. Now, it happened that some big advertisers, as a matter of policy, were contributors to the Alliance, and the Post's publisher, in espousing the "open shop" and "down with unions" policy, sought to be in the swim, but the fish in that swim weren't suckers. Hardly a day passes that the Post does not whack the printers' union—the "open shop" is its continuous wail—but rats get no further into its precincts than the front office or the editorial room. I understand the Chronicle and Call also took a step or two up the Alliance ladder, leaving the Examiner a clear field of the union labor side, but they stepped backward from a discouraging outlook.

I mark in the copy of the Post forwarded the spot where had been carried a label of the exact shape of the printers' label, but bearing the words "San Francisco Citizens' Alliance," which is now absent. Several rat printing offices also used this label. The union brought suit, and you will see the result in a marked paper forwarded.

The Alliance is managed by Herbert George, for years a political fakir in Denver and publisher of a weekly paper which changed its name and politics to fit conditions, having been Populist, Labor Union, and Militarism in turn. However, the Alliance is a waning issue here, being held together by a few grafters and ministers of all denominations, the latter always considering the Hereafter a long way secondary to Temporal Conditions when personally applied.

As the paper Herbert refers to has not come to hand, I am unable to "Flot the Post with my Jetsam." But probably neither the distinguished gentlemen whose names are mentioned in connection with mine, nor I, will ever suffer seriously because of the animadversions of a scabby San Francisco newspaper.

The Navy-Yard mechanics were told last Saturday that if they took the half-holiday it must be subject to the decision of the comptroller as to whether per diem employees could be paid for the time. When the bell rang at 12 o'clock, with hurrahs and shouts they quit work almost to a man, though there were a few of the sucker class who thought they might solidify themselves by staying at work.

A friend of mine was telling it around industriously one night last week that "Bloomer is a pretty good fellow, but he has a way of belittling and making fun of people that I don't like, and I'm just waiting for him to get onto me and there will be something doing." I don't know who my friend is, but I suspect that he is one of the class of fellows who would rather see their names in print than to get next to a 15-to-1 shot over at Benning's, but who have little claim to such notice and have had little of it.

A son was born to Dr. and Mrs. De Witt C. Chadwick last Tuesday, and at last accounts mother and child were doing nicely. His many friends and old associates will heartily congratulate Dr. Chadwick on realizing the ambition of every well-organized man—that of being a father—and the more on being the father of a boy.

Mark R. H. Witter, chairman of the committee of arrangements of St. Louis Union, No. 8, honored me with an invitation to attend the fiftieth convention of the I. T. U., at Convention Hall, World's Fair Grounds, St. Louis, August 8 to 13, 1904, and to participate, as guest of Typographical Union, No. 8, in all the functions of the week, for which I am grateful. The invitation arrived a little late, owing to misdirection, to be acknowledged last week. I should have liked to go, but "'twas not thus to be." Our union is being well represented there, however, and while I would have met many of the old-timers there whom it is always a pleasure to meet, I had to deny myself.

A. F. BLOOMER.

CONVENTION ECHOES.

Our Correspondent Jots Down a Few Items of Interest.

Messrs. Tom Crowley, Sid Fleming, and others constituted a reception delegation at Cincinnati.

A boom for convention reading clerk was promptly squelched by Thomas A. Bynum, that gentleman having indorsed Mr. Kreiter for that position.

Saturday night over forty divided their attention between the reception at the Inside Inn, the Pike, the downtown theaters, and the historical extravaganza "Louisiana," the last-named production giving its one hundredth performance at Delmar Garden on the evening in question.

On both of the occasions on which Mr. J. F. Busche has visited Washington he broke into the "upper ten," which pleasantly may need sufficient interpretation to state that this was the number of his berth.

Master Hover and the two little Misses Berg contributed to the gayety.

Additions to the Washington contingent consisted of F. C. Lampe, delegate, and Edward C. Monaghan, of Newark, N. J., Walter C. Booth and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas N. O'Keeffe, of Richmond, Va., and Mrs. McKennan, of Woonsocket, R. I., the last-named lady being a sister of Miss Teresa McDonald, of the Post

En voyage were three stereotypers, Messrs. D. J. Murray, secretary of the Washington union, and Delegates F. S. Larkin, of the Times, and C. O. Buckingham, of the G. P. O. Mr. Buckingham intended to put his little camera into action on a group picture on our arrival, an event postponed by darkness.

The Woman's Auxiliary found representation in Miss Katharine K. Spencer, the delegate; Miss Teresa McDonald and Mesdames Hover, Bynum, Berg, and Johnson.

Si Daougherty often said he knew how many liars there were in Columbia Union. I never kept tab on the liars; but I have an idea how many "quitters" there are. Those ex-delegates who were going to attend the convention and lost their nerve at the eleventh hour.

A gentleman working in the ad. room of a leading daily tells me that no less than seventeen employes of his paper, all comparatively young men, have been forced to use eyeglasses on account of the brightness of the linotype lines.

Joe M. Johnson and wife joined the Washington delegation since publication of the list in last week's TRADES UNIONIST, he "begging off" Friday morning.

As to rates, hundreds of desirable rooms can be secured in private houses at 50 cents per night and hundreds of restaurants furnish substantial meals at 25 cents. Keep right on past the line of cappers and barkers and consult the columns of the newspapers or ring doorbells.

O. J. Ricketts and daughter were with our party as far west as Indianapolis, where a change of cars was made for their home in Illinois. They will visit the Exposition later.

F. P. Norton is working in a St. Louis job office.

J. W. Foley, a Washington boy who has been in Denver for five years, is in attendance.

Ben Hanford, Socialistic candidate for Vice-President, speaks at Social Turner Hall on the 11th instant.

T. M. Surguy, of the Henry Wilkens Co. has been in Hot Springs, Ark., for five weeks' treatment for kidney trouble, experiencing material improvement.

As I enter the Fair Grounds to attend the barbecue there is a demonstration cyclonic afield, and I am the recipient of an enthusiastic reception from the "girl with the picture hat," Miss Pearl Martin, of St. Joe, Mo., pleasantly remembered from Washington. The reverse of this lady's card contains Mr. Eugene Field's poem "Lover's Lane." Mr. Field married a St. Joe lady, hence the inspiration.

Late Washington arrivals are Messrs. Hutchinson, Harrison, Goodkey, T. F. Ellis, Sauter, and O. T. Pierce and wife.

Mrs. J. F. Lee, Louisville, representing the Auxiliary at Washington, is again a delegate.

Sunday afternoon was devoted to the barbecue and athletic sports galore—a full appreciation of which could only be attained by the publication of the entire programme.

The Washington contingent are urging the candidacy of Miss Laura B. Gordon for the Presidency of the Auxiliary.

E. W. Searfoss, now a New York Herald employe, is here. Mr. Searfoss has paid for a Long Island home, he tells me, since leaving the G. P. O.

The report of the convention by the Post-Dispatch is peculiarly accurate. They mention a gavel presented to President Lynch by S. Gerrster, presumably E. E. Gessler; and record "about 450 delegates in attendance, including 6 women, most of these from the Government Printing Office at Washington."

H. S. SUTTON.

THE I. T. U. CONVENTION.

The Fiftieth Session Now At Work in St. Louis.

Fully 400 delegates are in attendance at the fiftieth session of the I. T. U.

Frederick Driscoll, representing the Newspaper Publishers' Association, addressed the convention on Tuesday, and said in part:

"The newspaper composing room employee is favored with very much higher wages and also reduced hours than union printers receive from any other class of employers. Therefore, in all fairness, should not the union treat the newspaper publisher with greater consideration than has been shown in the past? Do not attempt to govern the business administration of the composing room. Do not interfere with the judgment of the foreman as to the competency of the workmen by establishing low standards of competency in your local union laws and thus reducing the output. Repeal all priority lists and sub-lists either in I. T. U. or local laws. Allow the office to hire unskilled workmen to perform unskilled labor at a proper wage for such work. Then will publishers cease to object to a closed shop covering only skilled labor."

The laws committee presented the following proposition, which was adopted:

"Any officer or member of a union who shall suppress or conceal from his union or the executive council any official information concerning a strike or a proposed strike shall, upon conviction by the local union, be suspended or expelled. It is provided also that the executive council shall have power to deal with violators of this law where the local union does not act."

Section 130, of the general laws was repealed. It reads as follows:

"Members employed under permit in non union offices shall not engage in a strike ordered by any other party than the union they belong to."

An attempt was made to emasculate section 95, known as the priority law, but after the proposition was carried, a reconsideration was had and the matter was sent back to the committee on laws.

The recommendation to repeal section 96, general laws, regulating what are knows as "must" days, was defeated, as was a similar recommendation to repeal section 97, which prohibits a foreman selecting a force from day to day or from men not regularly employed in the office.

Sections 101 and 102, relating to practice of foremen giving out six-day situations on seven-day papers was sent back to the laws committee, which committee had asked for the repeal of the two sections named.

On the opening of Wednesday's session President Lynch read the following telegram from President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor:

"The constant progress, the excellent growth and expanding power and influence of the International Union, protecting and promoting the interests of the members of the craft, are the source of the greatest gratification to all. Accept and convey to the officers and delegates my heartiest fraternal greetings and sincerest congratulations, as well as highest hope and anticipations for greatest possible harmony and success of your great institution."

An attempt to make the strike benefit uniformly $7 per week, instead of $5 for single men and $7 for married men as at present, was adopted, but on a reconsideration was defeated.

A proposition to create a certain day in each year as Memorial Day for deceased members was referred back to be acted upon as a resolution.

A proposition looking toward withholding charters to cities or towns where the minimum wage scale should be not less than $15 per week and eight hours was defeated.

The convention had a proposition prohibiting its members joining the militia under penalty of expulsion, the committee reporting unfavorably. Delegate Anderson, chairman of the committee on laws, in advocating the report of the committee, quoted the lines from Sir Walter Scott:

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said.
This is mine own, my native land."

The report of the committee was adopted.

At to-day's (Thursday) session the vote on place of meeting of next convention resulted in the selection of Toronto, Canada. Columbus, Ohio, and Portland, Oreg., were the unsuccessful contestants.

A proposition was rejected having for its purpose the prohibiting of proprietors working with union men, and prohibiting union men in assisting on work done by proprietors.

A proposition to declare foremen ineligible for election as delegate or alternates to a convention was defeated.

An up-to-date Cincinnati divorce lawyer has on his business card, "Misfit marriages a specialty."

Violence Can Not Win Strikes.

Under no circumstances should unionists resort to violence to win a strike. Strikes won in this way are demoralizing defeats in the long run. The progress of the union movement must largely depend upon its ability to keep its head, even when confronted with grave provocation and injustice.

Not only the public, but the intelligent, conservative unionist, is uncompromisingly opposed to violence. The support of both is essential to the success of the trades-union movement and whatever tends to alienate that support is a far worse defeat and has a much greater injurious effect than the loss of any strike, peacefully conducted, that organized labor has ever engaged in. The justice of any cause ceases to claim attention when public rights are invaded and trampled upon.

Violence is a weakness and shows a lack of those qualities necessary to meet and successfully settle serious problems.

Regardless of outward appearances of organization, violence is a sure sign that in all essentials organization is lacking and weak.

There are hard and fast rules that public security demands must be lived up to, and one is that the law must be administered by methods the public sanctions and prescribes. Employers' Associations, Citizens' Alliances, the Governor of a State or the President of United States, a labor organization or a church cannot be permitted to take the law into their own hands. Their conduct at all times must be governed by the law and not the law by their conduct.

Men or interests may be honest in their contentions and have the merit of those contentions on their sides, but they cease to be honest when they resort to violence, and the merits of their contentions are overshadowed by the great merits of public right.

We are thoroughly cognizant of the fact that the violence charged to labor organizations is invariably as unjustified as a charge holding the church responsible for the violence of the barroom, or charging the bollweevil with the responsibility of the Russian Japanese war.

Nevertheless, unionists want to always keep in mind that local union which resorts to violence to gain its end is weaving around itself a web that will enmesh and destroy it.—Boston (Mass.) Shoeworkers' Journal.

Postum Post Pleads.

As an indication of the attempt to make war on organized labor, and its resulting circumstances, witness the appeal of the Postum Cereal man now running in all the daily papers of the country.

The Postum people were asked to cut out their advertising in the Los Angeles Times, but failing to do so their product was put under the ban by organized labor.

That it hurts is shown by the publicity given the article alluded to, which undoubtedly cost many thousands of dollars to place before the public, and is full of venom at unions in general. It is poor advertising to say the least, and this counterfeit food has seen its day. Union men will not use Postum Cereal.

What Is Liberty?

We all declare for liberty, but in using the same word we do not all mean the same thing. With some the word liberty may mean for each man to do as he pleases with himself and the product of his labor; while with others the same word may mean for some men to do as they please with other men and the product of other men's labor.—Abraham Lincoln.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

First Division.

J. C. Shinnen has gone to his home in Altantic City to recuperate for thirty days.

A. L. Bodwell and C. L. Williams have been transferred to the Interior Branch.

David T. Lloyd will visit Baltimore, Philadelphia, and other Eastern cities for fifteen days.

Henry Frank was added to the temporary force last Tuesday, being assigned to slug 47.

Wm. McFarlane, Jack S. Robinson, and Frank M. Lloyd returned last Friday after the full thirty days' vacation.

C. W. Radley has joined his wife and little son up in New York State, where he expects to spend fifteen pleasant days.

E. R. Sprague spent Sunday with the soldiers in Harper's Ferry. He reports the First Division boys as being the pictures of health.

Geo. W. Sylvester, who resigned from the Library branch some five weeks ago, has been reinstated and assigned to this division.

Mr. Kinsolving makes a very desirable substitute for the Third Division paragrapher. But I do wonder if he pulled that plug Mr. Belcher forgot.

Crab cakes, as made by the boarding-house keepers on the Eastern Sho', was the inducement that caused Bruce Bielaski to spend his vacation in that vicinity.

W. S. Schinnerer, of the Y, has gone to his old home in Arkansas to spend his leave. A sick mother caused him to make the journey sooner than he had expected.

Assistant Foreman Geo. R. Boone is off on fifteen days' leave. He will visit his home in West Virginia, but spend most of the time doing the board walk at Atlantic City.

L. P. Kenney, maker-up in the Y, has the sincere sympathy of his many friends in this division on account of the sudden death of his mother, which occurred last week.

E. S. Wild and Mrs. Wild are at Rehoboth Beach. Twenty days is the amount "Pucky" figures will be required to get him rested up and ready for the winter's work.

After returning from fifteen days' leave, George Ellis found he was too strong to work. He applied for the remainder of his leave and left with last Thursday's crowd.

Wiley H. Davis is spending his leave in the land of big watermelons and pretty girls. He will probably spend the greater portion of his time with his little "Georgia Rose."

O. B. Bellinger is taking twenty-five days' leave. Together with Mrs. Bellinger and his son he will visit New York city, Saratoga, and different places in Northern New York.

"Bob" Smythe, formerly an employe of this division of the G. P. O., was calling on old friends on Monday. Mr. Smythe is now editor and proprietor of the Harrisonburg, Va., News.

Harry Templar has returned from Pennsylvania. He reports Col. A. W. Bentz as living on the fat of the land, having already depopulated several hen roosts and cleared up a ten-acre field of roastin' ears.

Now that Brothers Bloomer and Belcher have agreed to let the Marine Band continue to play a superior grade of music, undoubtedly Director Santelmann will breathe easier. But just think of it, suppose they had disagreed.

While riding home from office on his bicycle last Friday evening Chas. A. Durno had a collision with another bicyclist. Both Mr. Durno and the wheel are laid up for repairs, the former having a sprained ankle and otherwise bruised.

The following sentence is used by the compositors who are practicing on the Lanston keyboard: "The quick brown fox jumped over the lazy dog." One of these days it will be changed to: "The quick foxy foreman jumped all over the lazy operator."

Wm. Hutchinson (laborer) has a back yard full of yellow-legged chickens which he thinks will require at least thirty days to reduce to ordinary proportions. Therefore he took all the leave that was coming to him and departed last Friday.

Geo. A. Tuttle entertained his old employer, E. B. Thayer, of Wausau, Wis., last week. George showed him the big printery from cellar to garrett. Mr. Thayer is a large publisher himself, and was much interested in the G. P. O. He was on his way to New York city to meet his daughter, who is returning from Paris.

Cyrus E. Cook has taken up the fight for the union label. Last week an F street firm sent out a number of printed post cards which bore not that little emblem of unionism. Mr. Cook got up a petition signed by those receiving the cards, saying they did not approve of such printing, and sent it to the firm. The result was that the manager replied, saying henceforth the label would appear on all their printing.

The generosity of printers can be no better illustrated than by the following instance. Last week a subscription paper was passed for a distressed fellow craftsman. With less than 170 men on duty over $28 was realized. Added to this is the fact that there are a good many such papers circulated. Of course there are some who would not assist in getting St. Peter a loving cup, but the average printer is the biggest-hearted, most generous workingman on the face of the earth. And that goes, too.

Chas. E. Dietrich, of the Record, one of the District organizers for the Central Labor Union, has about perfected the organization of the typewriter girls of the District. He is earnest in his endeavors to bring about better conditions for these hard-worked and under-paid toilers, and if he succeeds will have accomplished much. He is a hard worker, and as a friend of mine puts it:

We know you are a hustler
Charley boy,
A regular old-time rustler
Charley boy.
For you've organized the writers
And their lives will be the brighter
And their work will be much lighter
Charley boy.

In connection with the use of the union label I am reminded of the fact that one of the delegates of the Auxiliary refused to wear the badge furnished by that body because it did not bear the union label. In this connection the committee that procured the badges should be exonerated, because they could learn of no badge-printing house in the country that could furnish the Allied Printing Trades label. Undoubtedly the lady had a perfect right to refuse to wear the badge, but its a 100 to 1 or better that she is the only lady delegate in St. Louis without a badge.

On last Tuesday morning a delegation, consisting of the various office chairmen, headed by Vice-President Love, who is acting President during the absence of President Berg, were granted an audience with Public Printer Palmer, relative to the working of the force on Saturday afternoons during the hours designated by President Roosevelt as a holiday. The Public Printer received the delegation in a most courteous manner and explained that he was just as anxious to pass those hours outside the office as were the employes, but that the President's order was so worded as to make him the judge as to the advisability of closing down during those hours. He further stated that he had that morning made requisition for fifty more compositors, and that every thing he could do would be done to assist in bringing about the result originally intended by President Roosevelt. After a brief but pleasant exchange of courtesies, the delegation withdraw perfectly content that if its within the range of possibilities next Saturday afternoon will find the office closed.

In the trolley car collision near Rockville Sunday, superstitious people felt that much significance should be given to the fact that each car had 13 passengers registered.

In the job room the other day "Shorty" Armstrong exhibited a $10 gold piece to Ben Wolfe. "Shorty" says his father-in-law gave it to him with the injuction never to spend it unless he got hard up. He has never spent it, but it has been in pawn several times. That beats Wolfe. He has had everything in pawn but money, he says.

Frank C. Kemon returned to work Friday.

G. D. Ellis left Thursday to take his vacation.

This division worked until 6 30 four nights last week.

L. H. Patterson returned to work after being absent some time on leave.

Frank Warner showed up for work Friday after an absence of fifteen days.

John Warner, the messenger of this division, is sick at his home in Brookland.

Geo. A. Seaman returned last week from a fifteen days' trip to St. Georges Island.

Hoyt A. Holton returned from West River, Maryland, where he put in thirty days resting.

D. A. Taylor returned from thirty days' leave Friday which he spent in Harrisonburg, Va.

Harrison Reed came to work Friday after having spent twenty-eight days' leave near Milwaukee, Wis.

Chas. A. Shelton spent his thirty days at Covington, Tenn., fishing and hunting and came to work Friday.

W. R. Branham came to work Monday having returned from twenty-five days' leave spent at Fort Valley, Ga.

James Miller, of the State Branch, showed his smiling countenance in this division a few minutes one day last week.

S L. McCarthy, messenger from Mr. Rickett's office, is doing the honors in this division in the absence of John Warner.

A. J. Campbell went on fifteen days' leave Thursday. He will spend his leave at Norfolk, Va., and points in North Carolina.

E. B. Buzhardt blowed in on us Saturday after being away his full thirty days. "Buzy" will be doing business at the old stand from now on.

Messrs. S. W. Edmunds, L. C. Johnson, T. J. Arrington. C. J. Unger, and R. M. Cheshire have returned from leave and are doing business at the old stand again.

Messrs. Wm. N. Goldstein, D. B. Hallock, Will E. Soult, A. H. McKnight, Frank L. McUmber, and E. G. Nalle are applicants for leave beginning Thursday.

When we mentioned the Saturday closing hour last week we meant 1 o'clock. Four thirty was pretty generally observed as the proper time last Saturday in the G. P. O.

Robert Smythe, at one time an employe of the G. P. O., was calling on friends in this division Monday. Mr. Smythe is now engaged in the newspaper business at Harrisonburg, Va. He was founder and at present is general manager of the Daily News.

Jos. E. Goodkey is in St. Louis this week taking in the convention, the fair, and seeing his old-time friends. He joined St. Louis union as an apprentice member a number of years ago. He received an invitation from that union last week to meet with them in a reunion of old members this week.

A man after our own heart is the Register of Wills of the District of Columbia. When at the close of the fiscal year he found $600 surplus in his office he made a "divy" of the same among those of his employes whose salaries were less than $900 per annum. He said that his office was required to be self-supporting, and that having accomplished this purpose he proposed to give his employes on small salaries the advantage of whatever surplus there might be. All hail to this big-hearted officeholder.

A committee consisting of the chairmen of the various divisions, headed by Vice-President Wm. R. Love, waited on the Public Printer with reference to the Saturday half holiday, of which we have recently been deprived. Mr. Palmer received the committee in a courteous manner and stated that he would not ask the men to work only when it could not be avoided; that he had asked the Civil Service Commission for fifty additional men, which would perhaps relieve the situation, and he hoped it would not be necessary to work Saturday afternoon in the future.

OUTING ON GREENMOUNT LAKE.

A Writer at Union Printers Home Tells About It.

John W. Campbell, a member of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, in a letter to a friend in this city, writes as follows:

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.
July 21, 1904.

Yesterday was the second annual picnic and excursion in which I had the honor of being a participant, and it was to Greenmount Mountains, on the Colorado Midland road, about 18 or 20 miles from Colorado Springs, and from the Home there were some 126 inmates and employees, and from Colorado Springs Union some 124 "prints" and their invited guests.

The day was an ideal one and as it was the only one that we have had for nearly three weeks that we had not had a shower, it seems as if Providence favors the day on which an announcement in which the management of the Home take to give an entertainment; and to day we have had a first-class shower.

The members of the home were invited by bulletin in the assembly room to be ready by 8.30 a. m. to proceed to the station of the Home and to take the street cars for the Santa Fe station, and that there was awaiting us a special to proceed to Greenmount Lake, and at 9.30 a. m. we went aboard the train for that point, at which we arrived about 11.30 or 11 35 a. m. and were told to proceed to the pavilion and wait for our dinner, which we accordingly did, and a more sumptuous repast than that which awaited us it would be impossible to imagine.

Our provisions had been prepared the day before and were conveyed to the depot by our wagons and thence shipped by rail to the lake, and upon our arrival all we had to do was to erect an impromptu table and the feast was opened to us.

The bill of fare or menu was gotten up by our chef, with the assistance of Mr. and Mrs. Deacon, and it did an honor to them. The way the inmates and invited guests partook of it would have done credit to a Colorado cyclone.

Immediately after dinner there took place the races, composed of pipe racing, potato races, wheelbarrow races, and a free for all race, which was won by our gardener, Ed. Price.

Among the most prominent aud closely-contested races was the ladies race of 75 yards, which was won by our third-floor chambermaid, Miss Bessie Cherry, for which she was warmly applauded by all the inmates of that department, her opponent being Miss Edinger, a formidable one, who won the prize last year, and was only beaten by a foot and a half.

The pipe race was one of the most amusing affairs of the entertainment. It consists of each contestant going to a given point and taking a pipe off a table situated about 25 yards from the place of beginning, and then to light it, and to proceed to the judges stand with it lit and burning; and if the contestant happened to let it go out on his way to the judge's stand he has to return to the table and procure another match and relight it. "Buck" Adams, of whom I wrote you before, was the winner of last year's prize, but did not take part this year.

The next race was the potato race for ladies, for which there was five or six entries, was won by Miss Irene Roland, who received a fine bottle of perfume.

In the wheelbarrow race the contestants were blindfolded and had to wheel the barrow to a stake at a point about thirty paces distant and the barrow had to be turned around at the same time. The countenances of some of the participants were really amusing to behold on the taking off of the handkerchiefs and finding they had started in the wrong direction. This is the race in which Mr. Deacon and McCaffrey were entered last year, but as they made such a good guess, they did not enter this year. Once was enough for them, as likewise Dr. Christopher and Mr. Carrington.

But the top of the fun was when my old friend Harry McManus was chosen to lead in the cake walk. Being an old man, he was given the lead of the party, and to see him with his lady's hat on was one of the redeeming features of the affair. He put you in mind of the Irishman with his grandfather's hat, one of the old timers, and the way he paraded the pavilion with it was a caution. The girls the day before had been arranging their hats, which were mostly of paper, and they were immense affairs. Harry, with his partner's hat on his head, and parading around, was the observed of all observers. Then Mrs. Deacon, with an immense hat of broad dimensions, was also one of the participants. She is a lady of large proportions and her hat become her accordingly.

The whole affair was one in which the management has the praise of the entire Home, and it shows how they think of the benefits which they can provide for us. In fact, without them we would be in a poor condition, indeed, as they seem to be ever studying our welfare, and it is appreciated by us.

In proceeding to Greenmount Lake we had to pop through some seven tunnels, but they are small, and you can tell by us rising to an altitude of some 2,000 feet above the Home grounds that we were nearly 18,000 feet above sea level.

I hope to see you and our delegates out here after the convention, along with our Auxiliary. You will feel doubly paid by the visit.

Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard, whom I took a rowing in one of the boats on the lake, and if I ever get in another boat again for the pleasure of rowing I wish it may swamp with me if it is as hard to pull as the one I was last in. The wind was from the east, and to pull to the west was easy enough, but when you turned and wanted to get back it took all the marrow out of your backbone to do so. However, we got back safe and it gave me an appetite for my dinner. So you see that I earned it anyway.

Henry Parr's Family Reunion.

[From Albany Times Union, July 28.]

Mine Host Henry Parr's eighteenth annual clambake and family reunion at the Abbey yesterday was attended by about three hundred of the friends of the genial Henry, and that they had a good time goes without saying. A better day could nor have been selected. The bake was made by Geo. Parr, and he demonstrated the fact that he is very proficient in the line of doing things. There were a number who never saw a bake prepared, and they waited with interest the work of "Georgie" and his assistants. The bake was opened at 5 o'clock and a corps of efficient waiters soon had the baskets filled with clams, lobsters, chicken, fish, corn and potatoes, "Murphy's" and sweets. Every one brought an appetite, and in a short time the ground was strewn with the wrecks of the feast. Mrs. Parr was also busy and kept a watchful eye to see the ladies were well cared for. One of the features of the afternoon was the presence of "Steve" Caldwell, jr. He was in company of Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell. This was his first bake and he gave notice he would attend all in the future. He is a great lover of the Elks, and his application has been filed with Secretary Ahearn of Albany Lodge No. 49. He is a little fat rascal and was the pet of the assemblage. He is eight months old and has great promises of becoming as popular as his genial father. "Jake" Carlin had a trunk of new jokes and handed them out at the rate of a mile a minute. The remainder of the afternoon and early evening dancing was enjoyed, when the party came home in the moonlight.

Ladies' dining rooms. R. A. Driscoll, N. Cap. and G. Clams and Crabs.

NAVY-YARD NOTES.

Items of Inteaest to Workers in the Navy Yard.

Assistant Foreman John Byers, of the Gun Carriage shop, has a lame right arm. Cause—a new arrival at his home, the first in twelve years. Mother and daughter both doing well.

Foreman Lynch has returned from Atlantic City, where he has been rusticating. In his hurry to catch his train he inadvertantly (of course) forgot to take his wife. Mike always was absent-minded.

The foreman of the steel plant in the yard has tendered his resignation to accept a like position in Reading, Pa. A happy change from $5.52 per day to $4,000 per year. The Government loses a valuable man by this exchange.

Mrs. Samuel Lescallet, the wife of the assistant foreman of East Gun Carriage shop, died last Monday at her home in Prince George's County, Md. The boys remembered Brother Lescallet by a beautiful set piece of flowers as a remembrance of the good will they all have for him and his family.

An examination for sub-inspectors under the Navy Department has concluded and the papers sent to the Department. There were about forty applicants for the ten (10) places to be filled. It is the old story—many are called but few will be chosen. The successful ones have not as yet been announced.

Columbia Lodge, No. 174, on Sunday morning held the largest open meeting ever held under its jurisdiction. Machinists, pattern makers, blacksmiths, and molders touched elbows in perfect union. The cause of this gathering was the stand the Superintendent of the Naval Gun Factory had taken in interpreting the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury relative to the half Saturday holiday. The meeting was purely a business one, and all remarks were of a quiet and orderly nature. A committee representing all the other trades in the yard was appointed to use all means in their power to secure the enforcement of the order so kindly given to them under an executive order of the President.

An erroneous idea prevails among many Washingtonians that the transferring or changing the title from the Washington Navy Yard to "The Naval Gun Factory" endangered the title of the property and by such a change the property would, under the original deed, revert back to the heirs of the original owners. Such is not the case.

The Hon. Benjamin Stoddart, the first Secretary of the Navy, selected forty (40) acres in the southeast part of Washington, under an act of Congress, and named it the Washington Navy Yard.

The following is an abstract of the original deed:

This indenture, made the 17th day of March, 1800, between Gustavus Scott and Wm. Thornton, two of the commissioners appointed by virtue of the act of Congress entitled, "An act for establishing the temporary seat of Government of the United States," of the one part and the said United States of the other part, intrusted the said Gustavus Scott and Wm. Thornton, Commissioners as aforesaid, for and in consideration of the sum of $4,000 to them in hand paid by the Secretary of the Navy of aforesaid States, before ensealing and delivery of these presents the receipt whereof they do hereby acknowledge, have granted, bargained, sold, aliened, released, and confirmed unto the United States "forever" all those squares, pieces or parcels of ground in the city of Washington, District of Columbia known and distinguished on the plan of said city by the numbers 883 and 884, together with all and singular the rights, privileges, benefits, and advantages to the same belonging, or any wise appertaining, to have and to hold the two squares or parcels of ground and appurtenance unto the United States "forever," to the sole use and behoof of the United States.

In witness whereof the said Gustavus Scott and Wm. Thornton, commissioners aforesaid, set their hand and affixed their seals the day and year within written.

[SEAL] GUSTAVUS SCOTT,
[SEAL] WM THORNTON.
Signed, sealed in the presence of
ROBERT BREST,
CORNELIUS CONINGHAM.

Received the 17th day of March, 1800, of the United States, by the hands of the Secretary of the Navy of said States, $4,000, being the consideration within mentioned.

Attest: ROBERT BREST.

The above deed was recorded in the courts of Prince George's County, Maryland, on the 19th day of March, 1800. Thus it is clearly shown that the ground was bought and not accepted as a gift.

THE TRADES UNIONIST.

OFFICIAL ORGAN CENTRAL LABOR UNION, WASHINGTON BRANCH, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Vol. IX. No. 10. WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, AUGUST 18, 1904. Price, 3 Cents.

THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION

Resolutions Adopted on the Sudden Death of a Former Member.

LABOR DAY COMMITTEE BUSY

Grievance Committee Reports on Firemen Case Against Newspaper Offices—Cigar Makers Making a Fight on Sickles Factory—The Brewery Workers Interested in Investigating Certain Charges.

The regular weekly meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order at the usual hour Monday evening, President Dickman in the chair.

In the absence of Secretary Winslow, Delegate Deitrich acted as secretary.

The minutes were approved after a correction was made relative to discussion over Brauer Zeitung article.

Grievance Committee reported upon the grievance of Stationary Firemen with newspaper publishers.

Contracts being reported signed by Bakers Protective Association were accepted.

Credentials were presented from Bottlers Union, No. 251, by Walter Brown, to serve in place of Edward Thomas. The credentials were received and the delegate seated.

Bills for printing were read and ordered paid.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Brewery Workers asked if secretary had heard from International Brewery Workers secretary in regard to article in Brauer Zeitung.

Cigar Makers asked that N. Sickles (National Cigar factory), now on unfair list, receive attention of delegates and their unions.

Sheet Metal Workers requested that the secretary write to Arlington Brewery Co. relative to employment of non-union metal workers.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The report of the Contract Committee was taken up and considered. The report was adopted.

The Labor Day Committee reported progress.

Organization Committee recommended that Mill Workers difference be referred to Contract Committee. Concurred in.

The contract presented by Local No. 372, Soda, Mineral Water and Bottled Beer Drivers, was indorsed.

Carpet Workers' delegate introduced the following resolution, which was adopted:

WHEREAS, The Central Labor Union of Washington shares with the residents of this city the sorrow felt on account of the sad and possibly unavoidable accident that occurred on the Potomac River last Saturday, in which the lives of ten joyous and happy persons terminated; and

WHEREAS, One of the victims, T. Herbert Coates, was a former delegate to the Central Labor Union from Carpet Workers' Union; and

WHEREAS, He had performed a great deal of good in behalf of his union, and had served faithfully as a member of this body; be it

Resolved, That we sincerely regret his loss to the labor movement and extend our sympathy to his bereaved parents and relatives; and

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be placed in the minutes and a copy furnished the press.

Adjourned.

I. T. U. CONVENTION.

Transcript of Proceedings of the Session Held at St. Louis.

Chairman M. R. H. Witter, of St. Louis Union, No. 8, called the fiftieth session of the I. T. U. to order at Convention Hall, on Monday morning, August 8.

Prayer being offered by Rev. Dean Carroll M. Davis, of Christ Church Cathedral, the chairman announced that in the absence of the Governor of Missouri and the Mayor of St. Louis, he would introduce Joseph A. Jackson, president of St Louis Union, No. 8.

Mr. Jackson extended a warm greeting to the delegates and visitors, and hoped that their visit to the city would be pleasant and the convention a success.

Chairman Witter then addressed the convention, and presented President Lynch with a handsome gavel as the gift of St. Louis Union, No. 8.

President Lynch responded to the greetings extended to the convention, and declared the convention open for business, calling for the report of Secretary Bramwood.

Secretary Bramwood read the list of delegates entitled to seats in the convention, numbering about 400.

President Lynch then announced the following appointments as officers of the convention:

Chas. T. Scott (Boston), reading clerk; David Hastings (Hamilton, Ont), assistant secretary; George H. Woodward (St. Louis), sergeant-at-arms, and George Deppert and Ed Galvin (St. Louis), messengers.

The convention agreed to hold its sessions daily from 10 a. m. to 1 p. m. and from 3 p. m. to 6. p. m.

The privileges of the floor were accorded to officers elect of the I. T. U.

The chair announced the committee on laws and credentials committee, Washington being honored by the selection of T. C. Parsons on the committee on laws.

Delegate Vaughan (Washington) introduced a resolution extending fraternal greetings to the International Stereotypers and Electrotypers in convention and inviting them to attend the sessions of the I. T. U.

Delegate Gessler (Manila, P. I.) presented President Lynch with a handsome gavel made from wood from Philippine Islands, and the President accepted the gavel with thanks.

Invitations to attend the various State buildings were accepted and the Canada building at the World's Fair, and delegates were notified that while they might enter convention hall through the World's Fair grounds, should they desire to go through the grounds they would be required to pay the entrance fee. The exception to this rule was made to those delegates and visitors who were guests at the Inside Inn.

The standing committees were announced, and Washington was again honored in the selection of Miss Wilson on the Committee on Resolutions, while Delegate Gessler (Manila), formerly of Washington, was made chairman of the Copyright Committee.

The report of the committee on laws was taken up for consideration.

Section 1, Art. XI, Constitution, was amended by making it necessary to submit appeals to the I. T. U. President "in written or printed forms only."

Section 2, Art. X, was amended by striking out proviso that secretary-treasurer shall give thirty days' notice of action to be taken against a delinquent union.

Section 2, Art. II, By Laws, was amended by taking away the allied crafts representatives on Union Printers' Home trustees and delegate to A. F. of L. The action was taken owing to small representation now in allied crafts.

Section 1, Art. III, By-Laws, was amended by changing the number of unions indorsing the president and secretary-treasurer on the ticket from ten to thirty, while it will require ten indorsements for the other offices instead of five as formerly.

Section 7, Art. V, By-Laws, amended by striking out amount of compensation allowed the committee on laws.

Section 11, General Laws, was amended, relieving the secretary-treasurer from publishing statistics on scales of prices, etc., furnished by the secretaries of local unions.

Section 88, General Laws, was amended, prohibiting members of the German Typographia from working on English work at less than the local Typographical Union scale.

Frederick Driscoll, representing the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, addressed the convention, dwelling upon the fact that more latitude should be given to foremen in the newspaper chapels and protesting against the stand taken by the unions that all employes in newspaper offices should be paid the union scale. Mr. Driscoll also asked for the repeal of the so-called priority law.

A new section was added to the General Laws making it obligatory on the part of the Executive Council to disavow any strike not sanctioned by the Executive Council, and adding a penalty on those found guilty of concealing a strike or a proposed strike.

A number of propositions, presented by the Executive Council to the laws committee, claimed to be in conflict with Section 1, Art. II, of the Constitution, which declares that "nothing shall be enacted relative to the internal affairs of printing offices," gave occasion to ask for the repeal, among other sections of the General Laws, of a portion of section 95, known as the "priority law."

In the discussion that followed on the proposition Secretary Bramwood very wisely said the General Laws should conform with the Constitution, or the provision in section 1, quoted above, should be stricken from the book.

After taking action on several sections involved in the propositions, the whole matter was recommitted to the committee.

Two propositions having for their object the changing of time of holding conventions from August to September, introduced by Delegate Vaughan (Washington) were defeated.

A proposition presented by Delegate Vaughan (Washington) amending the law governing representation in the I. T. U. convention, providing for smaller unions being represented by combination with each other, and further providing for paying all expenses of delegates attendance by the I. T. U. through 50 cents assessment per member, was defeated.

A proposition to increase the I. T. U. death benefit from $70 to $300 was defeated,

A proposition to change the per cent rate from 2 per cent to 1 per cent of all benevolent societies was defeated.

A proposition attempting to regulate the giving out of all time work over six days on morning papers, not to exceed three days in each week, was defeated.

A proposition presented by Delegate Napier (Los Angeles) declaring that on and after January 1, 1905, all copy shall be followed literally, and that no compositor shall be required to study "style;" further that on and after January 1, 1905, all copy for the printer shall be typewritten, and provides that all copy not typewritten shall be paid for at an advance scale. The proposition was defeated.

Proposition to make purchase of union-label goods a part of the obligation given to members was defeated.

An attempt to amend strike benefit law to allow $7 to all members on strike was defeated.

A proposition submitted by Mr. Goodkey, of Washington, providing for a regular memorial day was referred to Committee on Resolutions,

A proposition to create an out of work fund, with an assessment of 25 cents per week and benefits of $5 per week, was defeated.

An attempt to create a new section in the General Laws, placing a fine of $50 on any member failing to put the label on his own printing while conducting a printing office, was defeated.

A proposition to make a minimum initiation fee for all unions was defeated.

A proposition to prohibit issuance of charters in jurisdictions where the minimum scale was less than $15 per week and eight hours a day's work, was defeated.

Nominations for place of meeting of the next convention being in order, the claims of Columbus, Ohio, and Toronto, Canada, were presented.

A proposition "that no member of the I. T. U. shall enlist in the services of any State in the United States as State guard, militiaman, or ranger, under penalty of expulsion, and debarred from reinstatement," was defeated.

An attempt to create new section to Art. VIII, Constitution, requiring an itemized account of organizer's expenses before payment, was defeated.

A proposition to withhold the union label from proprietors who work at the trade and are not active members was defeated.

A proposition to amend Art. IV, of the By-Laws, as follows: "Foremen are not eligible as candidates for delegates and alternates to the I. T. U.," created considerable discussion, and was defeated.

An attempt to raise the funeral benefit from $70 to $100 was defeated.

Delegate Booth, of Richmond, Va., presented a proposition to strike from the obligation what is known as the "Wabneta" or secret society obligation, but it was defeated.

A vote being taken on next place of holding the convention, resulted: For Toronto, 187; Columbus, 64

Delegate Booth, of Richmond, Va., presented a proposition having for its object the repeal of all laws governing the present system of electing officers and holding elections in conventions. The proposition was defeated.

A proposition to pay the president and secretary-treasurer $2,500 each, annually, was adopted. This goes to the referendum for ratification.

A proposition submitted by the Chicago Society of Proofreaders, defining the limitations and essentials for proofreaders elegibility, was defeated.

A proposition to amend section 81, General Laws, respecting the publishing of malicious and untrue articles on a member, caused a general discussion, which was indulged in by President Lynch, Vice-President Hawkes, and others. The matter was finally recommitted to the committee.

Delegate Stansil (Buffalo) introduced a resolution directing the trustees of the Union Printers' Home "to consider the practicability of admitting the aged wives of aged and infirm union printers to the privileges of the Union Printers' Home," and report at next convention, which was adopted.

A proposition introduced by the delegates from Denver asking that tents be provided to consumptive printers for use on the Union Printers' Home grounds was referred to the Board of Trustees.

The Committee on Eight-Hour Day made a lengthy report in which an assessment of one-half of 1 per cent is to be levied on all members for the purpose of creating a defense fund in the local union, one-half of such fund to be subject to the call of the Executive Council to enforce the demand, and January 1, 1906, set for the day when the eight-hour day shall become universal. Several amendments were made, but not carried, and the report of the committee was adopted.

Delegate Kidd, of Washington, introduced a resolution calling on delegates to bring before their unions a proposition to contribute 50 cents per capita for the Cummings Memorial at the Union Printers Home, which was adopted.

Delegate Pentzer, of Lincoln, Nebr., offered a proposition creating a memorial day, which was adopted.

A proposition submitted by Delegate Anna C. Wilson, of Washington, asking that the United States authorities consider the question of paying the Marine Band sufficient wages to preclude the necessity of their taking outside employment, was adopted.

Delegate Kidd, of Washington, introduced a proposition calling for an inquiry on the part of five physicians to be chosen on account of their knowledge of nervous diseases to report on the question of limit of speed an operator can safely attain without injury to health, and appropriating $2,500 for the purpose of said investigation. The proposition was defeated.

The committee on resolutions having reported favorably on a series of resolutions indorsing Wm. S. Waudby for labor commissioner. the resolutions were adopted.

Under the law of the I. T. U. all changes of laws under the Constitution and By-Laws adopted by the convention must be ratified by a vote of the membership, white all General Laws become effective, after passage by the convention, when the new laws go into effect, January 1, of each year.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

Our second visit to Brussels, or, as it is better known, "Petit Paree," proved to be a very enjoyable one, and we put in every minute seeing the sights of the "home of the exiles," for, perhaps, no city in all Europe has the distinction of containing more political exiles than does Brussels.

Our drive around the city included a view of the king's palace, hotel de ville, la maison du roi, the bourse, the cathedral, and many beautiful parks and boulevards. The resident quarter contains many handsome buildings.

The most interesting part of our visit to Brussels, however, was a trip by tallyho to the battlefield of Waterloo, about fifteen miles distant. Starting in the morning about 10 o'clock we drove out Avenue Louise, a magnificent shaded boulevard, and then through one of the finest parks in Europe, after which we entered the national forest. After driving a few miles through this forest we came to the road leading to the village of Waterloo, the same road over which the Duke of Wellington lead his victorious army eighty-nine years ago. We stopped in Waterloo to visit the museum, which is located in the building in which the Duke made his headquarters during that memorable conflict. In addition to many other interesting relics of the battle the old bedstead in which Wellington slept was shown us.

Driving on a few miles further we came to the mound or monument erected by the allies in honor of the brave soldiers who lost their lives during that short but decisive nine-hour fight. This mound is over two hundred feet high and three-quarters of a mile in circumference at its base. The earth was carried in baskets by female labor and gathered from the battlefield. On top of the mound is a pedestal thirty feet high, capped by an immense figure of a lion, cast out of cannon captured from Napoleon.

Ascending the 260 steps leading to the summit we listened to a very interesting description of the battlefield, the positions of the various armies, and we were shown the numerous houses and farms that were captured and lost again and again by the two armies.

After leaving the monument we drove to the famous orchard and saw the bullet-scarred walls of the old house and then returned to Brussels, having put in a day long to be remembered.

The next day we went to Paris, the gayest and most interesting of the world's capitals. After a third visit to this wonderful city we were more than ever convinced that there is only one Paris. What we saw would make too long a letter, so I will only mention a few of the more interesting points visited, not forgetting the great department stores that are a source of delight to the feminine heart. One of these great buildings is so large that it contains two theatres and a large garden.

Versailles and its grand palaces are so interesting that one can visit them time and again and not tire of it. The grounds and fountains are as fine as money can make them. The palace, in which so much French history has been made, contains room after room of the finest paintings in Paris. The Grand and Petit Trianon, two palaces of great interest, though much smaller than the great palace, are located in the park at Versailles, as is also the royal stables, containing the state carriages, one of which cost $100,000 to build.

The morgue, quite a contrast to a palace, contained the bodies of five unfortunates found floating in the Seine. The bodies are exposed to the public gaze behind a glass partition and always attract a crowd of the curious and the average tourist, for it is one of the stock sights of Paris.

The grand old cathedral, Notre Dame, made even more famous by Victor Hugo, is another sight the tourist never misses.

We put in a pleasant forenoon in driving out to Vincennes and an afternoon in riding up the Seine to Charenton and then down to Antil, the trip each way oocupying about one hour and costing two cents a piece. These Seine boats are well patronized by those living in suburban towns, and especially by the Parisiennes on Sundays and holidays, although on those days the fare is doubled.

The sights on the boulevards at night are exciting, to say the least, and I presume the least I say of them the better, for it can't be told in cold type, as some of your readers well know. Like a fine painting, they must be seen to be understood, if not appreciated. The great cafes that line these boulevards are crowded, thousands of tables and chairs being placed on the sidewalk. At 10 o'clock at night they are so crowded it is difficult to find one vacant. It is needless to say the prices of these restaurants are so high that one can hardly afford more than one or two drinks during the evening.

Sunday morning we left Paris for Granville, on the coast of Normandy, a quaint but interesting old town. It is quite a fashionable watering place during the summer and we found a vast crowd on the beach. This place contains a very old fort and is garrisoned by several companies of soldiers. It occupies a commanding position on a bluff and presents quite a formidable appearance from the sea.

We only remained in Granville over night, for this morning we boarded the steamer Laura for the home of the "Jersey Lillie," a place that looks like a magnificent park, it is so beautiful. As the Channel Islands deserve an extended notice, I will reserve them for my next letter.

Our traveling companions, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Roderick, left for London last Friday morning and will sail from Southampton on the 7th inst.

Yours respectfully,

F. E. BUCKLAND.

A Small Boy's Diary.

There is a certain 9-year old kid in this city who is keeping a diary. The book was given him last Christmas by a relative and his father had forgotten all about it until he accidentally found the volume the other day. Curious to see what his small son had written in it, he opened the book and found that the diary had been faithfully kept. Here are a few of the entries:

"I am 9-years old to-day. Looked in the glass, but whiskars aint sproutin' yet."

"Sassed a boy. Got lickt."

"Pop borrid 10 cents for carfair. That makes $1.15 he owes me. Wonder if Ile ever get it."

"Jimmie —— stole my ball. I lickt him for it."

"Ast Pop for some of my money and he giv me a nickil. I want that doler."

"We feloes got up a base ball club to-day. Ime picher. If I had that doler 15 I could get a unaform."

"Pop got paid to-day and giv me my money."

"Mamma borrid a doler. Dam these people anyway. A feloe can't save nothin'."

"Ast Pop about banks. I want to put my money ware carfair aint so skarse."

"Got lickt again."

There was more of this, but Pop had read enough. As a result, there was a conference, and now the arrangement is to pay 5 per cent a week interest and settle every pay day. The kid got his "unaform."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Only Eight-Hour Union Office in Town.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 18, 1904.

NOTICE.

During the months of June, July, and August this office will be closed at 12 o'clock noon Saturdays.

Demand for Eight-Hour Law.

We take a little pride in the following clipping from the Evening Star, of Tuesday last:

PRESIDENT JOHN R. BERG, of Columbia Typographical Union, has returned from St. Louis, where he attended the sessions of the International Union. He called to-day at Typographical Temple, where he held a conference with Secretary GEO. G. SEIBOLD.

The decision of the International body to inaugurate the eight-hour day, beginning January 1, 1906, will, it was said to-day, affect all the book and job printing offices in this city except one. The exception is the office of THE TRADES UNIONIST, where an eight-hour day is already in force.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

Charlie Murphy, who spent many years of his life in the G. P. O., but who has put in a good deal of the past two years examining the country which he inhabits, told me a few of his experiences the other day. While acting as advance agent of a show company he struck the little city of Beatrice, Nebr., and as part of his duties he went to see the newspaper people.

"I am a printer," he said to one of the bosses, by way of introducing himself.

"Well, I'm glad to hear that, for I am in need of a printer," said the proprietor, "for I have just discharged my foreman. What can you do?"

"Oh, anything that an ordinary printer can do, I guess," said Murphy, entering into the spirit of the thing.

"Can you do bent-rule work, color work, and all that sort of thing?"

"Anything in the way of printing is in my line," said Murphy.

"All right; take off your coat and go to work at once; you're just the man I want," said the proprietor.

"Hold on," said Murphy. "There are some preliminaries to settle. What do I get?"

"I gave my last foreman $7.50 a week, but if you fill the bill I'll give you $8," said the boss.

"When I do twisted-rule and color printing I generally get from $40 to $50 a week," said Murph. "But I am on other business to-day. I want to see about getting some space to advertise the show for which I am advance agent."

"Now, that is a different matter," said the proprietor. "I thought you didn't look much like a printer hunting a job."

And then they proceeded to mix up on an advertising deal.

Another experience he had was in a little city in New Mexico, not far from El Paso, Texas. They had an uncomfortable practice in that town of running in everybody who was not at work and Murph proceeded to look for a job at once, tackling the mayor to give him a steer. Hizzoner said they wanted a porter in the store down the street—a general store, where they sold everything from butter to Government bonds. Murphy applied for the job and found that they wanted a man. After recounting his capabilities he was engaged at $1 50 per week and board, going to work at once. This was in the morning, and after he had had his dinner—they gave him his breakfast before he went to work—he tackled the boss:

"Say, I've got a partner with me, and as he hasn't got anything to do I'm afraid they'll run him in. Can't you advance me half a week's pay? I'll send him down to El Paso and get rid of him."

"I'll see what my partners say" said the boss.

After a consultation it was decided to grant his request and the 75 cents was given him. Asking to be excused for a few minutes until he could give his partner the money, he skipped and the pair of them started for El Paso.

"That is the only time I ever knew an Irishman to get the best of a Jew," said Murphy.

The late Fred A. Hall was a member of the Tribe of Ben Hur as well as of the National Union and the Maccabees, and a check was received last week for $1,200 in payment of the claim—a fact that had been overlooked before in stating the societies to which Mr. Hall belonged. Ben Hur is always very prompt in settling all death claims. By the way, a new law has recently been passed in regard to the payment of death claims. It appeared on investigation that an extraordinary number of deaths occurred in the first year or two of membership—a scandalously large per cent in the first six months after initiation. The new law says that but one-fifth of the face of the policy shall be paid if death occurs within six months after the initiation, and the policy is so graded that the full death benefit will not be paid until after a membership of two years. This is but a proper measure for the protection of the order and nobody has any right to complain of it—on the contrary, it is for the good of all. Ben Hur is prospering and the novelty of its theory of insurance—all paying the same amount each month, but the amount of insurance being graded according to the age of the member—is becoming popular.

Frank D. Seiffert, foreman of the book and job printing office of John F. Sheiry, of this city, has gone on a vacation to Boston, Portland, and other points on the New England coast. Mr. Seiffert is a fine printer and a whole-souled fellow, as well as a stanch union man, and I hope he will enjoy every minute of his vacation.

* * * *

I am glad to see that Charlie Dietrich is making encouraging headway in organizing the typewriters and stenographers. While it is not to be expected that the same degree of success will be attained as in the case of trades the learning of which requires years of apprenticeship, much can be accomplished in the way of ameliorating the conditions under which these workpeople now suffer. Mr. Dietrich deserves all credit for his efforts, though it is the custom of unthinking persons (most of them incapable of thinking) to denominate as "labor fakirs" all who work for the good of unionism.

William H. Livermore, of the Proof Division, contemplates an extensive trip when he takes his leave next week. He will go to San Francisco over the Southern Pacific, and, after a brief stay, will return by the Nothern Pacific as far as Spokane, Wash., where he will visit his mother, who is living, at a very advanced age, 25 or 30 miles south of there. From there he will go to St. Louis and take in the Exposition for a week or so, and then back home. His only companions will be his camera and his field glasses.

Uncle Zidon Ross started for Vermont on Monday. He had heard that that State was in danger of being captured by the political enemy and he has gone to see if there is anything in it. Rutland is the point from which he will make his observations.

The Post last Sunday had an editorial in praise of the great good sense of the printers, having reference to action taken at the St. Louis convention. I congratulate the Post on the perspicacity which enables it to recognize good sense when it sees it.

The gentlemen—and ladies, of course—who are at work these delightful summer days have my commiseration that the needs of the service are such as to preclude the continuance of the Saturday half-holiday, though I hope that this condition may not continue during the entire heated period or any longer than my vacation lasts. In any event it is a vast improvement over days that I have seen, when there was not sufficient work to keep people busy and enforced holidays with no pay attached were the rule. You never miss the Saturday half-holiday after it is passed any way.

* * * *

The San Francisco Post, of which Herbert Steele spoke in his recent letter to me as having made a vicious attack on the Government Printing Office, finally arrived. The attack consists merely of assertion that the employes of the G. P. O. are worn-out whisky soaks, incompetent of earning a living anywhere else, reiterated and spread out over a column or more of wide-measure but small-bore editorial. Any man, editor or otherwise, who is capable of such assertion is too contemptible an ass and besotted fool to have further attention paid to him than the brief space which I am now wasting on him. He is merely a would-be "scab" who has not the courage to attempt to put his scabbiness into effect.

Walter Hamacher, a son of the late Joseph Hamacher, for many years a compositor on the Evening Star, was drowned at Colonial Beach, Va., last Sunday. Frank Hammaker (he spelled his name differently from the other members of the family), whom the older printers will remember, was another son of Joseph Hamacher, the last being a printer, as was his father. He died several years ago.

A. F. BLOOMER.

Some Thoughts on Labor Conditions.

The Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Commerce and Labor is publishing in its Daily Consular Reports statements of the industrial condition in Germany, made by a correspondent of the London Times, and also an article on industrial education in Germany, by Ernst C. Meyer, Deputy U. S. Consul at Chemnitz, Saxony. Both these articles, which have been running through several numbers of the Daily Consular Reports, will be reprinted as Special Consular Reports. They are valuable papers to students of the labor question, and the thanks of labor people are due to those responsible for their publication.

In Germany the State seems to be devoting itself to the solution of the labor question, and from the standpoint of monarchical governments seems to be doing its work wisely, looking both to the welfare of the laborer and the encouragement of agriculture and manfactures. It seems to be doing its work impartially, for the good of the whole German people. Commendable as these acts are for Germany, it is very doubtful indeed, if it would be good for the workers of this country were they copied into our laws. The systems of the two governments are so different, and the laws underlying them so contrary to each other, that what has been found very beneficial to the workers of Germany might be very disadvantageous to the workers of the United States.

The German system of dealing with the workers is one of tutelage. It infers that the workers can not take care of themselves, and that their interests must be taken charge of by the government. The workers are treated as children who must be guarded until they have obtained their majority, only under the German system the worker could never obtain their majority. What workers should get by their own action, is given them by law. They are thus taught to depend upon the State, instead of depending upon themselves, in the matters which most nearly concern them. This system would forever keep the workers in leading strings, and cause them to depend upon others rather than upon themselves for the amelioration of their condition.

In Europe it is the aristocracy and wealth that rule. The people may be likened to a horse that is bridled and saddled, for the booted and spurred aristocracy and wealth to mount, control, and ride. The people have little to say about who shall rule them, or by what laws they shall be governed. If they will not move they will be coaxed or driven. The government is the ruler and the people the ones to be ruled. The sword, the purse, and the courts are all under the control of the government, and it is difficult to change the system in a peaceable manner. And it is more difficult because government is economically administered, individual rights upheld and protected where they do not clash with the interests of the government, and the welfare of the nation is well looked after. The one great reason for a change is that the wrong people rule, and, of course, rule for their own interests. If they, for their own success in government, consider some of the evils which workers endure and endeavor to lessen them, the interests of their class is the paramount idea with them. In the United States, in theory at least, we do not believe one man is any better than another. We recognize no rank, and regard wealth as something apart from the man, and that it does not entitle its owner to any more consideration than if he had no property whatever. A man is a man, and a government is based upon manhood and not upon wealth. Therefore, while it is well for us to understand what is being done in monarchical countries for the amelioration of the condition of the laborer, it must not be thought that it is well to enact the same laws here for the reason that they have done good there.

Another thing should be remembered by all students of the labor question, especially those who oppose labor organizations. When civilization dawned upon Europe the great body of the workers were serfs or slaves. That condition in the course of seven centuries has been changed, but at no time has the worker occupied the same vantage ground as his former master. He does not occupy it to-day. He has has been striving to occupy it, and is still striving with great hope, but he has been continually opposed by the ruling class, as he was opposed by the serf-holding and slave-holding class seven hundred years ago.

The worker is not trying to pull down any one; he is only striving to elevate his class and to obtain the full rights and privileges of manhood. He believes that his children are born into the world with the same rights and privileges that other children are born to, and that the same opportunities should be open to the many that are open to the few. The workers will never be satisfied until they stand upon the same vantage ground their employers do, and this can not be until their influence in Congress, in State legislatures, in the courts, and executive offices of the land, is as great as their numbers and their intelligence entitle them to.

There are many people, among whom are some workers, who are of the opinion that the labor question involves only wages and hours. This opinion is a very mistaken one. The labor question reaches much farther. It is to make manhood, not property, the basis of all government. It is to put man and his rights before every other consideration in government and social life. Monarchy has ruled mankind; so has aristocracy; and wealth is ruling mankind now. But the labor question will never be settled until the workers become the rulers of their own destiny, and until one man will have no more authority or influence in the government than another, except that which his intellect and character gave him.

That state of society in which many are very poor and a few very rich is not desirable, and can not promote the happiness of men, but that state of society in which every man has an equal opportunity with his fellows, and in which the humblest man is protected in his life, liberty, and property, and the pursuit of happiness, is to be greatly desired, but it is possible only under the rule of that class which places manhood above every earthly thing in the administration of government.

Four casters are ready for business and the "pigs" have arrived.

George Gerberich is spending his leave in the Blue Ridge Mountains.

Have you noticed the contented grin on Charlie Stretch's "mug." Its a girl.

"Where you going now? When you coming back? How long you going to stay?"

Alexander Beatty is with us once more and is much improved in health and spirits from his vacation.

Scott Young and A. J. Benton have been transferred from the Specification chapel to the Gazette chapel.

If you are not a regular subscriber to THE TRADES UNIONIST give your name to the chairman and he will arrange the matter for you.

Miss Wilson secured the passage of a resolution, advocating an increase of pay for the members of the Marine Band, at the session of the I. T. U. recently held.

Eighteen keyboards pounding away at a lively gait and a class of thirty-six keeps Schoolmaster C. L. Smith on the move; but he seems to be equal to the emergency.

Foreman Hodes "swiped" the first type produced by the casting-machine and he evidently intends to keep it. The type looks all right to me—14-point face on a 16-point body.

The following compositors have been added to the Gazette roster: William Peacock, Eugene Strohmeyer, Rupert Lehmann J. J. Hickok, William Dulin, C. E. Sikken, W. E. Anderson, J. K. Bittenbender, H. Miller, A. S. Jones, and W. J. C. Freery.

Thomas J. Ryan, one of the pressmen in the Specification Division, has returned to work after fifteen days' visit to his home in Boston, and is exhibiting a very handsome gold watch and chain presented to him by his friends there as a slight token of the esteem in which he is held.

Everybody starts out with an even chance on the machines. No opportunity for the "crook" or "good hand" to get a tip from the big room to hoard lower-case letters e, because a number of electric specifications will "run" the day after to-morrow; leaving the worthless distribution for the "incompetents" and "spavs" to worry along with. You have to deliver the goods on the level—if you can.

Assistant Foreman Albert K. Mundheim is attending the G. A. R. convention in Boston this week.

Col. Wm. A. Whitney left Saturday via "Royal Limited" for Boston to attend the G. A. R. convention.

Misses Annie Leonard and Nellie Featherstone, press feeders, are spending two weeks' leave of absence at Philadelphia and Atlantic City.

Geo. H. Healey recently purchased a building site at Wedderburn Heights, Va., on the Falls Church electric line, expecting to build there next year.

Raymond E. Gery is spending three weeks' leave of absence at his old home, Greenfield, Ind. James Willis (Doc.) is replacing him in the proof room.

Bruce Austin, the clever comedian from Kentucky, is now busily engaged in rehearsing his classical vocalistic composition, which no doubt will make quite a hit before the public.

W. A. DeGroot, our attentive-to duty time hand, is taking a fifteen-day leave visiting relatives in New York City. He made the trip by boat via Norfolk, thence to New York by Old Dominion steamer.

Chairman W. Brice Coston and wife are spending a seventeen-day leave in the mountains near Front Royal, Va. Mr. Coston reports a good table and nice time. The horse show is one of the leading attractions.

Bruce Austin proved easy for Geo. Healey at checkers during Steve Wall's absence, but since the latter's return, in the terms of Referee Watson, he has been giving the "kibosh" and doing the "goose walk" quite regularly with the short-time champion.

John Mulroy returned from leave Saturday. Mr. Mulroy does not believe in mincing ones leave, and so used up all his leave, having his headquarters at Colonial Beach, and making all sorts of trips out from there. His face is the proverbial berry brown.

S. R. Wall returned to work Friday after an absence of two weeks spent at Montreal, Canada, visiting his brother, who holds a lucrative position with the Canadian Pacific Railroad. Labor and trade condition are good throughout Canada, and everyone who desires to work can find employment at good wages. An improvement being reported within the past three or four years.

Some of Clint O. Price's friends would like to see him enter the delegate race next year. He is a regular attendant at all union meetings, serves faithfully on various committees, is widely known and popular, has the voice, bearing, intelligence, and persuasiveness that should abound in the representative of any union, and is of that staunch sort of unionism that combines progressiveness and conservatism so admirably for fruitful results. It is a little early to start the buzz of union politics, but Clint Price will stand the wear of a year's investigation, with improving chances every day.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

Visitors to the World's Fair from the National capital find of peculiar interest the mammoth model of the union station now being built in this city.

With its Illinois Central and the C. C. C. & I. (familiarly known as the Big Four) connection, the Chesapeake and Ohio now commands full measure of trans-Mississippi travel.

Seated in front of the Inside Inn a number of old timers were indulging in reminiscences, one of them said, "And 'Box' Surguy is gone, too," when Mr. T. M. Surguy, of the Wilkins company, this city, arose and disclaimed all knowledge of having departed this mundane sphere. Mr. Surguy started to learn the printing business about the time of the birth of the farce "Box and Cox," and on his arrival in the Cincinnati Times office the foreman labelled the box an which he was standing "Box," hence the nick name.

About 1877 a gentleman, O. H. Stivers by name, requested that I write him a letter. "Make it strong," he said; "if you don't, here's where I lose my girl." Last week a miss of 19, with a springy step and an eye to art, directed me through the ups and downs of the Chicago elevated, en route to the Twelfth street station. She was the daughter of the couple who quarreled in '77.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

First Division.

All together, now. Who wants to Toronto?

C. L. Williams has returned from the Interior Branch.

Guy McCord is back from his vacation, but the fish remain in the Potomac.

George Dowell is in Atlantic City, and writes that he is having the time of his life.

W. H. Guthridge and family are located at Colonial Beach for the remainder of the month.

Horace Cranford is watching the sad sea waves from the board walk at Atlantic City this week.

Chas. Danenhower, in charge of the type boiler, is again at work, after a couple of week's illness.

Mrs. M. DeWitt Siewers is enjoying the sea breezes at Ocean Grove, N. J. Slug 2 joins her this week.

As a forecaster of holidays I am not a success. At the same time I am willing to bet we have one next Saturday.

The first division has reached its limit. There are no more vacancies. The total force of the room has reached 207.

I heard—of course I don't know how true it is—that Foreman John Berg, who attended the convention, made a "record" on the Pike.

L. W. Baldwin and family have headed for Massachusetts, where for the next twenty days they will rusticate among the Berkshire hills.

Wm. M. Holeman is enjoying life among the mountains of West Virginia. Before going there he visited Old Point Comfort, where he took his daughter.

Wm. L. Taylor and wife have chosen Rehoboth Beach as the proper place for rest and recreation, and are spending fifteen days at that popular resort.

Ed. Heidingsfeldt is taking fifteen days leave in company with Wm. Goldstein, of the Third, taking the water route (not the wagon) by way of Norfolk.

"Jack" Burnside and wife are registered at Atlantic City. Jack locked the house up, and turned his dog over to Joe Graves, and I am sure he will get that much-deserved rest that is coming to all imposers.

Before starting on his leave Chas. S. Elder was supremely happy. He is at his old home in Lewistown, Me., and probably by this time he and Dan Hegarty are pulling out big trout from some shady brook.

Simon Pocher is again at work. Various rumors are in circulation as to how he passed his vacation, but the one generally accepted is that he has been wheeling West Virginia into line for the party of his faith.

Our printer soldiers are with us again after two weeks of strenuous military life. Now this is on the quiet: It was those maneuvers on Boliver Heights that brought the Sultan of Turkey to time. Warships had nothing to do with it.

Will Mr. James Monroe Kreiter please refresh my memory on what he said last spring about Mr. Lynch being too robust to be injured by the premature explosion of a toy pistol? I think I will be able to see the joke better this time.

A friend of mine has taken onto his own shoulders my recent remark about the "silk stocking" boys, and threatens me with a slap on the wrist. Young man, don't be premature. Looking over my list, I find you appear among the sockless ones.

The regular August meeting of the union will occur next Sunday. It should be a very interesting meeting, and we will probably learn what our delegates did at St. Louis. To give up a few hours of your time once a month won't hurt you, so come out.

H. S. Sutton has returned from St. Louis, and will doubtless have another interesting article in this week's TRADES UNIONIST. "Maud" is a close observer of things, even in the wee sma' hours of the morning when willowy forms and Dagos are seen in the hazy distance.

The horrors of a military campaign on Boliver Heights are just coming to light. Geo. A. Robey tells me he went three mornings without cream in his coffee, and Corporal Carter complains that on two different occasions the potatoes were not well cooked. This is awful, truly awful.

The following temporaries have been added to this division since last Wednesdav: W. A. Beasley, A. C. Nelson, Joe Skelly, C. E. Richards, S. C. Smith, C. E. Whipper, C. E. Zimmerman, Wm. S. Carpenter, G. Berry, J. T. Hanrahan, H. D. Wadhams, James B. Huss, W. L. Griffis, and Chas. H. Rockwell.

Frank C. Jones, of this division, was in camp last week with Co. B, first battallion. When it came that company's day to do guard duty Frank was placed guard over a pump, with instructions to allow no one to partake of the sparkling waters therefrom. After standing guard for six hours and threatening half the soldiers in camp with sure death if they ventured too near, the discovery was made that the well was dry.

Chas. F. Garrette, Wallace Brewer, and E. D. King are attending the National Encampment of the G. A. R. at Boston this week. I have noticed one thing about the old soldier element in in the G. P. O. Every year seems to unite these old veterans of the greatest conflict of modern times into closer brotherhood. And I am glad it's thus, for we all know those employed in this office are the finest "young fellows" an the globe.

One of the new men who came to work this week bumped up against one of the hard propositions of this division to start with. Copy for the Bureau of American Republics was running, which consists of Spanish, French, Portugese and English. After mastering Spanish he tackled Portugese. Going up to a gentleman he asked to be directed to the accent cases. "Right there they are," said the gent. "Oh, yes," said he, "but those are Spanish. I want the Portugese now."

Were I a writer of short stories I have in mind one to which I would give the title of "A Night at the Lodge; or How Zach Jenkins Blew Out the Gas." At a lodge meeting this week when business had been set aside for the social part, Mr. Jenkins, of the proof room, in endeavoring to light a cigar from a gas jet, knocked the top out, causing the flame to shoot up some distance. Discomforture immediately took the place of his usual self-composed—in other words he became rattled—and endeavored to blow out the flame. At this stage of the game friends came to his rescue, and after turning off the flow explained to him the intricate mechanism of a stop-cock and instructed him in its use. He acknowledged it was one on him, but justified his action by telling a story of a prominent G. P. O. man who found an incandescent light dangling from a wire in his room at a hotel one night a few years ago. The man tried to blow it out, rub it out, and jar it out, but it would not go out. He could not sleep in a lighted room, so, drawing the wash stand up to the light he placed the globe in the drawer, closed it, and went to sleep.

Now that the St. Louis convention is numbered among the things that were, I suppose congratulations and condolences will be in order. Naturally one must congratulate the entire delegation. For what reason I know not, other than it is customary. Individualy "Spadge" Parsons is entitled to something in that line because of his forming part of an especially able laws committee. Miss Anna Wilson was placed on the resolution committee and thus shares in our congratulations. I want to console J. Monroe Kreiter for failing to connect with the job of reading clerk. I thought last spring he was hooked up to the wrong wagon, but he would help drag it along. Then there is Miss Laura Gordon of the Auxiliary. Sympathy is her's for the loss of what seemed to be within her grasp—the presidency of the national organization. The point was raised against Miss Gordon that the Auxiliary was more for printers' wives and sisters than for printers themselves. Mrs. J. A. Huston is to be congratulated on securing the first vice-presidency of the Auxiliary. As the same point can not be raised against her, she has every reason to aspire to the office of president. Miss Katherine Spencer is entitled to our sympathy on account of her serious illness during the meeting, which was a strong handicap to the pleasure as well as the work incident to the convention.

FOR RENT.—Large, well furnished front room, near G. P. O. 60 New York avenue northwest.

Second Division.

H. D. Pryor goes on leave to-day.

A. F. Lowe goes on leave this week.

W. J. Gould begins his vacation this morning.

G. W. Shaed returned Friday from his vacation.

D. A. Gillin and family enjoyed part of their vacation at Atlantic City.

Frank Bates and Mike F. Barrett joined us as temporaries last thursday.

O. W. Larman and William M. Stuart came on last Thursday as temporaries.

S. B. Ragland was assigned cases temporarily in this room last Saturday.

P. H. Gallagher is absent for a few days owing to the serious illness of his sister.

Clyde Sheriff is officiating at the proof press while McLaughlin is on leave.

Chas. C. Cassell, of Baltimore, who worked in this division last winter, is with us again.

Mr. David Eccles returned Monday from his leave. He spent some time at Coney Island.

Jimmy Wallace came over from the First the other day and "made up" during Si Phelps' absence.

E. H. Tabler, of Seabrook, Md., and A. R. Lindsey were new temporary appointees to this division last week.

J. E. Colton has returned from a visit to his old home in New Orleans and a trip to the St. Louis Exposition.

Chas. E. Holmes, who has been agreeably located at the Gazette for some time was officially transferred this week.

"Time" called in Beddow's phenomenal high tenor, is a pleasant sound to hear these days, after working ten hours (and being hungry, too).

E. J. Newcomb, the Congress Heights chicken raiser, is with us once more. Newcomb had just about enough time out to put his hatching in shape.

Chas. L. Nace generously painted a sign for the Timothy class lawn party which was greatly admired. He is a good sign painter as well as a good printer.

H. S. Sutton returned Monday after traveling over 3,000 miles while spending his vacation. His trip included Philadelphia and St. Louis, with various intermediate cities.

Some one called our genial poet just plain "Pike" the other day. He says he does not fear to be called but one thing and that is when the Lord will call him "Hence."

Messrs. George P. Phillips, Thos. E. Doty, W. G. O'Connell, L. R. Thompson returned to work Monday with tanned faces, having served two weeks in military camp at Harpers Ferry.

Titus F. Ellis sent some souvenir World's Fair postal cards to friends in this division this week. He says he is enjoying himself immensely and that "Old Missouri" is doing herself proud in a "Fair" way.

H. J. Lowe, a former temporary of this division, received another appointment and is with us again. He left his Pride on the outside when he came to work. M. H. Pride was his former partner in the printing business.

Chairman Cornish, of this division, was raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason by M. M. Parker Lodge last Thursday night. W. G. Glenn, another one of our members is Worshipful Master of this lodge and conferred the degree.

Miss Helene Moore, the young lady who was drowned by the capsizing of the launch last Saturday at the boat races was a daughter of Thos. P. Moore, the printer on F street. Mr. Moore has the heartfelt sympathy of his friends in the G. P. O. where he was formerly employed and is well known.

Henry M. Allen, our "bank" man, known as "Hank" left Tuesday for Towanda, Pa. He goes to attend a volunteer firemen's convention that is participated in by five counties. He is now an honorary member of Naiad No. 2 company, which has held the running record for years. Hank joined this company when only 12 years of age as torch boy. His father was a charter member when organized in 1850.

A prominent member of this division was discussing the other day the subject of having an office physician. This has been mentioned several times in THE TRADES UNIONIST. Where 4,500 people are employed, certainly a physician and a small stock of drugs and our office would prove of much benefit in case of accident or sudden sickness. Smaller establishments make such precautions. Mechanically and sanitarily the new building is about perfect. So is its management. We feel certain this would be done if it was thought of by the authorities of the office.

Third Division.

Public band concerts will be given as follows during the week ending Thursday, August 25:

Thursday, August 18—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Judiciary Park.

Friday, August 19—Engineer Band, Washington Barracks and Iowa Circle.

Saturday, August 20—Marine Band, White House Grounds.

Monday, August 22—Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Franklin Park.

Tuesday, August 23—Engineer Band, Washington Barracks and Lincoln Park.

Wednesday, August 24—Marine Band, Capitol Grounds.

Thursday, August 25—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Judiciary Park.

A. M. LeMerle is caring for the rule and job cases in "Goldy's" absence.

Percy S. Wallace was detained at home last week on account of the sickness of his wife.

I. D. Williamson was transferred to the State Branch on the 8th inst. He says he likes it there.

A. H. McKnight started on the 11th inst. for a stay of fifteen days at Red Hill, Albemarle County, Va.

Franklin O. Sanders started Wednesday night for Watsontown, Pa., where he will spend fifteen days.

I am informed that in case E. A. M. Lawson should decline to run for delegate to the I. T. U. next year, Joseph E. Goodkey himself will be a candidate.

Farmer Wood's hens are taking advantage of this season of gaiety and relaxation to go on their annual leave, and in the meantime there is a boom in fruit in the neighborhood of Hyattsville.

Robt. P. Piehoff, secretary of the Third Division chapel, is acting chairman in the absence of Chairman Goldstein, who started a week ago via the Old Dominion Line for a trip to New York and the Catskill Mountains.

Some of our "temporary" friends of last winter are again making their appearance, having been reappointed in the last batch. Henry D Wadhams, formerly in Alley 7, is now in the First; Alonzo C. Nelson is in the First; and V. O. Baker is in the Spess.

George R. Merriam left the city last night for his home in Addison, near Bridport, Vt., to be gone thirty days. While absent he will have the opportunity of voting in the State and Congressional elections which will occur September 6. "Tell the boys," says Mr. Merriam, "to watch for a Republican majority of from 25,000 to 40,000."

Cliff D. Scott got back Monday from his tour of duty with the District National Guard, and marched up as usual when the paymaster handed the envelopes around. When somebody laughingly remonstrated at "these tin soldiers" drawing pay for the time they were on military duty, Cliff modestly said, "Did you see me blush when I took it?"

Last Thursday J. W. Evans, Disciplinarian of the Indian Agricultural School at Chilocco, Okla., visited his former associate in the faculty of the above named institution, Chas. S. Davis, now in charge of the leads and slugs for the Third Division, and the latter devoted the day to showing his friend through the largest printery in world, besides introducing him to other points of interest about the city. There are about 900 scholars in the school, including the girls. It is Mr. Evan's business to make the boys toe the line, one of his duties being to see that each boy takes a bath at least once a week. Every imaginable excuse is made by these scions of the noble red men of the forest to escape this necessary, but to them unpleasant, operation, but the disciplinarian is lynx-eyed and inexorable and rarely misses a boy.

C. W. Herzinger, Slug 16, in this division, a prominent member of Columbia Union, No. 101, for nearly five years, and a graduate of the National University Law School, will resign from the Government Printing Office September 1 to enter upon the practice of law in Grangeville, Idaho. During the time he has been with us Mr. Herzinger has been an active participant in the meetings of the Union, serving with ability on several committees, and last spring made a fine run for the vice-presidency, the large number of candidates for that office making the success of any one of them very much a matter of chance. He is gifted by nature with a tall form and commanding presence, which, when combined with his intellectual ability and uncommon facility in giving expression to his thoughts, will have a tendency to influence the jury, if we are not very much mistaken. It is quite possible that Mr. Herzinger will make politics his study, and he is likely to be one of the spellbinders in the presidential campaign. When he departs from our midst, he will bear with him the sincere friendship and hearty good will of all who know him.

Goodkey has just returned from the Fair, and the stories he tells about what he saw there almost put Baron Munchausen to the blush. He says that in an exhibit of fruit by the Ohio Improvement Company, of Fort Valley, Ga., he saw peaches so big that six of them would fill a bushel basket, and squashes of such immense proportions that one of them would not fit into one of our alleys. ("Sally in our alley" wouldn't be a circumstance.) The watermelons were not so much out of proportion to the one we see daily—only about as long as a stool. Visitors to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition must be prepared to be astonished, for there isn't much doubt about the truth of Goodkey's statement, even though it was received with incredulous laughter by some few of us. I am reminded of a visit to California made by one of my brothers shortly after the close of the Civil War, a time when most people knew little or nothing of the products of that far-off country, access to which was then had by overland stage or by crossing the Isthmus of Panama. His letters describing the immense size of the fruit he saw there were scoffed at and made light of by all of us, and he was dubbed, in derision, "the Stockton rotary blower," Stockton being his place of residence. We have lived to find that his stories were true ones and that he didn't exaggerate things at all. So I am going to believe Goodkey until somebody comes along to prove his stories are fabrications.

J. W. BELCHER.

Bread.

Freshly made bread is more indigestible than stale bread because it is more moist and becomes more solid in the mouth, hence more impenetrable to the saliva and the gastric juices. For the same reason bread crust is more digestible than what is beneath it, being drier. Bread may be unfit for use from being made of adulterated or too old flour, by turning sour or developing a bitter taste from the yeast, from getting moldy and from insufficient fermentation in the raising process, which leaves it too heavy for the digestive fluids to act well upon.

Navy Yard Items.

Dedicated to Columbia Lodge, No. 174, I. A. of M.

Say, have you ever visited Number 174?
The latch string hangs outside the door
To brothers tried and true.
If not you have missed a treat
Wednesday of each week we meet—
We extend a greeting to you.

When President Elder takes the chair
And the secretary starts to pump hot air,
Then the boys are ready for fun.
Ye Gods! what a sport as the meeting progresses,
Decisions galore, such parliamentary messes
That Tom Carroll feels for his gun.

Now Tom comes from old 137
And is well up on "Come seven and eleven,"
You all know what I mean by the same.
It ain't in Webster, or Tom Reed's rules,
It is taught in Virginia, in the policy schools
And Tom is well up in the game.

President Elder sits up in the stand,
Watching his colts so sleek and grand,
As they canter down the line.
Some run quiet, and same run mad,
Some are jolly, while some are sad,
All thoroughbreds, very fine.

Two Adams's we have though not closely related,
Part their hair in the middle and are very well mated,
They run very well to the pole.
When hitched up together
They fly like a feather,
Thus saith brother treasurer Cole.

There is Tucker and Henze, O'Donnell and Ladd,
Running away as if they were mad,
While Parson Emmons enjoys the frolic.
Colleen and Lear, Litchfield and Brown,
Keep bobbing up to get run down,
While poor Haller is knocked out with the colic.

And thus we run on, night after night,
To do for each other, or ready to fight
To maintain the rights of our craft,
We attend strictly to business, though ready for fun,
With never a fear of Tom Carroll's gun,
Best known as our socialistic graft.

So when you visit Number 174
Don't pull out the bell or kick in the door
Unless you are seeking trouble,
For the sentinel is on hand
Who beats the base drum in the band
And is known as Jim Jeffries' double.

But give the proper signal and send in your name,
Brother Bowan will welcome to join in the game,
And the President extends his greeting
To the Grand Lodge and others
Who are qualfied brothers
And "Tim Tickle" extends the same.

An examination was recently held for "master mechanic" of Sight Department Gun Division. This examination was bitterly contested by a score or more of expert machinists, including several applicants from the outside. The result was announced last week when our much-respected shop mate, jolly Jack Von Herman, drew the lucky prize. There is no big head on Jack's shoulders.

The many friends of Wm. F. Beaumont, of Tool Division, and C. H. Wilkinson of East Gun Carriage Division, will rejoice in the good news that comes from the Red Sulphur Springs, W. Va., relative of their sick companions who are spending the summer at the above place seeking to regain their health. Both companions will be welcomed back in the fall with the hope of complete recovery.

There is considerable speculation as to who will succeed the late James R. Street, master mechanic, Tool Division, who passed over the divide several weeks ago. Rumor first had master mechanic Harry Wilson, of Secondary Mount shop, transferred to the tool division. Now it is John White, to be promoted from quarterman to master mechanic. Tomorrow, Tom Lear will bob up serenely. Thus it will go on day by day until the Secretary orders an examination by a board of naval officers and the prize is awarded to the lucky man who will draw $5 52 per diem.

The public, outside the Navy Yard, possibly are not aware that we have one of the best musical bands in the District composed of machinists in the Yard under the management of Prof. Chas. A. Stanley. Although recently organized under the auspices of Columbia Lodge, No. 174, its progress has been with rapid strides. The advancement in all the intellectual, and mechanical branches among the machinists is something remarkable. Columbia Lodge can now furnish to order lawyers, doctors, dentists, musicians, and the finest mechanical experts in the country. So much for "Education."

TIM TICKLE.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of August 16, 1904.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of Central Labor Union was called to order at the usual hour by Chairman Wells.

Roll call disclosed the presence of all officers.

The minutes of the meeting of August 9 were read and approved.

Delegates from Machinists Union, No. 193, and Bridgemen's Union, No. 5, were obligated.

Communication from Hoisting Engineers, No. 77, relative to hall, and their vote on assessment, read and placed on file.

Roll call disclosed the presence of twenty-nine delegates from fifteen unions.

Delegate Lahey reported from the Central Labor Union.

The Business Agent reported attending meeting of Organization Committee of Central Labor Union, and on Machinists matter referred to him.

ROLL CALL.

Sheet Metal Workers asked what was being done to meet deficit, and urged Council to take the necessary steps. Laid over under new business.

Tile Layers Helpers voted yes on assessment.

NEW BUSINESS.

Delegate Ratigan, from Labor Day Committee, asked for forty volunteers to serve on Committee on Grounds.

Delegate Desmond brought up the matter of deficit, and laid the blame on the Central Labor Union, for being too lenient in enforcing the law on which the Council of Allied Building Trades was formed by the Central Labor Union.

Delegate Purcell moved that Council of Allied Building Trades ask the Central Labor Union to expel Bricklayers. Withdrawn.

Delegate Desmond moved that secretary be directed to protest to Central Labor Union and endeavor to have laws of Central Labor Union enforced relative to all building trades unions in Central Labor Union. Laid on table until September 13.

After considerable discussion relative to the best means to maintain the Council on a paying basis, the meeting adjourned.

Ladies' dining rooms. R. A. Driscoll, N. Cap. and G. Clams and Crabs.

Bindery Notes.

MOONSHINE.

There's a young man from Kentucky
Who has fallen in love, and is lucky.
He's a blonde, so they say,
With a "turning down" way,
And the lady—he calls her his ducky.

Of her he is talking from morning 'till night,
He'll go o'er the story with greatest delight.
O'er her, tapering fingers
He lovingly lingers
Until we begin to doubt if he's right.

Captain Fredericks has returned from Atlantic City, where he spent a week.

Brother Polk, get busy and don't be so bashful. "Faint heart ne'er won fair lady."

Pete Whitelaw is looking blue and lonesome these days. He is watchman in his happy home. His family is away.

Joe Day is brave and happy when he observes his father-in-law promenade in the office with his uniform of blue.

Jack Hambly has become very popular with the ladies in the bindery and "Doc." Mooney is looming up a good second.

Wm. C. Connor left Washington Saturday morning for Boston where he will be the guest of one of the city contractors during the G. A. R. encampment.

Jack Burk, of the Windy City, would like to put the gloves on with Wm. Brady of Boston over a pan of baked beans. Jack is a great man. What is it he can't do.

Captain White, from "My Maryland," and a member of the new Pennsy Club, says the furniture is so nice he is afraid to sit on it, and when the Swamp Poodle bunch enter they hold their breath. Each member owns his own box of refreshments. That is Philadelphia style.

Brain Against Brawn.

There has never been any reason except superior smartness which has justified the brain worker in exacting for what he does a share of the proceeds so wholly disproportionate over the one who labors with his hands. The result of putting the premium on mental rather than manual labor has been to overcrowd these callings with many who are unfit to render the world real service, even if they are not more in number than the world requires in such fields. The economic equilibrium has always been disturbed because manual labor has been degraded. Many who might be useful in manual labor are forced to live by their wits. This phrase is only a euphemism for parasiteism.

The disdain for manual toil is so universal that almost no men work this way who can win a living otherwise. Yet manual labor is necessary not only to the support of the race, but for the physical welfare of the individual. We should not have half so much of this so-called nervous prostration if the victims had cultivated a little first hand acquaintance with mother earth in ministering to their own nearest and imperative wants with their own hands.

In spite of the fact that physical labor is thought to be severer than mental, the longevity of the two offers whatever of choice there is to the laborer.

We all preach that intellectual culture is its own reward, and then we not only give large measure of material things to him who hath this rich mental endowment, but we listen without seeing the inconsistency to platitudes of of this sort and then see the preachers and teachers of this doctrine reaching out themselves for all the emoluments they can command. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread" is not a curse, but a blessing, and it is one not to be enjoyed vicariously. There is nothing about which the human race is more generally and consciously hypocritical than in this palaver over the dignity of labor. If we paid as we talk the scale of wages in the world would be upset, but it isn't a foregone conclusion that work would be any the worse done.—Exchange.

COLUMBIA UNION MEETING

Baltimore Typographical Union, No. 12, Presents Resolutions.

REPORT OF I. T. U. DELEGATES

Chevy Chase Grievance Settled—Report on Codification of Laws Goes Over to October—Goodkey Offers a Resolution Concerning Prospective Delegates.

The regular monthly meeting of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, was called to order at 2.30 p. m. Sunday, President Berg in the chair.

Traveling cards received since last report were read and accepted.

The Nominations Committee, having reported favorably on the application of G. Homer Dooley for apprentice membership, and J. Richard Ingalls for full membership, they were duly elected and obligated.

Bills for printing and supplies amounting to $81.05 were approved and ordered paid.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Columbia Lodge of Machinists, No. 174, I. A. M., giving list of cigar and news stands in this city which have agreed to discontinue handling the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Mr. Dickman moved to send a letter of thanks to Columbia Lodge for its action in this matter. Carried.

From Iron Molders Union, No. 241, of New Britain, Conn., asking aid in its efforts to secure an advance of 10 per cent in wages of its members employed by the American Hardware Co. Referred to Grievance Committee.

From International Association of Tube Workers, asking assistance in its fight against American Tube Works Company, of Boston.

Mr. Dickman moved to appropriate $10. Carried.

From Jos. T. Sherier, presenting claim for overtime amounting to $20.20. Referred to Finance Committee.

A committee representing Baltimore Union, No. 12, composed of W. J. Hanafin, W. B. Prescott, E. J. Burgan, T. B. Coker, and J. A. League, was presented to the union, and thanked No. 101 for the loan of $1,000 to aid members of Baltimore Union who were thrown out of employment by reason of the disasterous fire in the Monumental City.

President Berg responded on behalf of No. 101, assuring the committee that Columbia Union was glad to have been in a position to do what was its duty, and would consider it a privilege to aid a sister union at any time occasion required.

Mr. Hussey, from the Laws Committee, stated that the committee was at work on the codification of the laws, and asked that the time for report be extended from September to October, which was agreed to.

The secretary presented the claim for death benefit of James B. Harris, who recently died at the Home, stating that there was no special law to cover the amount to be allowed. Referred to Committee on Laws.

Milo Shanks, from the Grievance Committee, reported on the grievance of Musicians Union against Chevy Chase Lake resort. The committee, after hearing arguments from both sides of the controversy, recommended "that Columbia Union remove all restrictions on its members as to patronizing the Chevy Chase trolley line and resort, and that Musicians' Protective Union, No. 161, be informed of our action."

The report of the committee called out a general debate, and the point of of order was made that the recommendations of the committee were not debatable. The report was finally adopted.

Mr. Dickman gave notice that he would present an amendment to the by-laws governing debate on reports of the Grievance Committee.

Mr. Bynum, from Cummings Memorial Committee, made a verbal report, stating that a full report would be presented at the next meeting.

Mr. Dickman, from the Central Labor Union, reported that arrangements had been completed for the observance of Labor Day at Bennings by the Central Labor Union.

Mr. Parsons, chairman of the delegation from No. 101, to recent I. T. U. convention, presented the report of the delegates.

Mr. Bynum moved a rising vote of thanks to our delegates for the able manner in which they had looked after the interests of the union. Carried.

Mr. Bynum announced that the Women's Auxiliary had contributed $10 to the Cummings Memorial Fund.

W. B. Prescott, ex-President of the I. T. U., was introduced, and addressed the union on general conditions of the craft, and spoke encouragingly of the prospects for securing the eight-hour day in the near future.

Mr. Hussey moved that the Library Committee be be instructed to purchase files for the papers subscribed for by the union. Carried.

Mr. Goodkey introduced an amendment to the Constitution that no member shall be eligible to election as delegate who has not attended a majority of the meetings of the union for a year. Referred to Committee on Laws.

Mr. Goodkey introduced a resolution providing that all appeals for assistance shall be referred to a committee of five, who shall report on same at following meeting.

An attempt to place a fine of $25 on any member who purchases Postum Cereal was defeated, as was a proposition to have reprinted for circulation of recent advertisement of the Postum Cereal Co., entitled "A Boycott."

Mergs. in the Record.

One of the busiest places at the big printery these days is the Record room, G. P. O., where arrangements are being made for the reception of thirty-five of the finest Mergenthaler linotype machines that can be manufactured by that company. To accommodate these machines Foreman John R. Berg has found it necessary to release a large portion of his force and to have his room completely overhauled. The south side of the room is being cleared for action, and the iron work surrounding the foreman's desk has been removed to the north side. The iron frames used by the compositors have been dislributed among different divisions. Before the machines are placed in position, on the present floor will be placed a net work of gas pipes, for the necessary heating of the metal pots, over which will be laid another floor, with an elevation of two or three inches. The machines will be placed in rows of six and eight in the same manner as were the frames used by the compositors, a fine work bench for the machinist being erected in a convenient place.

Mr. Berg's force will consist of some 80 men, all of whom will be machine operators, thus being able to supply machine vacancies from those on the case. When completed the Record room will be the finest machine plant in the world. That the Merganthalers will prove a great success for Record work there is no reason for doubt, and that Foreman Berg will get the great Government daily out on scheduled time goes without saying.

Relief Work in the G. P. O.

A record for quick work for the relief of a distressed printer was made in the First Division of the Government Printing Office on Monday. At noon on that day word was received that a temporary employee who, after working three days, was compelled to be operated on at the hospital in Baltimore. A subscription was immediately taken which resulted in $28 being secured, which was sent to his wife, who lives in Baltimore, that evening. The bulletin board next morning contained the acknowledgment of the receipt of same and thanks therefor.

Appointed Judges.

Oscar J. Ricketts, foreman of printing, Government Printing Office, ex-President of the International Typographical Union William B. Prescott, and S. J. Kubel, a local lithographer, were among the appointees made to judge on liberal arts, typography, and printing presses at the World's Fair.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

Last Saturday afternoon the mine owners at Cripple Creek, Colo., in order to be in line with the General Government and advanced industrialism, no doubt, shut down the mines and gave the miners a half holiday. It is true that in return for the holiday the mine owners exacted a slight service. This service consisted of running the ex-Attorney-General of the State and a number of other citizens out of the district and wrecking and plundering the store of the Intermountain Mercantile Company.

And these scab libels on manhood did their master's bidding.

Oh, but it is lovely to be a "free American workingman" who is not at the beck and call of heartless walking delegates!

***

A few years ago, when the law compelling street railway companies to place vestibules on their cars was pending before the Ohio legislature and the trades unionists of the State were using every endeavor to secure its passage, a monster petition against it was filed by the street railway men. The petition was signed by every employee of the Consolidated Street Railway Company of Cincinnati—motormen and all. And the same week two motormen in that city had to be lifted from their cars at the end of route. They were so benumbed by cold that they could not walk.

Oh, it is a lovely state—that of the "free" workingman who has not surrendered his "freedom" to any tyranical trades union.

"Unwilling friend, let not thy spite abate,
Help me with scorn, and strengthen me with hate."

Mr. Post, the self-chosen apostle of Scabism, who has been lying about coffee for a number of years, has turned his talent for mendacity toward trades-unionism. He will find his latest undertaking not so easy as the other. The trades-unionist can bite back; and he will. There are several reasons why trades-unionists, and others, do not need to use Postum. One is that, if you must have a cereal coffee, you can get the original of which Postum is an imitation in a larger package for the same money. "Caramel Cereal" food coffee is much the better of the two, although cheaper to the consumer. I will tell you why another time.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

Side by side in the Palace of Liberal Arts at the World's Fair are exhibits of the Simplex, the Linotype, the Monotype, and the Monoline—the last-named the Canadian patent. From a semi-reliable source it is learned that the Linotype will secure the Monoline before the year is out, not so much to market it as to be rid of a rival. The monoline is simplicity itself, using an ordinary typewriter keyboard.

While in Chicago I visited the Pioneer, the Rossiter, and the Rand-McNally publishing houses and the Tribune and News offices. At the Inland Printer I was shown over the establishment and the technical school by Messrs. Thompson and McQuilkin.

The News conducts a fresh-air fund and an infant's sanitarium.

I was canvassed by President S. J. Small, of the Commercial Telegraphers Union, with a view to saying a good word for his proposition, which is to establish a sort of second cousin relationship between his organization, or the telegraph operators handling the Associated Press, and the I. T. U.

No Reed or Carlisle ever dominated "a certain legislative body" to the degree attained by a gentleman in the late I. T. U. convention. If he took exception to a proposed measure, "the committee reported unfavorable" and the law on that particular point remains unchanged. At all hours he was consulted by members having propositions pending. The name of this floor leader was Mr. Anderson, of Macon, Ga.

Robert Darnaby, superintendent of the Hollenbeck Press, Indianapolis, tells one that convention visitors should appreciate: He was seated at one of the summer gardens, when a waiter noticed his badge, inquired "What kind of Indians are this I. T. U?" Brother Darnaby proceeded to translate the initials, when his interrogator continued, "One of 'em was in here last night, and he had a roll on him that would choke a cow. He peeled off a bill and told me to keep the change and he left his card with me." Making a dive into his pocket, he produced a card and handed it to Mr. Darnaby. "That happens to be my card, however," he returned, "and I guess you must be wrong about that fellow having any roll. I must have exchanged cards with the spender."

Mr. Darnaby carries a watch charm inscribed "watch dog," a present from Indianapolis Union after fourteen years service as chairman of the finance committee.

The newspaper space given the convention by the St. Louis papers was not in it for a minute with the space given the convention a year ago by the Washington papers. The Associated press printed more accurate reports of the convention than did the St. Louis papers. Of course no one expected the magnificent treatment received at Washington, because the printers were a little toad in a big puddle in the World's fair grounds.—Western Laborer.

Labor Day Parade.

While there will be no parade of unions on Labor Day there will be an automobile parade en route to the Benning track, where automobile races will be held, seven events of that nature being arranged for. Over 150 machines are now entered for the parade and it is an assured success.

In addition to the automobile races a number of other events in field sports will be given, the prizes offered being many and valuable. The committee is hard at work on the details covering the programme for the day and a great crowd is anticipated.

ON THE CHANNEL ISLANDS

Quaint and Beautiful Island of Jersey is Very Interesting.

HOME OF THE "JERSEY LILY"

French the Universal Language There—Harbor of St. Helier—Great Fruit Market for England—Jerseyites are Heavy Drinkers—To Guernsey and Home.

STAR HOTEL.
JERSEY, August 5, 1904.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

In Jersey, beautiful Jersey, the largest of the Channel Islands, we visited for five days. It is a most interesting place and well worth visiting. It is ninety-five miles from Weymouth and one and twenty from Southampton. The coast of Normandy is only fifteen miles away and can be easily seen on a clear day. Steamers leave daily for England and France. London and Paris papers are received here the same day as published. The island is about twelve miles long and five miles wide and has a population of about 55,000. The coast is a dangerous one to mariners and many a vessel has been wrecked on the treacherous rocks that are all but concealed at high tide. The north coast is high and precipitous, while the opposite side is low. St. Helier is the capital and contains about ninety per cent of the population of the island. There are several small villages on the island, connected with the capital by a steam railroad. The temperature of the island is about the same as the south of France. The sun shines on an average of six hours a day the entire year.

The island has a parliament of its own, called the "States," and, strange to say, French is the official language, although English is generally spoken by the inhabitants of the capital. Nearly all the farm laborers are French, and a large proportion were born on the island. At the east end of the island is the village of Govey, with an old castle known as Mount Orgneil, which towers over three hundred feet above the sea. The view from its top is a grand one. At the western end is the old capital of St. Aubin, with the great lighthouse of Coebiere.

In conversation with an old resident, I was told that many retired Indian officers live in Jersey. After spending many years in India they find the climate of England too severe, and in order to be near the mother country come here and erect small but comfortable country houses and spend their remaining days.

There is a magnificent harbor at St. Helier, provided with great stone docks. These massive docks or piers are so arranged that the harbor is made up of three large basins, in which a hundred or more ships can anchor. The docks are provided with the latest machinery for rapidly discharging cargoes.

Immense quantities of fruit and vegetables are shipped from here to the London market. The land is so productive that sometimes three crops of potatoes are harvested in one year. Potatoes are raised in such vast quantities that this year's yield will amount to $7,500,000. Tomatoes and grapes are also grown in great quantities and bring good prices in the English market.

The island is traversed with coaches and carry thousands of English and French tourists to the many interesting places on the coast. We engaged seats in one of these comfortable vehicles in company with a dozen English people and rode to St. Brelade's Bay, one of the most beautiful on the island. It was in a house on this bay that General Boulanger took up his residence when he found it unpleasant in the French capital. The oldest church in the island is located here, having been erected in 746.

St. Quen's Bay is another attractive spot and an historical one, for it was here that Admiral Blake won a battle prior to the siege of Castle Elizabeth.

There are many caves on the north coast, one of which is 350 feet long and 40 feet high. The pirates, I am told, found these caves a safe hiding place at one time.

Our ride took us over the road passing St. Saviour's church and rectory, in the latter of which Mrs. Langtry, better known as the "Jersey Lilly," was born.

The town of St. Helier has many amusements, being provided with an opera house, fine bathing pools, and a battle of flowers is held once a year similar to those in Nice and Cannes. In one nursery may be seen 25,000 rose trees in bloom, a rare sight indeed.

Promenade concerts are given each evening in one of the parks, and occasionally the garrison band gives concerts.

The stores are numerous and attractive, but the public ale house is the most numerous of all. These Jerseyites drink great quantities of ale and beer. Notwithstanding the hard drinking, the police force have an easy task of it, as the morale is good on the whole.

Our next stop will be the island of Guernsey, and then we board the steamer for England and home.

Yours respectfully,
F. E. BUCKLAND.

THE BROTHERS MEET.

Story of a Compact, a Drink, and a Long-Lost Brother.

The following story comes by way of Boston, and the heroes of it are well known to our readers, we give it in detail:

Among those who came to attend the Grand Army Encampment were J. R. McKelvey and William B. Dorsey, of Washington, D. C. McKelvey and Dorsey are chums. They are both members of the Grand Army of the Republic and have attended encampments together for years. Before departing from Washington for Boston they made an agreement with each other that neither would take a drink while the encampment lasted.

Yesterday morning when McKelvey went down into the cafe of the Clarendon Hotel he saw his friend Dorsey, as he thought, with a glass of whisky in front of him. He walked up to him, and just as Dorsey was about to put the glass to his mouth McKelvey stayed his arm.

"'Bill' Dorsey," he said, reproachfully, "I thought you promised me that you wouldn't take a drink while we were in Boston."

"I reckon, stranger, you're on the wrong lay," said the man with the whisky as he turned and looked straight at McKelvey.

McKelvey was as surprised as the man whom he had accosted for a moment. He saw at a glance that the man was not his friend "Bill" Dorsey, although he bore a remarkable resemblance to him.

"I beg your pardon," he said, I thought you were my friend "Bill" Dawsan, and 'Bill' and I had an agreement not to drink, which I thought he was breaking. I hope you will excuse me."

"No harm done, stranger," responded the man whose libation had been interrupted. "You had me all right on the Dorsey, but my name ain't 'Bill.' I had a brother named Bill,' though I ain't laid eyes on him for twenty years."

A short conversation between the two was sufficient to bring out the fact that "Bill" Dorsey, McKelvey's friend, was none other than the long-lost brother of the man who was about to take a drink.

"Where is 'Bill' now?" asked the stranger, who informed McKelvey that his name was George Dorsey and that he came from Denver.

"Right in this hotel," responded McKelvey.

The Denver Dorsey insisted on hunting up his brother right away. He found him surrounded by his family, and there was a family reunion. When the first flush of the excitement and joy was over and there came a momentary halt in the conversation "Bill" Dorsey turned to McKelvey and said:

"How about that pledge? You ain't going to be dog mean to a man who has just found his long-lost brother, are you?"

The appeal was one that McKelvey could not resist.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

The difference between the way the authorities of the Government Printing office and those of the Naval Gun Factory (or Navy-Yard) treat their employes illustrates the difference between civilian and military administration in dealing with labor. When there is a doubt as to a construction of a law affecting rights or privileges of the employes in the former institution, if there is reason to believe that the employes are entitled to the favor, whatever it is, the authorities invariably so decide and the practice is governed thereby until overruled by higher authority, if such be the case. In the Naval Gun Factory, under similar circumstances, ruled as it is by men who have no respect for anyone who does not hold a commission from the President of the United States or a position of equal prominence, the decision is prompt and decisive, "Of course the workmen are not entitled to it," a position which is held with tenacity until overruled by higher authority.

This has been so regularly the practice in all matters where workingmen are under military control as to excite comment among thinking men, and it is becoming more and more apparent every day that the officers of the Army and Navy, educated as they are by precept and tradition to a feeling of contempt for those in civil life, are morally unfitted to be in charge of American workingmen or in control of the workshops in which they are employed. There is no more reason why naval officers should have charge of the details of the work of the Naval Gun factory than that they should be in personal charge of the packing of provisions or the making of clothing or any other work of the Navy, or that officers of the Army should exercise similar oversight of men employed on work done for the land forces of the United States. There is a feeling of aristocracy bred in our Army and Navy officers that makes them unfit to deal with other than slaves in subordinate positions.

The recent case of the Saturday half-holidays of the workmen in the Naval Gun Factory is a case in point. Promptly and apparently without any consideration of the matter, the naval officers in authority there decided that the men were entitled to the half-holiday under the order of the President, but were not entitled to pay, notwithstanding the practice of the Government in all other branches of the service to pay wages for all holidays, and it was not until the machinists, through a committee of their union, presented the matter to the President that a decision was made in their favor, in which non-unionists benefit as well as those who secured the decision. No such question was raised in the Government Printing Office, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, or any other workshop of the Government where skilled mechanics are employed. Why? Because they are not under shoulder-strapped and epauletted overseers, but of men who recognize the rights of men regardless of their position.

One morning recently I ran across Will McHenry, on his way to his office. A year and a half ago he was a compositor in the G. P. O., with only an occasional detail to the proof room to break the monotony of lead slinging, when he secured a transfer to the Rural Free Delivery Service, which had recently been erected into a division of the Post-Office Department. He is now chief clerk, with a clerical force under him numbering nearly a hundred, whose work it is his business to oversee, and this prominence secured entirely by his own efforts in the way of intelligent prosecution of the work assigned to him. Many printers have succeeded in getting into the clerical service of the Government within my observation, and I have never known one who, so far from being a failure, was not a conspicuous success. The training of a printing office, it seems, peculiarly fits one for clerical work. One Cabinet officer expressed himself some years ago, "I always like to get printers into my Department, for they make the very best clerks I have." Though on a transfer to the clerical service the printer usually has to start at a lower salary than he received as a printer, promotion very soon enables him to receive more, with all the additional advantages which belong to the clerical service.

Ex-President Joe M. Johnson came back from the St. Louis I. T. U. convention with his former admiration for President James M. Lynch greatly increased. "He is undoubtedly the greatest ever," says Joe. By the way, Johnson, Berg, and all the others who were at the convention are unanimous in the belief that a world's fair city will never again be chosen for the I. T. U. convention. The exposition is so much greater than anything that can be provided in the way of entertainment that all the local union can do falls flat, is neglected, and fails to be appreciated. This was the case at St. Louis, where the union had make all sorts of preparations for the convention, only, as the events came along, to find a handful of delegates and visitors on hand to "take out" on them. It is another illustration of the greater desirability of being a big frog in a little puddle over being a little frog in a big puddle. But let us all go to Toronto next year, where the I. T. U. convention will probably be the biggest thing they ever had, and they will most likely call out the fire department, the militia, and the police reserves for our especial benefit. Who wants to go to Toronto—as a delegate, I mean?

The following is from the Rochester (N. Y.) Evening Times of August 10, and refers to a man who is well known in this city from having formerly worked in the G. P. O. and because of having been long connected with the Bureau of Labor, being well fitted by experience for the position which he seeks:

Now that the Republican campaign is unfolding there is an opportunity for President Roosevelt to make a good feeling for the Republican party on the part of a large number of voters who, as a rule, yield unswerving allegiance to neither party. We refer to the appointment of William S. Waudby to be Commissioner of Labor to succeed Carroll D. Wright, who has given intimation of his desire to retire and who has already associated himself with several enterprises foreign to the work of the bureau, and which must, of necessity, divert a great portion of his time and energy from public service.

Mr. Waudby is a Rochesterian but his indorsements for the place are confined to no city or State. It is extremely doubtful that any other candidate for appointment to federal office ever had so unanimous indorsement from the labor interests of the country. He is adequately fitted for the place and his appointment has been continuously urged by his friends for more than a year.

In view of the character of such a large part of Mr. Waudby's indorsement it must be apparent to the President that a recognition of Mr. Waudby's supporters by his appointment would be a substantial indication of his interest in the "men who work."

A Chicago man gave up his seat in a street car to a lady on Wednesday. A moment later the car crashed into a railroad train and the lady and many others were killed, while the man escaped injury. Moral: Men, always give up your seats to ladies in crowded street cars. Ladies, be careful how you look men out of their seats in street cars, for the punishment therefor is often swiftly administered.

The Boston Herald of August 11 contained a double-column half-tone of our lady delegate to St. Louis, Miss Anna Wilson, with quite a little sketch of her career. The heading was: "Only Woman Delegate in I. T. U. Convention—Miss Anna C. Wilson, of Washington, D. C., is Pretty, Bright, and Able."

A. F. BLOOMER.

Navy Yard Items.

Assistant Foreman Arthur Brummett, East Gun Carriage Division, is visiting Boston, the scene of his childhood, enjoying the Grand Army celebration and his favorite dish, "Boston baked beans." Mrs. Brummett accompanied him.

J. L. Krause of 645 C street northeast, was killed at the Yard on Monday last. He was at work digging the foundation for the new steel plant, when a scantling fell striking him and fracturing his skull. The body was taken to Baltimore for interment.

The sad accident at the regatta took from the roster of Columbia Lodge two of its members, Bro. Will H. Smith and J. Waldman. Their faces will be missed, as they were regular attendants at the meetings. Columbia Lodge was represented by a committee at both funerals.

Bro. Wm. O'Donnell, of the Executive Board, Columbia Lodge, is now rusticating at Saratoga. For some time he has been halting between three opinions—whether he will support Teddy, or the sage of Esopus, or get married. The odds are, however, in favor of the latter proposition. While Brother O'Donnell is enjoying himself at the seashore a young lady of Capitol Hill is sadly singing, "Willie, Won't You Please Come Home," "Willie We Have Missed You," etc.

The Ordnance Relief Association, of the Yard, gave an outing August 11 to the poor children of the District. Everything was done by the Association to encourage the children in the enjoyments of the occasion. Each child, as well as older persons, were furnished with all the eatables and refreshments to an enjoyable time. About $313.60 was collected, and $263.82 expended. The balance, $49.78, was turned over to the Associated Charities for such disposition as they saw best.

Mr. Price B. Haller, Chairman Press Committee, Columbia Lodge I. A. of M., had an experience the other night that he does not care to have repeated. During the wee sma' hours in the morning, while Brother Haller was dreaming of the happy moments he expected to enjoy at Atlantic City, a colored brother, uninvited, visited his bed chamber and relieved him of the necessary cash to defray his expenses to the watering resort. There is no doubt but that Brother Haller will vote the Democratic ticket to revenge himself on the colored race. The amount appropriated by the visitor was $76.

An Alexandria machinist of East Gun Carriage Shop, who recently moved to Washington, a few days ago got in trouble. When he is in Alexandria and attends church he sits well up in the amen corner. Therefore it will not be proper to give names. Just plain Reuben will suffice. Brother Reuben's wife is spending a few weeks with her relatives in the country and will no doubt be shocked to know that Rube drew his bi-monthly pay and carefully abstracting a twenty dollar bill proceed to paint a certain part of the city "red." While enjoying himself with firewater, etc., he fell asleep and was rudely awakened by a guardian of the peace, who invited him to a carriage ride to the station. Brother Rube claims that he was overcome by the heat, but be it as it may in the morning his twenty dollar bill was missing and he was compelled to send for a friend to loan him five dollars to bribe the station clerk for a release. Brother Rube is now on the stool of repentance and is figuring out how he can explain to his wife the loss of his wages. Better things should be expected from an Alexandria deacon.

After a hard struggle the employees of the Yard have gained their point as regards the half holiday on Saturday afternoon with pay. It will be remembered that when the President issued the executive order he specifically named the Washington Navy Yard. When the War Department asked for a decision from Comptroller Tracewell relative to the bricklayers temporarily employed at the Arsenal he decided that they were not entitled to pay for the half holiday. The Superintendent of the Naval Gun Factory, acting on that ruling, so interpreted the meaning that he, without orders from the Navy Department, issued notice that all employees who absented themselves on Saturday afternoon would do so at their own risk.

This order gave great dissatisfaction, and prompt action was taken by Columbia Lodge at its last meeting. The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted and a committee of three, Brothers Emmett Adams, W. R. Adams, and President Samuel Elder, were appointed to wait on President Roosevelt and present them:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 17, 1904.

At a regular meeting of Columbia Lodge No. 174, International Association of Machinists, held at Masonic Temple on the above date, the following resolution was adopted as the sense of the membership employed at the Washington Navy Yard, relative to the half holiday Saturday during the months of July, August and September:

WHEREAS, Through an executive order issued by the President of the United States to the Secretary of the Navy, and by him to the Commandant of the Washington Navy Yard, excluding from duty all employees whose services could be spared after 12 o'clock noon on each Saturday during the months of July, August and September; and

WHEREAS, For reasons unknown to the employees, there have been various orders, written and verbal, questioning the legality of our half holiday since the published report of a decision made by the Comptroller of the Treasury covering temporary per diem employees at the Arsenal under the supervision of the War Department; and

WHEREAS, It has been made known to the employees of the Navy Yard that the two half days which they have been excused from duty during August will be deducted from their pay on August 25; and

WHEREAS, This action will be taken, so far as the employees have been able to learn, without any decision from the Comptroller of the Treasury covering the employees of the Navy Yard; and

WHEREAS, There are numerous precedents established to encourage the belief that a decision by the Comptroller will not reverse former decisions or the position maintained by the employees; therefore be it

Resolved, That such action is not warranted by the mere published report of the Comptroller affecting a different class of Government employees, and we protest against any action which may be based upon an anticipated decision: and be it further

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves collectively to resist every attempt made by subordinate officials to deprive us of the half holiday granted by virtue of an executive order of the President of the United States, unless the same be countermanded by him; and be it further

Resolved, That we, the employes of the Washington Navy Yard hereby respectfully petition the Presieent of the United States to take cognizance of the grievances herein outlined.

EMMETT L. ADAMS,
WM. M. ADAMS,
SAMUEL ELDER,
Committee.

The next day the committee waited on the President and presented the resolutions. The result was the Acting Attorney-General and Comptroller were hastily summoned. The President insisted on an immediate decision, which was promptly furnished by the Comptroller, and victory once more perches on the banner of Columbia Lodge.

Moral: "Be sure you are right, then go ahead."

TIM TICKLE.

May Come to Washington.

The Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers International Alliance is taking a referendum vote in its locals on the question of removing headquarters. The headquarters are now located at Kansas City, and four principal cities of the country are contesting for headquarters. Washington and Chicago seem to have the lead in the vote, and R. G. M. Ross, of this city, is doing yeoman work to have the general offices removed to this city.

Mr. H. J. Lowe has been lame for a few days from an ingrowing toe nail.

B. P. Preuss, who was reinstated this week, deposited a Dallas, Texas, card.

According to the Civil Service quota each printer represents a population of 3,000.

Thomas F. Doonan ("Gladys") returned from a four week's assignment to the Spess.

Mr. Ricketts was showing Philippine Public Printer Leech through the office Monday.

J. J. Fenton, slug 10, has returned to work after spending his leave in the capital city.

Frank Rose enjoyed his leave here in Washington, the most beautiful residence city in the world.

L. J. Runyan was welcomed back Monday after a detail to the Spess. of six months and one week.

Chas. Wilhelm has enjoyed a months leave with his home folks at Winchester in northeast Kansas, the Sunflower State.

Mr. McGraw, the apron man, was stricken with typhoid fever last Saturday. His friends wish for him a speedy recovery.

L. H. Burton, Record chairman, and L. J. Clements, a former chairman, were among Mr. Berg's noisy colts who came over Tuesday.

Tuesday about twenty of the Record force were assigned to this room, giving us now a total of 142. They are very welcome, as they are all good fellows.

J. H. Swerdfiger, our ardent Socialist, announces that he will make an address on "Trades Unions and Socialism" at Building Trades Hall, Sixth and G streets northwest.

A temporary in this division found a $20 bill in an addressed pay envelope the other day, which belonged to a young lady in the bindery. He turned it over to the foreman of printing who gave it to the owner.

We are indebted to Mr. Titus F. Ellis for a copy of the convention souvenir issued by St. Louis union. It is very handsome. One noticeable feature is the lack of advertisements, which is to be highly commended.

After several months spent at the Printers Home and in the mountains of Tennessee, George D. Colquitt has has returned, looking fine. He has gained a good deal of flesh. Slug 113 in this division was assigned him Monday.

Can any other division present a greater array of literary talent than the Second has now: William Tipton Talbot (Adam Bugg) who came over with the Record crowd, H. S. Sutton (Maud S.), David Eccles, and H. A. McPike.

Foreman of Printing, O. J. Ricketts, S. J. Kubel, pressman, of Washington, I. T. U. ex-President W. B. Prescott, of the Baltimore News, and Theodore L. De Vinne are among the World's Fair judges of liberal arts, typography, and printing presses.

Wm. F. True returned Monday from the G. A. R. encampment at Boston. While watching the launching of the Cumberland his sixteen-year old son, Abe, nabbed a pickpocket, who escaped him but was afterwards caught and eight pocket books which belonged to old soldiers were recovered.

PIKES.

No more downy bed for Beddow. The assistant foremanship has slipped from under him, and he is back again to a bed of sheets—proof sheets—in the ring alley.

Why is a dirty proof sheet conducive to morality? Because it makes whoever gets it correct the errors of his way.

The boss has returned from a month's military duty—in the infant-ry service.

THE PLEASURE FOUND IN A BABE.

Take all the sunny brightness of a sunny day in June,
And all the golden colors that are placed upon the moon,
And quaff them all together, yet their beauty can't compare
With the golden ringlets of a baby's silken hair.

Take all the violets that lay half hidden in the shade,
And all the velvet pansies in their purple pride arrayed,
And weave them all together with the blueness of the skies,
They have not half the beauty of a baby's azure eyes.

Take the pink that lines the sea shell, the sunset's golden flush,
The lining of the lily, the morning's pearly blush,
And blend them all together into lines of perfect grace—
They have not half the glory of a baby's dimpled face.

Take all the sweetest music that you have ever heard,
The silver chimes of church bells, the singing of the birds,
Not all their tuneful music can thrill an ear by half,
Like the cheerful sounding sweetness of a baby's happy laugh.

Take all the pleasures your heart has ever known,
And all the emotions God's goodness has shown,
And mix them all together in one of tuneful bliss,
You'll taste the exquisite sweetness of baby's gentle kiss.

A. W. Sefton Recovered.

After several weeks of confinement on account of injuries received by a fall from a street car, H. W. Sefton has returned to work in the G. P. O. In attempting to board a car at Ninth and F streets, Mr. Sefton was thrown to the ground and received injuries which for a time threatened to prove fatal.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

First Division.

Geo. R. Boone returned to his desk last Friday.

W. N. Darden has gone to his old home in Mississippi for a brief visit.

Chas. R. Radley, David T. Lloyd and W. L. Pierce returned last week from their vacation.

Wm. M. Leavitt assumed charge of the Y on Wednesday, after thirty days spent back East.

W. R. Abbott has taken his family and sought recreation up in the northern part of Maryland.

Thos. E. Doty was assigned to slug 27, this division, last week. He comes to us from the Second.

Mr. Dooley joined the union last Sunday. Mr. Hennessy has been a member for some time.

Clint O. Price's campaign manager is evidently a firm believer in that little story about the early bird.

H. S. Gunn (Johnny) will moved next Saturday from the Boulevard de Bates and occupy a flat on Third street.

J. N. Cobb has placed his auto in storage, and, together with his wife, is spending fifteen days at his old home in Georgia.

While taking two weeks' vacation, C. A. Howle, of the correcting force, is visiting Philadelphia and other Eastern cities.

James B. Harris, whose death has been expected for several months, passed away last week at the Home in Colorado Springs.

Ex-President "Billy" Prescott, of the I. T. U., was present at last Sunday's meeting and delivered an able and interesting address.

Jacob Persinger, for several years on the watch force of this building, has been placed on the composition list, and added to this division.

Guy Partridge, maker-up in the Fourth Division, is taking his leave. His place is being filled by Gus Wisener, an ex-First Division employe.

Another addition to the temporary force came on Monday in the person of Chas. A. Lucas. Charley completed his last six months' service in this division.

By declaring he never expected to get much knowledge from a small man, last Sunday, my friend Kreiter of the Post, called particular attention to his own size.

Chas. P. Peake is taking fifteen days' leave. Charley is a base ball fan proper, and during his vacation will not get very far away from the Seventh street park.

W. R. Verlander, of the Y, is taking a part of his annual leave. The Exposition at St. Louis, and a possible trip to New Orleans was what he had under consideration.

Friends in this division will be pleased to learn that John O'Brien has again been placed on the office temporary force. He was assigned to the Specifications.

R. L. Davidson is taking fifteen days leave and showing a party of friends from Tennessee the sights of Washington. Its a cinch the Tennesseeans will see all there is to be seen.

"The quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog." "Thereby hangs a tale," quoth Brother Redfield last week, but he forgot to tell us whether it was on the fox or the dog.

J. W. Sherman, of the Y, will spend the next ten days with his family on the lower Potomac. Mr. Sherman is owner of one of the finest house boats that rests on those historic waters.

Edward M. Jefferies and Charles W. Kirkley are the latest additions to the temporary force. Both were employed in this division last winter, and have been assigned to slugs 137 and 138.

The changes in the Record room necessary for the installation of the linotype machines, and the uncertainty of the Saturday half holidays necessitates the rumor committee working overtime.

"Shorty" N. P. Moyer, who was connected with this division up to the time the Catalogue was transferred to the Fourth, has been made a temporary imposer in that division and placed on the galley press.

The lady delegation at last Sunday's union meeting consisted of Mrs. Joe M. Johnson, Mrs. Palmer, Miss Laura Gordon, and Miss Teresa McDonald. These ladies are entitled to be classed among the faithful.

Whenever Wm. Brockwell of the Record proof room attends a meeting, which is whenever there is a meeting, he takes along a good supply of oratorical oil which he pours on the troubled waters. As a peacemaker "Bill" is a shining star.

The following compositors were assigned to this division from the Record last Tuesday: C. E. LaVinge, C. L. Vliet, E. J. Elwood, J. R. Driscoe, Frank Burnside, S.E. Mullen, Lee Hartley, John D. Metz, F. S. Miller, James Carville, W. C. Jordan, C. G. Perry.

Jos. E. Goodkey, of the Third, introduced a resolution at last Sunday's union meeting declaring no member eligible to run for delegate who had not attended a majority of the meetings during the past year. Here's where the stay-at-home candidate gets interested.

J. S. Leach, public printer of the Philippines, and ex-Fifth Division foreman, was a caller at the G. P. O. last Wednesday. Dressed in a neat linen suit, and with a tanned complexion that would make a summer girl envious, Mr. Leach gave one the impression that life in the Philippines is not as bad as has been stated.

After presenting a resolution declaring a $25 fine on members buying a certain brand of foodstuffs, which, of course, caused no end of discussion, Hugh Everett, of the Spess, declared he placed the amount excessive in order to have it thoroughly discussed. The scheme worked all right, but it may be a bad precedent.

Delegate Frank Kidd introduced a resolution at the last convention calling for the appointment of a board of physicians to ascertain what speed a machine operator may attain without injury to his health, which was lost. Mr. Kidd might now turn to the undertakers who probably have statistics as to the gait some of them were going at the finish.

Since the assignment to this division of a portion of the Record force, Foreman A. W. Bowen now has the supervision of 226 men. To accommodate this increase in his force he has found it necessary to utilize every available inch of space and to place frames in positions where the designers of the building had never intended such to be. This division, always a hustling one, is now in better position than ever to turn out reports or hearings while the man from the departments or Capitol sits in the front office and waits for the proof.

Public band concerts will be given as follows during the week ending Thursday, September 1st:

Thursday, Aug. 25—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Judiciary Park.

Friday, Aug. 26—Engineer Band, Engineer Barracks and Garfield Park.

Saturday, Aug. 27—Marine Band, White House Grounds.

Monday, Aug. 29—Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Dupont Circle.

Tuesday. Aug. 30—Engineer Band, Engineer Barracks and Smithsonian Grounds.

Wednesday, Aug. 31—Marine Band, Capitol Grounds.

Thursday, Sept. 1—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Judiciary Park.

It should be noted that while the concerts by the Cavalry and Engineer Bands begin at 7.30 p. m., those by the Marine Band have a different time schedule, as follows: The concerts given at the Marine Barracks begin at 5 o'clock, and those at the Capitol and the White House begin an hour and a half before sunset, or about 5.30 p. m.

Wm. W. Ingram was a new arrival Tuesday morning.

C. C. Yeakle came to work on the 18th and was assigned to frame 100.

Charles F. Blett, formerly a temporary in this division, called to see us on the 22nd inst.

Messrs. A. J. Campbell and G. D. Ellis returned from their respective leaves on the 19th inst.

Frank L. McUmber made his appearance among us Monday morning after an absence on leave of fitteen days.

Messrs. A. W. McEwen and John C. Keelan returned Tuesday morning from the Spess after an absence of a little over six months.

A large key, probably a latch key, was found on this floor several days ago and now hangs from a pin on the bulletin board of this division awaiting its owner.

The following temporary men came to work Monday morning:

Messrs. E. O. Clement, W. E. Drenner, R. W. Gray, Elmer Hollis, and W. F. Wallace.

If Terwilliger wins every time he offers to "bet you a dollar that we don't work to-night," he must be rich enough by this time to start a little symposium of his own.

Messrs. J. H. Malees, J. H. Lemon, and John H. Wheeler, all temporary appointees, made their first appearance on the 10th, and were assigned, respectively, to frames 70, 75, and 84.

It is reported on good authority that McGraw, the man who brings us the blue aprons, is down with typhoid fever. Let us hope that it is a light attack; we can't spare McGraw yet.

James B. Harris, who went to the Printers' Home this summer for the benefit of his health, died there about a week ago. The deceased was connected with this division for a short time.

Further corroboration of the story about big fruit told by Goodkey appeared in last Sunday's papers, where I read that oranges of the seedless variety, 18 inches in circumference, and weighing 2½ pounds each, are exhibited at the St. Louis Fair.

Speaking of the drink habit, the following extract from "Mr. Dooley on the Model Saloon" is very much to the point:

"Ye ra-aly do think dhrink is a nicissery evil?" said Mr. Hinnessy,

"Well," said Mr. Dooley, "if it's an evil to a man, it's not nicissery, an' if it's nicissery, it's an evil."

I had always supposed that "Windy" Morgan was from Arkansas, but the following, from the Dixon (Mo) Echo, would seem to indicate "a local habitation and a name" at the latter place:

"Mrs. Windy has got sixty chickens and nine dogs to feed. She says that it takes more feed for the dogs than it does for the chickens. Windy thinks so too."

Allen C. Cowles, D. D. S., and E. C. Saltzman, bankmen, are each bereft of wife and home. Mrs. Cowles is visiting her people in Madison, Wis., and Mrs. Saltzman is similary engaged in St. Louis, Mo. This condition of affairs will keep up until the November election, when Messrs. Cowles and Saltzman will go home to vote, after which the ladies will accompany their husbands back to Washington.

In view of the following, I think it is about time Congress took a hand to check pauper immigration by establishing a minimum rate for steerage passage on vessels coming to this country from Europe. Any old rate would do for outward bound passengers, so long as it rids us of some of the undesirable pauper labor now so much in evidence:

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 13.—The American Line to-day announced a cut in its steerage rate to $3.75 from Liverpool to Philadelphia.

Last week word was received by James Jenkins, laborer, that his brother was dead. James lost no time in going to his brother's house, where he found that there was no occasion for sadness, his brother being very much alive. It seems that some one confused another Jenkins family with that of our colored friend; hence the sudden message, hurried journey, and joyful meeting of the Jenkins brothers. James has our congratulations.

There was every appearance of a rush of business in the Third Division last Monday when an extra force was detailed to help move the lead and slug racks, dead banks, and 6-point and 8-point fonts into new positions so as to allow an extra frame to be placed on each side of every alley on the south side of the room, as well as an extra alley of 8 frames where the font cabinets stood, making 25 additional frames and raising the total force of compositors from 111 to 136. It is understood that the men to fill these frames will come from the Record force, which will be detailed to various parts of the building while the new outfit of forty Mergenthaler linotypes is being installed in the Sixth Division.

Luke J. Bennett was seriously ill for about a week, but had sufficiently recovered to resume work Tuesday.

Miss Mamie Hayden has been visiting relatives in Brooklyn and up-State; had a delightful time and came home by the water route to Baltimore.

Miss Laura B. Gordon, president of the Woman's Auxiliary, has returned to work after a very enjoyable vacation at the Fair and attending the convention.

J. L. Garrett is "doing" Chicago and St. Louis. He boarded a Halstead street car in Chicago and was held up for two hours by dissatisfied employes of the packing houses.

Miss Hattie Jewett attained a speed of thirty-five hundred ems per hour on the Lanston keyboard after sixty-four hours' practice. The "matter," making two full galleys, contained very few errors and was the first "live" type produced by the new casters.

In my last week's notes I "pied" Mr. W. J. C. Greevy's name very badly. In discussing the matter with him I discovered that he is an ex-delegate of Williamsport, Pa., Union of the year '89—Denver. He was an alternate to the convention held here last year and was president of Williamsport Union for six consecutive terms.

T. C. Easterling is with us again, having been assigned cases on the Spess. He has toured this great country to a considerable extent and comes to us from Charleston, W. Va., where he was employed as city editor of the Daily Gazette and had been doing editorial work on the Evening Herald. While in the West he had the honor, or dishonor, of publishing the only Socialist magazine in the country—advocating government ownership of several important industries—which was contributed to by many eminent writers, Count Tolstoi being among the number.

Mr. H. H. Snell, chief inspector of the Lanston Monotype Company, who has charge of the installation of the Lanston machines in the G. P. O., has some copies of a book relating to the Lanston keyboard which he will distribute to compositors in the G. P. O. who are sufficiently interested in the machines to make them a study. The book may be obtained by applying at Snell's office, Record Clerk's Room. It is explicit and comprehensive and was prepared by Mr. Wilfred Bancroft and Mr. Snell. These gentlemen have also published two books on the "caster" for the use of machinists.

Wm. C. Connor, who has returned from Massachusetts, is spending a month at the pretty suburb of Riverdale, Md., and is holding conferences nightly on his front porch.

Last week a gentleman who was riding with the driver of a water wagon on North Capitol street fell off and was dragged in the mire for quite a distance. It was learned he came from Boston. The doctors claim he may get over it. He'll never look the same.

PASTE.

Personal Mention.

John S. Leech, Public Printer of the Bureau of Printing, Manila, P. I., is a visitor in the city. He will spend a few weeks in the city, leaving for the middle West to make an extended visit at his home, Bloomington, Ill., prior to his return to the Philippines.

Will Speak Labor Day.

F. C. Roberts, of the Fourth Division, G. P. O., has this week received from the Secretary of the Labor Day Committee of New London, Conn., which has the celebration of that day in charge, an invitation to make the principal address of the day. Mr. Roberts has accepted the invitation.

Death of James B. Harris.

James B. Harris, who left this city about six weeks ago for the Union Printers' Home, died at that institution last week. Mr. Harris was employed at the Government Printing Office, First Division, and went to Colorado for his health. He was too far gone, however, to be benefited. The remains were sent to his former home in North Carolina.

The Trades Unionist Cup.

The automobile races, scheduled as one of the features for Labor Day at Benning, are arousing more than usual interest among the owners of machines in this city. Eight events will be determined at Benning. In the second event THE TRADES UNIONIST cup will be the trophy. It is a massive silver loving cup, with buck horn handles, and is now on exhibition at Voigt's, 725 Seventh street northwest.

Resolutions Presented.

During the progress of the meeting of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, last Sunday, a committee appointed by Baltimore Union, No. 12, appeared and presented Columbia Union with a handsomely engrossed and framed resolution as a reminder of its action on the occasion of the recent disastrous fire in Baltimore.

The resolution is in the highest style of artistic pen work and was executed by S. C. Malone, of Baltimore, who has a wide reputation as an artist penman.

After an address by President Hanafin, of Baltimore Union, the resolutions were presented. President Berg responded for Columbia Union.

The resolutions are as follows:

WHEREAS, In February, nineteen hundred and four, a great portion of the wholesale business district of the city of Baltimore was destroyed by fire, and in the devastated area were the publication offices of the Baltimore Sun, the Baltimore American, the Baltimore Herald, and the Baltimore News, besides a large number of job printing offices employing members of Baltimore Typographical Union, No. 12; and

WHEREAS, Without notification by the officers of Baltimore Union of the hardships its members would possibly endure unless assistance were immediately given, Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, at a special meeting held when the extent of the disaster was known, loaned Baltimore Union one thousand dollars, without time and without condition, and tendered its assistance in the temporary publication in Washington of the Baltimore newspapers whose mechanical equipments had been consumed in the flames; therefore be it

Resolved, By Baltimore Typographical Union, No. 12, That in appreciation of the voluntary assistance of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, and to commemorate the fraternal fellowship in our craft which the great disaster called forth, this resolution is tendered, in the hope that the bond of fraternity which binds us shall grow in favor with the passing years.

WILLIAM HANAFIN,
President.

EDWARD J. BURGAN,
Secretary.

Followed Instructions.

A few years ago a well known lawyer remitted, in settlement of an account to the publisher of a paper in the West, a two-dollar bill, which was returned with the brief statement.

"This note is counterfeit; please send another."

Two months passed before hearing from the lawyer again, when he apologized for the delay, saying:

"I have been unable until now to find another counterfeit two-dollar bill, but hope the one now inclosed will suit, professing at the same time, my inability to discover what the objection was to the other, which I thought as good a counterfeit as I ever saw."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The Laughlin Fountain Pen.

We desire to call the attention of our readers to the advertisement in another column of the Laughlin Fountain Pen. There are many makes of fountain pens on the market, but none have stood the test as well as the Laughlin Pen for durability, execution and usefulness. The price ($1.00) is within the reach of all, and the guarantee of return of price if not satisfactory is the standing offer with the makers of the best pen on the market.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of August 23, 1904.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of the Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at the usual hour by Chairman Wells, with all officers present excepting the vice-chairman.

The minutes of the previous meeting was read and approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Slaters' Union, announcing that their union had voted in favor of paying the assessment. Placed on file.

From Hod Carriers' Union, No. 21, containing the opinion of their union on the action of the Central Labor Union in electing a delegate-at-large. Placed on file.

From Stone Laborers' Union, notifying the Council of a change in their corresponding secretary.

From Tube Workers, No. 5, asking assistance. Placed on file.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

From Central Labor Union relative to brewery matter, the Organization Committee tendering their resignation, and that $10 be appropriated for the Council of Allied Building Trades of Philadelphia, which was financially embarrassed.

Under roll call to submit business, twenty-five delegates from sixteen unions were marked present.

Hod Carriers reported that a Mr. Phillips, who had a contract from T. R. Galloway, was employing nonunion men; also that Norcross Bros. were doing the same thing. Both cases were referred to the Business Agent.

Stone Laborers reported that their union had tried in vain to straighten out Viehmeyer's yard, and had declared the yard unfair, and asked the indorsement of the Council. Referred to the Executive Committee.

Painters stated that their union had withdrawn their men from the shop of Charles Ernst.

Paperhangers extended an invitation to all delegates to attend the third anniversary of that union's connection with the Brotherhood, to be held at their hall, Wednesday, August 24.

Carpet Workers thanked the Council for the assistance they had received from it, and stated that all men in the city, except three, who worked at that business, were members of their union.

The trustees were directed to procure a better quality of paper for the next quarter's card.

The Council then adjourned.

Personal Mention.

Labor News, Colorado Springs, Colo.

Hunter S. Edington, of the Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C., who has been spending some time sightseeing about the Rockies, made ye editor a pleasant call Tuesday.

A. J. E. Hubbard was chosen delegate and Arthur Glenhill alternate to represent No. 82 at the ninth annual convention of the Colorado State Federation of Labor to be held in Pueblo, September 12.

Labor Must Be Free.

But to get the best and the most out of labor it must not only be intelligent; it must also be free, free to rise or sink in the social scale. It must have a voice in making the laws under which it lives. Otherwise those laws will operate to hinder, not to help it to make the best fight of which it is capable for possession of home and foreign markets. Without this voice the laws will become more and more unequal and oppressive.

A labor class deprived of freedom of a voice in government can not maintain the advantage which mere intelligence and skill may have gained for it in the struggle for existence. As it loses freedom, a voice in government, it will lose ultimately its skill, its intelligence as an industrial factor, for it will become in effect subject to if not exactly the slave of the capitalistic and labor classes which are free, which makes the laws. And these classes will invariably act on the assumption that the more ignorant subject labor class is the less trouble it will cause. In their opinion slave labor is more manageable than free labor gives rise to simpler social conditions, to problems less complex and difficult to handle.—Atlantic Monthly.

John A. Onyun.

John A. Onyun, of the First Division, G. P. O., has received from President Lynch a copy of the resolutions adopted by that body in regard to the good work to be accomplished by State unions. Mr. Onyun is interested in State work, and the accomplishments of the Illinois State Union is proof of the good work which may be done by similar organizations. The following resolutions were adopted by the International Typographical Union:

WHEREAS, The Illinois State Printing Crafts Union has accomplished much good work in the interest of the allied printing crafts of Illinois and adjacent territory; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the International Typographical Union in convention assembled, hereby extend its congratulations and commendations of such efforts, and we hereby recognize said organization as an instrument of good in the advancement of our cause.

For twelve consecutive years Mr. Onyun has been secretary-treasurer of the Illinois State Printing Crafts Union, and never fails to make yearly pilgrimages to the Sucker State in order to be present at the meetings. That he is held in high esteem by the Illinois association is evidenced by the fact of his continued re-election, notwithstanding the fact that he practically lives in Washington.

Be Consistent.

There would be few strikes, few boycotts, if the organized men would only look after their interests during times of peace—that is, if they were only consistent union men all the time. The trouble is we do not spend our money as we should. It is unpleasant to be forever calling attention to this, but it is one of the duties of the labor papers. We must be eternally telling our people that no one notices and pays more heed to the manner in which we spend our money than the man who is selfishly opposed to us. When a strike is on in our immediate locality it would be almost an impossibility to get a union man to take the place of a fellow worker trying to better his conditions, but perhaps at the same time the strike is in progress some men are buying garments that do not bear the label, tobacco that was not made by union men, hats without the label, etc., and whenever this is done we are fighting organized labor.—Exchange.

Tile Layers Protest Against Heisley as Delegate-at-Large—Executive Committee to Buy Furniture—Hod Carriers' Grievance Against Norcross Bros.

The regular weekly meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8 p. m. on Monday evening, President Dickman in the chair.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

Credentials were received from Engineers Union, No. 94, cetifying to J. W. Stockton, Wm. Lucas, James Delaney, J. W. Ross, and J. W. Hardy.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Local No. 148, Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen, indorsing contract with master butchers, and asking its indorsement. Referred to Contract Committee.

From T. Atkinson Perry, secretary Amalgamated Society of Carpenters, asking for information relative to suspension of local Branches. Placed on file.

From Columbia Lodge of Machinists, No. 174, I. A. M., extending an invitation to be present on the excursion to Marshall Hall of that Lodge. Placed on file.

From Tile Layers and Helpers, No. 2, protesting against seating of J. M. Heisley as a delegate-at-large. Placed on file.

The chair announced the following as the Organization Committee: C. A. Pfau, J. H. Brahler, L. E. Kearney, John Lorch, and T. C. Parsons.

The Executive Committee was instructed to purchase suitable office furniture for use of the officers and committees of this body.

Delegate Adams called attention to the newly organized Merchants and Mechanics Bank, and invited all to be present at the opening on September 1.

Labor Day Committee reported that an Autmobile parade would be held on Labor Day at 9 a. m., and that 400 machines would be in line.

Financial Secretary read list of unions in arrears, and the matter was referred to Organization Committee.

Hod Carriers Union, No. 21, presented a grievance against Norcross Bros, which was referred to Grievance Committee.

The special committee appointed to investigate charges made against certain members of the Central Labor Union, in the Brauer Zeitung, the official organ of the United Brewery Workers, reported the following resolutions:

WHEREAS, In recent issues of the journal of the United Brewery Workmen of America, and in a communication bearing date August 16, 1904, Joseph Proebstle, International secretary, has charged certain delegates and officers of the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia with false and corrupt dealing; and

WHEREAS, The Central Labor Union is determined to thoroughly investigate these charges; therefore

Be it resolved, That the Central Labor Union be requested to instruct its secretary to notify the said Joseph Proebstle of the appointment of a proper investigating committee, and to demand of him his presence in this city at as early a date as possible to produce data to substantiate the aforesaid charges.

The Contract Committee submitted a contract entered into with the Hub Furniture Co., which was accepted.

The Springfield (Ohio) Sun recently contained a five-page dry goods ad., issued in a sixteen-page paper. The copy for this mammoth advertisement reached the composing room of the Sun at 7 p. m. and the paper, sixteen pages, was delivered to the carriers on time. So far as known, five full pages in one issue is without precedent in newspaper advertising, and the incident is especially interesting in that the Sun is published in a city of less than 40,000 inhabitants.—New York Unionist.

LABOR DAY AT BENNING.

An Unprecedented List of Attractions Arranged for the Day.

The coming Labor Day Carnival at Benning promises to exceed any event ever undertaken by the Central Labor Union in the past, or any organization that preceded it in making the observance of Labor Day a feature in the community.

Eight automobile races are scheduled to take place, the first event to start at 2 p. m. sharp. Handsome cups have been donated by liberal and enterprising business men of the city, who recognize the fact that the races are at once novel and exciting.

Eighteen events in field sports are also on the card, consisting of all the usual styles and kinds of running, freak, and scientific exercises. The field sports will necessarily be held prior to the automobile races, and will start promptly at 10 a. m.

To add to the gayety of the occasion a barbecue will be given, conducted by that efficient and accomplished butcher, Martin Hellmuth, with a score of assistants. Plenty of sandwiches of various kinds will be prepared and the inner man can be replenished free of charge. To aid the digestion the bar will be open to dispense such liquid refreshments as may be desired, from soft to hard.

The car service will be ample, arrangements being completed for sending out special cars on the Pennsylvania Railroad and the H street line promises to care for all that comes its way.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of August 30, 1904.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8 o'clock by Chairman Wells, with all officers present.

Minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

A bill for $10.30 from E. L. McClellan for carpenter work was read and referred to trustees.

A communication was received from Tile Layers Union, stating that they would pay assessment. Placed on file.

Under reports of committees, Delegates reported from Central Labor Union relative to communication from Thomas Atkinson, general secretary of Amalgamated Society of Carpenters, in which he pleads ignorance of the fact that the branches in this city had been suspended from the Central Labor Union, and a committee consisting of Delegates Winslow, Daly, and Ratigan were instructed to prepare a statement covering the difficulty with the Carpenters.

Under roll call of unions to submit business, twenty-four delegates from sixteen unions answered the roll.

Stone Laborers stated that their secretary was directed to protest to Central Labor Union, relative to election of delegates-at-large, and asked the assistance of Council with Miller and Copp.

Hod Carriers reported having straightened out job at Twenty-fifth and F streets; that they had withdrawn their men from Phillips job and Norcross Bros.

Paperhangers stated that they had called out the shop of Charles Ernst, in sympathy with Painters.

The secretary was directed to communicate with Painters Union, relative to statements that the Painters had withdrawn from Council of Allied Building Trades.

The Council then adjourned.

Minute Life.

The microscope teaches us that there are animals so wonderfully minute that if a thousand of them were ranked abreast they could easily swim, without being thrown out of order, through the eye of the finest cambric needle ever made. Yet each of the minute creatures is a highly organized number of particles, capable of moving about, of finding and devouring food and of behaving in all respects as becomes an animal as distinguished from a fragment of unorganized matter. The human mind is utterly incapable of realizing the structure of these little creatures and of fully appreciating their marvelous adaption to the life they are destined to lead —Sir Robert S. Ball.

A Story With a Bad Moral.

In a prosperous town in Mexico lives a merchant whose wealth grew out of a combination of good luck and drunkenness. An uncontrollable desire for drink cost him position after position, and he drifted down into Mexico and became a news agent. He sold lottery tickets. He had to report on drawing day what unsold tickets he had and forward them. He got drunk the day before one of the big drawings. Two days later he sobered and found himself in possession of several hundred dollars' worth of unsold tickets. He did not possess $10 in the world. He examined the list and found that a number of the unsold tickets had drawn prizes aggregating $35,000 in gold. He collected the winnings, paid for the unsold tickets and took an oath of perpetual total abstinence. That was years ago. He has never touched liquor since and is to-day a wealthy man. The moral is bad, but the story is too good to suppress.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

AT SEA, ON BOARD
S. S. "VADERLAND."
August 22, 1904.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

After spending a very pleasant week on the Island of Jersey, we boarded the steamer Ibex for the island of Guernsey. This short trip of one and a half hours was what the English call "awfully nawsty." While the steamer is a good-sized one, she carried very little cargo, and consequently bobbed around on a stormy sea very much like a cork. Nearly every one was sick and as miserable as it is possible to be and still live.

Our visit of three days in Guernsey was a most enjoyable one, made so by the opportunity we had of renewing pleasant acquaintances begun two years ago. Guernsey, while smaller than Jersey, is much the same in contour. Many think Guernsey the most attractive of all the Channel Islands. It is a beautiful spot and rich in fruits and vegetables. The population is a little less than Jersey. We resumed our journey to England, entering the port of Weymouth, a five-hour sail, and after a pleasant run of four hours through southwestern England arrived at Paddington station in the greatest city in the world.

We spent a portion of a day in Westminster Abbey, that venerable pile opposite the Parliament buildings. We were conducted through the many chapels containing the tombs of England's sovereigns. While they are not all buried here, those that are known best in history have found a resting place in the most interesting cathedral in Great Britain.

We were also shown the poet's corner, where are erected memorials in honor of the greatest English poets. Here can be seen a fitting memorial to our Longfellow. In this corner Dickens, Dryden, Ben Johnson, and a host of other celebrities are remembered by either tablets or busts.

Gladstone, Peel, Disraelli, and many of the great statesmen of Great Britain are buried in the opposite side of the cathedral and have magnificent statues erected to their memory.

A part of the day was spent at Earl's Court visiting the Italian exhibition, a very creditable affair. We availed ourselves of the best means in seeing the busy streets of London by obtaining seats on top of the 'busses and getting behind the driver, who is generally willing to point out the places of interest. In this way we traversed many of the great thoroughfares from one end of London to the other, each time seeing something new and interesting.

Many fine buildings are being erected in London on the new streets being opened from Holborn to the Strand. There is one feature of this huge metropolis that is the admiration of all visitors, and that is the policemen. They are above suspicion and as gallant as they are good looking. A question propounded to a London policeman is courteously and plainly answered, so no mistake can be made if his suggestion is followed.

On Saturday evening, the 13th inst., about 8 o'clock, the clerk at our hotel called a cab, which conveyed us in twenty minutes to Charing Cross, where we found a special train awaiting the passengers for Dover. At 9 o'clock we left this well-known station. Crossing the Thames we made one stop, and then after a run of less than two hours found our car alongside the steamer that was to convey us to America. In four minutes more we were on the deck. After seeing our luggage safely stored away in the stateroom we walked into the dining saloon and found a magnificent lunch spread for the London arrivals. Before midnight our steamer was on its way down the channel.

We have only had one nice day, and even then the sea was very high. A great many have been seasick, but fortunately Mrs. B. and myself have escaped, making six times we have crossed the Atlantic without falling prey to this terrible malady. Our entire voyage has been a boisterous one, more so than any we have hitherto experienced. The seas have washed over the decks time and again.

All day Sunday the wind was very strong, verging into a small hurricane sometimes, the waves breaking over the bow every few minutes. The promenade decks were closed in with canvass, and even then only the men would dare walk out.

There is nearly always some celebrity on board of an Atlantic liner, and we have one in the person of Mrs. Florence Maybrick, recently released from an English prison after serving fifteen years. She is carried on the passenger list as Mrs. Rose Ingraham, and no one but Mr. and Mrs. Samuel V. Hayden and wife and Mrs. B. and myself knew of her presence on board. Mr. H. is her counsel, and he very kindly introduced us to her. Mr. H. is a Washingtonian whom I met in Paris a few weeks ago.

After being out from Dover about two days a Marconigram was received, asking if she was on board, and this set the passengers to investigating and a rumor is abroad that she is one of the passengers. She occupies the stateroom opposite ours and takes her meals there or on deck. Her health is somewhat shattered by her long confinement, but she is a very refined, well educated woman, and I trust the day is not far distant when her innocence will be fully established, for I am one who believe she never committed the crime for which she has so terribly suffered.

There are ten Washingtonians on board and we have had the pleasure of meeting them all.

On Friday evening I took part in a moot court, filling the position of prosecuting attorney, S. V. Hayden, judge; Drs. W. H. Wilmer and C. L. Hardin, witnesses; Jack Branagan, policeman, all of Washington. The other members of the court came from different parts of the United States and one from Sweden. After an amusing two hour's trial, the jury, through its foreman, Mr. Worman, United States consul general at Munich, rendered a verdict of guilty.

We have received several Marconigrams from passing ships and was in communication with land for over two days before we landed.

Our trip has been not only a very pleasant one, but one that has proven the most instructive and interesting we have ever taken.

Yours respectfully,
F. E. BUCKLAND.

Major B. W. Gillis, late of the Times proof room, is now superintendent of the printing department of the Army and Navy Journal, at 102 Park Place. We congratulate the Major on his new position and trust the change may be to him most agreeable as well as satisfactory to the management of the Journal. Mr. Gillis can be depended on to do the right thing to all concerned in his administration of his department.—New York Unionist.

E. F. Morrison, a former printer employe of the G. P. O., was in the city last week. Mr. Morrison left here twelve years ago and after working in Chicago a few years went West, subsequently enlisting as a private in the Spanish-American war. After serving five years in the army, during which time he fought through the Cuban campaign and in the Philippines, he obtained employment in the Bureau of Printing, Manila, prior to its being assumed by the Government. His health failing he returned to "the States," and is now a member of New York Typographical Union, No. 6.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1904.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

My friend Otto F. Thum, formerly editor of the Colorado Chronicle, one of the best labor papers ever published in the Western country, now connected with the organ of the Western Federation of Miners, printed in Denver, sometimes ventures outside of the labor field in his writings, indulging in bits of philosophy. Here is a specimen of his work:

"One of the members of the Denver baseball team attended church last Sunday morning in company with a friend, and this is the way he afterwards described the services to one of his fellow-players:

'I tell you it was great. The game was between the preacher and the devil. The preacher was evidently the best man the church had to put in the box, and he sure is a fine twirler. His up-shoots and his in and out curves are equaled only by his marvelous drops. In the very first inning he retired old Beelzebub in one, two, three, order. In the second it was the same way, and in the third Old Nick was still fanning the air, while the preacher kept control in regular radiator style. His Satanic Majesty could not find him in the fourth, while in the fifth the preacher pitched only five balls and the hosts of sin was retired. In the sixth the preacher came up smiling but looked fagged. He soon showed his usual speed and control, however, and for the next two innings had the devil guessing. Old Nick had not been allowed to score, and it looked like a complete shut out for him of the cloven hoof and forked tail. But in the last half of the ninth the preacher attempted some funny business, and in this grand stand play he went clean up in the air. He was wild, and his delivery lacked steam. The devil hit a slow grounder, and the preacher fumbled. Next in his hurry and excitement he threw high to first, after which Old Nick got a clean three-bagger while the preacher was momentarily off his guard, and at a time when there were no outs. A nice little single brought in the man on third and, as it seemed to me, Pluto won the game.

'But that is a fine fellow in the box, all the same. Of course he played the game alone, getting little or no support, and the grand stand didn't root a little bit. I think if he'd cut out his grand stand and preach directly to the bleachers, he'd be a phenom.'"

Frank Lillie, a machine operator on Star, known by most of the older men in the G. P. O. by reason of his having been "raised" in the Swamp, was so unfortunate to lose by death his little 4-months-old daughter, his second child, in which he has the sincere sympathy of all his old friends. The little one died early last Sunday morning.

President Lynch has favored me with Circular No. 8, being the report of the Committee on the Eight-Hour Day to the I. T. U. convention at St. Louis, which was adopted, a reprint of which will be found elsewhere in this issue. The time is ripe in the opinion of the committee and the convention, to bring about the eight-hour day throughout our craft, and we who have enjoyed it so long, largely through the co-operation of our sister unions when we were making our fight for it in Congress, will be indeed ingrates if we refuse to contribute by our support, morally and financially, to so desirable an end, and it is hoped that when the matter comes to us by the referendum vote it will receive a large majority. The following legends are printed on the outer pages of the circular:

"Beware
Of entrance to a quarrel; but being in,
Bear 't that the opposed may beware of thee."

Do we want the eight-hour day? The way to success is pointed out by the St. Louis convention.

Read this circular carefully and join the army that is battling for the industrial twins—Short Hours and High Wages.

If you will investigate, you will find that the wage-earner working short hours receives high pay. In our own trade the book and job printers are paid as much (and in many cases more) for nine hours as they formerly received for ten hours.

The Typothetæ said: "That the United Typothetæ of America will resist any attempt on the part of the International Typographical Union to reduce the present hours of labor."

Our St. Louis convention said: "We reaffirm and again demand the eight-hour day for our book and job members."

The membership must now decide. What will you say?

F. Homer Melick, of "Spess.," has lately returned from his vacation, which he spent at his old home in Indiana and in visiting the Exposition at St. Louis. He mentions having met John W. Nusbaum, whom many will remember as a copyholder, especially on the Record, during Benedict's first administration. He is now practicing law and making money. Melick says politics is so dull that one could scarcely suspect that a Presidential campaign was going on.

* * * *

I took a look at the Lanstons that are being established in the Official Gazette room the other day—the first time I had ever seen them—and am filled with admiration of their wonderful ingeniousness. The work they do is beautiful, the face of the type being as clear cut as any foundry type and the spacing of the lines absolutely perfect. Will they do the work economically? I don't know. I am no typesetting-machine sharp.

Chris McGraw, one of the "apron men," is quite ill with typhoid fever at Sibley Hospital, where he is receiving the professional attention of Dr. DeWitt C. Chadwick. Mr. McGraw is well known throughout the office by reason of his business and at one time was employed in what was then the Fifth Division. His speedy recovery is hoped for by his many friends.

About thirty of his Masonic friends chartered Automobile 099 last Saturday night and went out to Charlie Brill's Villa Flora, on the Seventh street road, where they gave a banquet to Public Printer John S. Leech, Frank K. Raymond, presiding. It was a delightfully informal affair, and after the toastmaster had succeeded in extracting a speech from each one present the return was begun, all being back in the city a little after midnight.

When the Mergenthaler machines were first thrown upon the market the publishers of newspapers (many of them) welcomed them, not alone because they would cheapen the cost of composition, but because their introduction would free them from the control of the Typographical Union, for in case of disagreement with the union typewriters could be brought in to run them—so they thought. But the publishers of newspapers have found that the linotypes have made the union more impregnable than ever, for none but skilled operators can run the machines, and none but printers can make skilled operators. In hand-set days in a strike a newspaper office could be stocked up with some sort of workmen from the country towns; in these machine-set times the country town is unavailable to supply workmen—they do not make linotype operators in Squashtown. Which shows how easy it is for men to see that things are coming their way and suggests: For the past year or two the linotype operators have been horsing to see linotypes installed in the G. P. O.—not loudly, nor by petitions, nor in newspapers, nor on the stump—their sympathies and inclinations have been that way. That it would be for the benefit of the craft in general or in the interest of good printing or economy? Nope—that it would enlarge their own opportunities for employment. The machines are going into the G. P. O., and the Public Printer tells a reporter that he will find his operators among or make them of his present force of employes, which is but just and right. Effect: There will be a lot more operators made, many of them out of men who were driven by the machines to seek a refuge there through inability to obtain employment elsewhere and from want of opportunity to "learn the machines," and many of these, feeling cocky from having practically a new trade in their fingers, will resign and "take to the road," to compete with the operators already in the field, and instead of having widened their field of endeavor, so far as they had any influence whatever the linotope operators have contracted it to the extent that the G. P. O. may turn out operators. But machines are in the G. P. O., so let us all be happy.

Here are a few divisions of words found in a single article in a prominent machine-set newspaper: Bi-ble, unit-ed, apr-on, hors-es, en-ough. Is such work necessary in order to make the machine economical? Will we have to stand for such things in the G.P.O.?

Navy Yard Items.

The home guard, who defended the Capitol and the navy yard from the assaults of Jubal Early during our late unpleasantness, were also at the encampment, telling there comrades how they fought, bled, and died. They have all returned none the worse from their attack on Boston baked beans and brown bread.

Mr. Harry Denmead and family, who have been enjoying the salt water baths of Colonial Beach, have returned home. His comrades of the Gun Shop gave him a hearty return welcome. He looks as fresh as a spring cucumber, notwithstanding the fact that he passed the three score and ten milestone several years ago. Good old Maryland stock in Sir Harry.

Master Mechanic Joseph Laurence, of the Gun Shop, has returned from Boston. Comrade Laurence, who entered the Union Army as a private and came out a lieutenant-colonel, received much attention during the encampment. There might have been more eloquent speakers at their reunions, but there was not a braver soldier than comrade Joe on the battle field.

Commander Knapp, one of the officers stationed at the Yard, is on leave. He is visiting the different summer resorts in his endeavor to reduce his avoirdupois. Commander Knapp is one of the officers who has the best wishes of the employees of the Yard. Why? Because he meets the mechanics on the level, acts by the plumb line, and deals with them on the square. It is to be hoped that the day is not far distant when Commander Knapp will be promoted to superintendant of the Naval Gun Factory.

We are overrun at present with future admirals. The Middies from Annapolis have demanded the keys of the Yard and their demand has been acceded to by Admiral Higginson. Dressed as ordinary sailors, in their eagerness for such information as will perfect them in later years, they are crawling under guns, and over guns. Dignity has been laid aside for the time being, and a more democratic set of fellows you cannot find as they mingle with the mechanics. My, what a change will take place when they graduate and don the gold lace as an officer in the great Navy of Uncle Sam.

It seems that Captain Pendleton, superintendant of the Naval Gun Factory, is not so antagonistic to union labor as he has been accredited. A committee from Columbia Lodge, No. 174, waited on the captain this morning and requested that he so arrange the three shifts that the shops would all close down at 12 noon Saturday next, to enable all the employees to go on the Columbia Lodge excursion Saturday afternoon to Marshall Hall, in honor of the half-holiday. Captain Pendleton met the committee graciously and heartily joined in their request. No doubt this will be the largest excursion to go out of the city this summer.

Capt. Chas. W. Ricker, better known to the boys in the yard as "Texas Steer," informs me that he has brought back from the encampment a rebel flag that was captured during the war, at Laurel, Md., and that it is his intention, at a future date, to present it to the Confederate soldiers of that city. Captain Ricker was a brave Massachusetts soldier, and won his stars gallantly. He informs me that he participated in twenty-two engagements and got licked nineteen times. Among the many souvenirs brought back to his friends was a French briar pipe carved to imitate a Texas steer's head and presented to friend Tim Tickle as a reward for introducing him to the boys as the "Texas Steer."

One of those pleasant features that seldom happen between officers and mechanic was enacted a few days ago, when Captaiu T. C. Pendleton on behalf of his wife, presented tthe Naval Gun Factory band with a beautiful banner inscribed in gold letters: "Naval Gun Factory Band," presented by Mrs. Capt. T. C. Pendleton. Some weeks ago Captain Pendleton gave an outing down the river on the Government tug and invited the band to accaccompany the party. I have foretold the result, which is positive proof there was no poor playing during the trip. Brother Chas. F. Stanley the musical director received the banner on behalf of the band, and in a neat speech thanked the donor.

This brings me to another trip down the river. Last Saturday when the gong struck to announce that noon had arrived, and that the President's order was effective, a small group of men might have been seen making a bee line to the Navy Yard wharf. The fast flying yacht The Runaway, owned by Col. Joe Moore, of Alexandria, was in waiting to receive the guests who had been invited by host Moore to accompany him to Smith's Point, Va. Those invited were C. M. Smithson, master mechanic E. G. C. Shop; Assistant foreman Saml. Lescallet and John Byers; Capt. Edgar Baldwin, of snake medicine fame; Brothers T. B. Orr, I. R. Beall, and "Tim Tickle." A business meeting was held before proceeding to their destination and C. M. Smithson was elected captain, with Messrs. Lescallet and Byers as his assistants; Brothers Orr and Beall were appointed commissaries. Captain Baldwin, owing to his knowledge of medicine, was selected as the M. D. for the occasion, while your humble servant drew the prize in the shape of a double shift cabin boy and "log keeper."

After weighing anchor, the craft proceeded to Alexandria, where several cases of Heurich's "nerve invigorator" were secretly conveyed on board to keep company with a "few" cases of Schneider's malaria cure. The larder being well stocked with the necessary eatables, and all being in readiness, the jolly crew started again for their destination. The trip down was without incident, with this exception, that several of the crew were taken seriously ill before reaching "Razor Beach." Doctor Baldwin immediately prescribed the malaria cure and there was no serious results.

On arrival at Smith's Point, tents were arranged and camp meeting began in earnest. A most perplexing question presented itself—plenty of grub but no cook. Doctor Baldwin was appointed a committee of one to secure the necessary article, and was hailed a hero when he returned to camp with an old Virginia mammy, who he formally presented as Aunt Cloe. The wisdom of his choice was soon apparent. In a short time supper was ready and all voted Aunt Cloe a treasure. After supper Captain Smithson announced that, as the next day would be one of severe trial in naval tactics, it would be better, after seeing Doctor Baldwin, to retire early. It is needless to say that each member present had several chills before retiring and that a dose of malaria cure was required for each chill.

Sunday morning 6 a. m. all hands ordered in bathing except Orr and Beall, who were detailed to catch fish for breakfast.

Half past six. Repeated doses of Heurich's nerve invigorator.

Seven. Dr. B. orders more of Schneider's malaria cure.

Nine. All hands piped on deck to tackle the enemy. More of Heurich's tonic.

Ten. Song by officer of the Day Byers. Subject "I am a Happy Papa, Don't You Know."

Twelve. Blowing of the cow's horn by Aunt Cloe, announcing dinner.

Two p. m. Reading of Comptroller Tracewell's decision on the Saturday half-holiday, and explaining the (999) different interpretations thereof. By Doctor Baldwin. After the reading Aunt Cloe introduced a mustard plaster to the Doctor who was suffering with the motor ataxes.

Four p. m. All hands called to quarters to bid adieu to Smith's Point and Aunt Cloe. Captain Smithson, on behalf of the crew, presented her with a handsome purse and a case of malaria cure. Doctor Baldwin was deputised to escort the lady to shore and salute her, which he did with a resounding smack. Back to Washington to our loved ones again. On our home trip Lieutenant Lescallet, the well-known temperance advocate, delivered an eloquent address on the evils of strong drink. He was followed by Captain Smithson, with a tenor solo (composed by Tim Tickle for the occasion):

SONG "THE KNOCKER."

In all the walks of life, as we journey on our way,
We always find the knocker, having his little say;
Rubbing it into the parson, the doctor and the law,
Senators and Congressmen, are victims of his "jaw."

It seems this knocking fever is spreading o'er the earth,
Searching out for victims, both high and low of birth,
Our wives and sweethearts feel it, as it hovers round our door,
But the king of all the knockers, is our host "Joe Moore."

Joe is knocking his engineer, Joe is knocking his crew,
Joe is knocking Lescallet and Johnny Byers too.
Joe is knocking Schneider's cure for mosquito bites so fine,
Joe is knocking Heurich's balm, and "Auld Lang Syne."

Joe is knocking Smithson, because he won't get thin,
Joe is knocking Beall and Orr—and poor little "Tim."
To see him knocking every one, it makes us feel so sad,
The secret of it all—Joe is mad.

Why this anger, Captain Joe, don't hesitate I pray
To drop your stubborn feelings, when the rest of us are gay.
I have fathomed your secret—shame on you, Captain Joe,
You are jealous of Doctor Baldwin, 'cause "he kissed Aunt Cloe."

Just as the last line was being sung our craft struck the Navy Yard wharf and the cruise was ended. Before disembarking, Captain Smithson ordered the log read, and solemnly declared that it had been accurately kept.

Treasury Branch.

Miss Mary E. Mangan is on a month's leave.

John Mulroy was on the sick list the early part of the week.

Charles A. Williams and wife are sojourning at Atlantic City for fifteen days.

Miss Grace L. Dubant, of the folding room, is spending two weeks at Asbury Park, N. J.

Misses Mary B. O'Toole and Laura V. Boss returned from leave the early part of the week.

E. S. Van Norman is spending three weeks at his old home in New York State, near Buffalo.

W. H. Moss is enjoying fifteen days in the mountains of his native State of Vermont with friends.

D. P. Rowell, for several years an employe of the Job Room, was assigned to this division about ten days ago.

H. D. Langdon and wife left this week for their old home, Albany, N. Y., to spend fifteen days with relatives and friends.

W. A. De Groot's leave expired last week, but he is still absent on account of sickness. Mr. De Groot has been in poor health for some time.

Joseph H. Byrne, who has been absent for some time suffering with rheumatism, returned to work this week much improved in health as the result of a trip to Atlantic City.

Arthur F. Maher, who learned his trade in this division is now and for the past seven years has been a special employe of the Government, with headquarters in Philadelphia, was a welcome visitor this week.

Miss Lucy Morrison, who has been absent the most of the summer, sick with typhoid fever, is now at her home in Tennessee. She is improving rapidly and expects to return to work about the middle of the month.

Mr. and Mrs. Theophilus McClure celebrated the forty-fourth anniversary of their marriage on the 26th ultimo. They are both enjoying good health, and the prospects of celebrating the golden anniversary six years hence is exceedingly bright.

OPENING REMARKS OF THE OYSTER.

I am the wingless bird
Of the sea
Whose song is heard
In a sizzle of cookery.
And though I utter no sound,
Raw on my mission bound,
The plunk of my form shall serve,
Soft on the dinner nerve,
To release the music pent
In the hunger-keyed, soulfully sensitive gastrical instrument.

List, oh, listen to me!
I would set you from hunger free,
Not when from down below
Arises, unchecked in its flow
And uproarious, the shout
That clamors for sausage and kraut,
For cabbage or greens or kail,
Or some sort of chuck without fail,
The inner man being stirred
By visions of food deferred.
But when arises a cry
For a dish less prosaic than pie,
And you sigh
For a victim delicious and frail,
Your longing I satisfy.

For my juice is the soul of me,
Soul of the soul of the sea,
And the mortal who eats
Shall feel in his cardiac beats
The songs of the shells
That inhabit the submarine dells,
And he
All untroubled shall swim
In a restfulness born of the sea,
Brought up to the Ego of Him
By the Ego of Me.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

First Division.

L. C. Richards, of the Supplies Division, is taking fifteen days leave of absence.

Green Jordan, messenger to Mr. Spottswood, is taking another fifteen day's rest.

C. L. Williams is putting the finishing touches to his summer vacation at Piney Point.

J. W. Clark has been assigned to slug 14, this division. He comes from the Library Branch.

Chris. McGraw, the apron man, is a victim of typhoid fever. He was taken to the hospital last Friday.

O. B. Bellinger resumed charge of the correcting force on Tuesday after a pleasant vacation spent in northern New York.

Philip S. Steele returned to his labors last Saturday. Mr. Steele is loud in his praise of Bethany Beach as an ideal spot for recreation.

A. W. Bentz is again at work in the correcting alley after a month's vacation. As a friend expressed it, he looks fifty years younger.

Ed. Heidensfeld returned to work on Monday. For two weeks "Heidy" lived in Luna Park and Dreamland, Coney Island. He hasn't come out of dreamland yet.

After being out of commission for two days with a sick stomach Ansley Martin has reached the conclusion that deviled crabs and ice cream make a mighty poor lunch.

Geo. P. Dowell and J. L. Getman have returned from their vacations. Mr. Dowell visited in Atlantic City, while Mr. Getman visited his old home in Herkimer, N. Y.

George H. Ball, of the correcting force, left last Friday for Portland, Me. Together with his wife and family he sailed direct from New York to Portland on the steamer Horatio Hall.

Thos. E. Doty has resigned, and will be employed in the literary bureau of the "stalwart" wing of the Republican party of Wisconsin until election. The stalwart wing is the one headed by Senator Spooner.

George Spencer, of the Chicago News ad. room, was a caller at the G. P. O. on Monday. Mr. Spencer was connected with this office over twenty years ago, and found many friends among the old employes.

I wish to congratulate H. Newsom on his expressed opinion regarding "The Pleasure Found in a Baby," as published in last week's TRADES UNIONIST. For a newly married man he is possessed of the right spirit.

E. S. Wild returned from his visit to Rehoboth Beach last week. "Pucky" says he doesn't know whether mosquitoes carry disease germs or not, but those he saw were big enough to carry anything from a piano to a camp stool.

There is a man in this division who is "overworked." Employees having business around the slug racks will probably regognize in this verse who it is:

Alone he sits with vacant stare,
Alone in his lonesome hole;
And this is the burden of his cry:
"My soul! My soul! My soul!"

T. C. Parsons, of the Times, ex-delegate to St. Louis, has been appointed by President John Berg to represent Columbia Union in the Central Labor Union. Mr. Parsons was immediately appointed by President John B. Dickman a member of the committee on organization. Thus his ability was quickly recognized by two presidents.

I would like to call attention to the opening of the music school of Bessie N. Wild, which took place to day (Thursday) at her studio, 73 Rhode Island avenue. Mrs. Wild has assisted in so many ways, and is such an efficient teacher that printing office people in particular will be pleased to know that they may again avail themselves of her service.

When B. C. Wright and Wm. Holeman returned from their vacations last week they found to their surprise their frames had been confiscated. Each were assigned other frames. Mr. Wright and Mr. Holeman are probably the two oldest men in this division, and their rugged appearance is a good indication that their leave has been of great benefit to them.

For the benefit of the members of the Ladies Auxiliary I will give a few interesting notes about the recent convention, as learned from the Western Laborer, published by the husband of the Auxiliary's president, Mrs. F. A. Kennedy: The paper printed the entire speech of the lady who placed Mrs. Kennedy in nomination, but says the following of her opponent:

Katherine Spencer, delegate from Washington, placed Miss Laura B. Gordon of Washington in nomination for president.

The result of that election was: Miss Gordon, 4; Mrs. Frank A. Kennedy, 21.

The convention decided to provide a salary of $150 per year for the secretary-treasurer.

The convention repealed the resolution adopted a year ago providing for a voluntary assessment to pay international officers expenses to the convention, and substituted therefor a law providing for first-class transportation each way to the convention and $10 per day for expenses.

The per capita tax was placed at 5 cents per month per member.

A resolution or law limiting the membership of the Auxiliary to relatives of printers only, and barring lady compositors was lost. The total membership of the Auxiliary is now 1,200.

The extent to which the G. P. O. is being supplied with Merganthaler machines will be better understood when mention is made of those being placed in other departments of this office. Foreman L. C. Hay, of the Job Room, is having placed in position seven of the double-decked wonders, the preparation for which was carried on in much the same manner as for those in the Record. Mr. Hay's force now consists of 138 men, and the installation of the machines will make no decrease. Probably no branch in the printing business has increased so greatly in the volume of its output as has the Job Room, and much of it is exceptionally good matter for a machine to handle. Mr. Hay is a firm believer in the efficiency of the Merganthaler, having watched its development and the result of its good work for years. Four of these same machines will be placed in the Library Branch. Here again the nature of the work is such as to preclude the possibility of a failure.

Now that summer days are over, and we have the time to stop in our search for pleasure for a moment's reflection, I would like to call attention to a noble act by a G. P. O. man. This incident should be brought to the attention of the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission. If this commission does exist, and they say it does, its creation was for the purpose of rewarding just such heroic act as the following: During the latter part of July Charley W. Irey, of the proof room, was visiting at Wilkerson's Wharf, Va. While in bathing one day he saw a young couple capsize in a boat about 100 yards from shore. As neither could swim they began to cry for help. Casting aside all thoughts for his personal safety he started to the rescue. When he reached the boat the young man had gone down for the second time, but he seized him and told him to hold to the boat while he rescued the young woman, who proved to be the boy's sister. After securing her, he righted the boat, and placing the couple therein towed them into shore, where they were received by friends. Mr. Irey is of a retiring disposition and has said little of his heroic act, but his friends are not content to let the matter drop until he has received the reward his heroism merits.

Second Division.

W. T. Talbott and Jas. E. Harper are on leave.

F. E. Chapin visited Philadelphia and Baltimore while on leave.

F. T. Razey has returned from a few week's detail to the Library Branch.

C. P. Boss and H. J. Smith, Slugs 1 and 2, have returned from their leave.

E. N. Bunker is spending his leave at Martha's Vineyard, Mass., his old home.

C. A. Morgan returned to the Spess after staying with the Second a short while.

Wm. H. Cornish, chairman of the Second, became the proud father of a girl baby last Tuesday.

Wm. Edmunds, a former foreman of the Second, came over from the Spess for a few days but soon returned.

D. R. Walters, the Second's obliging messenger, will spend Labor Day down the Potomac shooting ortolan and reed birds.

Joseph Silverberg has returned to work after a two months' absence in Germany where he visited his native town, Trondenberg.

Albert S. French, McLaughlin's accommodating assistant on the proof press, has returned from a few week's outing at Willoughby Beach, near Norfolk. He says he was glad to go and hated to come back.

J. H. Babcock enjoyed his vacation at Jersey Cottage, Colonial Beach. He says the mosquitoes bothered them only one night, when they sprinkled oil of penny royal on their clothes which drove them away.

Professor George W. Harvel, editor, showman, statesman, tourist and printer, has returned from a few weeks' leave, spent on the fair circuit. He and his wife go South now in a few days for the latter's health.

We were all pained to learn of Dave Pollock's illness. Last Saturday he had a hemorrhage in front of the office and two more after being taken home. His always genial disposition has endeared him to all acquaintances.

A relic of the days of labor parades stands in this room to confuse the casual visitor. It is the Second Division's fine old banner which it had made when it was the old Third Division. It is of a blue silk back ground with golden-tassel fringe and golden letters "Third Division Chapel."

"The Pleasure Found in a Babe" which appeared under the heading "Pikes," but immediately over my signature, was thought to have been written by McPike, but it was not. It was simply left on the correspondent's slide without any name or word. It is too good to go without a sponsor. The contributor will please own up and take the credit which is due.

E. H. Tabler, Slug 64, with his son, J. H., own a patent on an army-roll-strap which the Government pays them an 8 cents royalty upon. This royalty has already amounted to $7,000. Before the Government adopted the strap they sold about 40,000 of them in 1898. The device is simply the connecting strap which holds the two ends of the strap together—as simple as dirt. Yet, 'tis the simple things that prove wonderful.

John A. Massey, jr., of Marietta, Ga., received a large photograph representing the public square of that place on a busy cotton-market day. Hundreds of vehicles of all kinds and conditions drawn by teams, mules, asses, oxen, etc., with lazy negroes lounging on the bales of cotton in the wagons, and wide-awake looking buyers sampling the staple makes a scene that transports one to the spot. Mr. Massey says 18,000 bales are marketed there in a season. A bale averages 500 pounds. Last year 15 cents was paid for it, making $75 for a bale. Sometimes the price goes as low as 4 cents. Some small farmers only raise half a bale.

"PIKES" (BY MCPIKE.)

"Billy, the paperhanger," was the title conferred upon our genial friend Harris by one of our local wits while he was peacefully pursuing the task of relabeling not a few of the cases in this division last week. "Billy" didn't seem to mind it, however, as he apparently enjoyed as he went along the opportunity afforded him to indulge in a little paster-al life without having to go to the country to do it.

Your observant correspondent no doubt Newsom sufficient reason for having my squibs printed under the head of "Pikes;" but, whether he did or not, the fact recalls a Roland for an Oliver handed out by our worthy friend Glenn, on a certain exceedingly frosty morning last winter. On being asked whether he didn't find it mighty cold coming through the glen that morning, W. G. promptly replied that he certainly did, but he didn't think it near so cold as coming down the pike.

A

Why the first letter "A" and the hour of noon
Are somewhat akin, is no hardship to say,
But to show it's the rub, and that we'll do soon
By proving they're both in the middle of day.

B

Why is the letter "B" like water in motion?
A sane question enough, whoever may doubt it,
Because, after all, we have more than a notion
That nowhere could exisit babbling brooks without it.

C

That the letter "C" is like a mistress in school
May be known to a few, but not to the masses,
But known or unknown to either wise man or fool,
Both the "C" and the mistress make classes of lasses.

D

Why is the letter "D" like a poor squalling child?
That's a conundrum you'll find quite easy to guess,
Provided your wits to a keen edge have have been filed,
And you're able to see that they're both in distress.

Public band concerts will be given as follows during the week ending Thursday, September 8:

Thursday, Sept. 1—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Judiciary Park.

Friday, Sept. 2—Engineer Band, Washington Barracks and Iowa Circle.

Saturday, Sept. 3—Marine Band, White House Grounds.

Monday, Sept. 5—Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Smithsonian Grounds.

Tuesday, Sept. 6—Engineer Band, Washington Barracks and Lincoln Park.

Wednesday, Sept. 7—Marine Band, White House Grounds.

Thursday, Sept. 8—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Judiciary Park.

Otis J. Singleton has been spending fifteen days' leave in Edgerton, Mo.

R. L. Townsend got back among us last Saturday after enjoying thirty days leave.

The rumor committee is still busy with that story about the immediate organization of the Night Force.

Concerts by Marine Band begin at 5.10 p. m.; concerts by Engineer and Cavalry Bands begin at 7.30 p. m.

W. S. Kinsolving, of Little Rock, Ark., father of W. A. Kinsolving, of this division, is seeing the sights of Washington under the guidance of his his son.

Messrs. Wm. Goldstein, chairman of the chapel, Will E. Soult, bankman, and Daniel B. Hallock, of the correcting alley, arrived here Monday morning from their various leaves. The battle can now proceed.

At 2.30 p. m. to-day, Charles W. Herzinger took his departure from Washington via the C. & O. Railroad, en route for Grangeville, Idaho, in which place he will put out his shingle and begin practicing law. Our cordial and hearty good wishes go with him.

The following are new subscribers this week for the TRADES UNIONIST: William W. Irgram, E. O. Clement, W. E. Drenner, R. W. Gray, C. C. Yeakle, John Kelso, George Terwilliger, and J. H. Malees. Hadn't some one better move to make it unanimous?

The Post told us all about the machines Tuesday morning. It seems there are to be forty-six Mergenthalers and twenty-eight Lanstons. The best information I can get is to the effect that the Linotypes are to be installed in the Sixth Division and the Job Room, while the Monotypes will be placed in the Fifth and Specification (or Official Gazette) Divisions.

Last Friday George Terwilliger was "shy" on 10-point lower case n's. He went out to the wash room thinking about it and wondering where in the world he would get the missing type. Still thinking hard, he started for his frame, and with his thoughts skyward he silently but firmly plunged his hand into the Ronaldson font, got some n's, went back to his case and set 'em up. When he saw his proof Tuesday he came down from the clouds, for there, right before his eyes, were just 18 marks like this: "wf," and he found just 18 Ronaldson n's scattered through his take. Then he explained the matter to the interested observers.

A week ago, when things were being moved about the room to make a place for the extra frames, Kinsolving, who distributes italic, etc. (particularly the latter), missed a case which he had fitted with movable inner boxes to facilitate the taking out of sorts. He hunted high and low for a considerable period of time, and finally gave it up, saying, "I suppose some smart Aleck has carried that case off." Then Davis took a hand, and the case was soon after discovered right where it had probably been left by the disconsolate Kinsolving, shoved so far back in the rack that it could not be seen without unusual effort on the part of the seeker. Since then, "Kinsolving's smart Aleck" has been a by-word among the boys in his vicinity.

On the 26th instant W. J. Phillips started for San Antonio, Texas, having resigned from the Government service. Mr. Phillips was in the old Second Division under the lamented Hickman; then in the new Third; last winter he became a member of the Night Force, and was afterwards assigned to the Fifth Division, with which he was connected until his resignation. He has gone to the high and dry climate of San Antonio for the benefit of his health, as he has been suffering with catarrh since living here and has found in the damp atmosphere of Washington the same danger from which so many others have fled. Mr. Phillips is well liked by all who ever met him, and he has our cordial wishes for his speedy restoration to vigorous health.

Death of C. W. Roberts.

C. W. Roberts, an elder brother of F. C. and J. G. Roberts, of the Government Printing office, died at Savannah, Ga., on the 29th inst. Mr. Roberts left here some months ago, on advice of his physician, for the South, but was compelled to enter a hospital on his arrival at Savannah, where he died. Death was caused by cirrhosis of the liver.

The deceased was well known in Savannah, where he lived for years, and was a great favorite with "tourists," on account of his kindness to them, it being his habit never to work more than four nights a week while there was a "sub" around without a "night in."

F. C. Roberts left for Savannah on receipt of the telegram announcing his brother's death, to take charge of the funeral.

The deceased was a bachelor. He carried his card in Columbia Typographical Union, his last work being done at Milan's office.

The Eight-Hour Day.

At the recent convention of the International Typographical Union, held in St. Louis, Mo., the Committee on the Eight-Hour Day submitted the following report, which was adopted:

Your Committee on the Eight-Hour Day has carefully considered that portion of the report of President Lynch captioned "The Eight-Hour Day," and which we are informed is intended as the report of the International Eight-Hour Committee, and has also had in review the circulars thus far issued by the International Eight-Hour Committee, seven in number. We have also had before us President Lynch, who has explained fully and in detail the various steps taken by the committee, the work performed and the general object in view.

After a careful review of the eight-hour movement and the documents indicated, we desire to report to the convention as follows:

First—We indorse without reservation the work and methods of the International Eight-Hour Committee. We believe in this connection that the committee has thoroughly covered the ground and has put into effect every method that thus far has given promise of advancement to the eight-hour cause.

Second—We believe with President Lynch that "the eight hour day subject will not grow old until the inauguration of the eight-hour day itself is an event of the past rather than something that must yet be brought about."

Third—We regret that the eight hour day in book and job rooms is not a question at the present time for adjudication between the International Typographical Union and the United Typothetae of America, but in view of the action taken by the United Typothetae of America in convention assembled at St. Louis, in which it is asserted "That the United Typothetae of America declares it is opposed to any reduction of the fifty-four hour week" and "that the United Typothetae of America will resist any attempt on the part of the International Typographical Union to reduce the present hours of labor," no other conclusion is possible. That an agreement on peaceable lines is not now possible is solely the fault of the associated employers, and this contention is borne out by the action of their last convention. Further, we dispute the statement of the Typothetae that a reduction in the hours of labor would be disastrous to the employe. We maintain that the eight-hour day is the logical work-day, that it is sufficient for the needs of the trade, and we give emphatic indorsement to the doctrine that the introduction of labor-saving machinery is not for the employer alone, but should also result in better working conditions for the employe in the way of reduction in the hours of toil and increased remuneration.

Fourth—The claim advanced by the Typothetae that it has an agreement with the International Typographical Union for a fifty-four hour week which precludes any attempt on the part of our organization for a shorter work-day or week, is not borne out by the terms of the Syracuse agreement, and we believe it is made at this time simply in furtherance of the intention to construct as many obstacles to the eight-hour day as is possible.

Fifth—We congratulate the International Eight-Hour Committee on the large number of unions that have thus far succeeded in inaugurating the eight-hour day, or that have made arrangements under which the eight-hour day will shortly come into effect. In view of the fact that it took more than twenty years to bring about the nine-hour day, we have especial cause for jubilation over the progress that has thus far been made toward the logical and inevitable eight-hour work-day.

Sixth—We indorse the statement made by President Lynch, and we desire to impress it on the delegates to this convention, and through them on the membership at large, that "when the employing book and job printers become convinced that we are determined in our efforts to secure the shorter work-day, then it will be possible to confer with the United Typothetae of America with prospect for success."

After weighing carefully the various plans and methods that have been suggested to your committee, the committee recommends to the convention the adoption of the following preamble and resolutions, which, when referred to the refrendum and adopted by it, will place the International Typographical Union squarely on record on the eight-hour day proposition, and indicate beyond question the date on which the eight-hour day shall become effec ive in all union establishments:

WHEREAS, In the movement for an eight-hour day for the book and job members of the Typographical Union, authorized by our Cincinnati convention, the International Eight-Hour Committee has sought an agreement with the United Typothetae of America, under which the eight-hour day could be made effective on a mutually satisfactory plan, and with the minimum of embarrassment to the interests of our employers; and

WHEREAS, The overtures for peace thus made were refused and declined, and replied to with a threat combined with a practical declaration of war should any effort be made to achieve the shorter work-day, as witness the language of the resolutions adopted by the late Typothetae convention; and

WHEREAS, We reaffirm and again demand the eight-hour day for our book and job members.

WHEREAS, Your committee having carefully considered propositions Nos. 35, 61, 62, 63, 98, 103, and 129, submit in lieu thereof the following:

Resolved, That we again declare our entire willingness to negotiate with the United Typothetae for an agreement under which the eight-hour day will become operative, and so instruct our eight-hour committee;

Resolved, That an assessment of one-half of one (1) per cent on all moneys earned be levied upon the membership of the International Typographical Union for the purpose of a defense fund. Such fund to be held and expended by the subordinate unions except in those cases where no trouble is experienced in putting in operation the eight-hour day, and in such unions one-half of the assessments to be subject to call of the international officers for use in furtherance of the eight-hour day as deemed in their judgment necessary;

Resolved, That on January 1, 1906, the eight-hour day shall become effective in all union establishments under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union, where existing contracts do not prevent, and in each instance where the eight-hour day is refused work shall cease.

HALLS for rent at Building Trades Halls, 610 G street northwest and 624 Sixth street northwest. For terms apply at Room 2, 624 Sixth street northwest. Telephone East 331 Y.

THE TRADES UNIONIST.

OFFICIAL ORGAN CENTRAL LABOR UNION, WASHINGTON BRANCH, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Vol. IX. No. 13. WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1904. Price, 3 Cents.

OUR LABOR DAY AT BENNING

Many Thousands Enjoy the Grand Carnival and Labor Day Outing.

SPORTS OF A VERY HIGH CLASS

Automobile Races Not up to Expectations—Committee Not to Blame—Exciting Events Among the Field Sports—Ball Game Very Close and Exciting—The Barbecue a Huge Success.

The annual outing of the Central Labor Union, held this year at Benning race track, was a success financially as well as socially. Washington trades unionists occupy a peculiar position in celebrating Labor Day. While other cities witness great parades the Washington union men are content to celebrate the day as an outing and in healthful enjoyment.

The committee in charge of the event this year deserve great credit for the hard and efficient work performed in perfecting arrangements for an undertaking on such a grand scale as was witnessed at Benning on Monday last.

That their efforts were appreciated is shown by the large attendance at the outing, fully 8,000 people passing through the gates.

The sports were conducted in a business-like manner under the guidance of the various committees. This applies solely to the field sports under the capable management of members of the Business Men's Association, F. K. Raymond, chairman.

As for the automobile races, it can not be said that the Central Labor Union committee received the consideration it deserved from the houses interested in showing how well the machines they claim superiority for could demonstrate their speed. From the attempt to start the automobile races all was confusion until the completion of the card, due to refusal of certain owners and drivers to start under conditions arranged by their own representatives under the rules of the Automobile Association.

The Times, of this city, in reporting on this feature of the day, says:

Some method should be evolved of bringing to terms those who enter automobiles for competition and back out at the last moment. The failure to start after entering impressed the casual observer as being, in the great majority of cases, due to an unsportsmanlike fear that the machines they expected to start might be beaten.

With a total disregard of the public the entrants broke up the races by declaring themselves out at the last minute, after the promoters of the meet had innocently induced hundreds to attend on the score that the auto races would be the principal attraction of the day.

So badly confused did the program become by these reprehensible tactics that in several instances not even the judges were able to tell what was going on.

Auto racing is supposed to be a "gentleman's game" because it is expensive and out of the reach of all but a comparatively few, but from the exhibition at Benning there are any number of sports which do not pass under such a high sounding name in which the ethics of sportsmanship and a proper appreciation of the value of an obligation are more conspicuous than in auto racing.

A few more such fiascos will bring the game down to the level of prize fighting, wrestling, and other professional sports in which forfeits are required in order to insure the honesty and the presence of the competitor. In horse racing, either running or trotting, when owners deliberately beat the public out of its advertised afternoon's amusement by such actions as were displayed at Benning there is a method of punishing, and it is to be hoped the Automobile Association of America will take some steps in the matter.

This feature of the sport did not come up to expectations, because of lack of entries and the difference in the speed qualities of those that contested. There were only four races run of the scheduled eight, but two more were added. Of the five machines carded to start in the second event, the first race being cancelled, only the Ford and Hayner-Apperson machines made the race. The Ford racer assumed the lead from the start, and, covering the first mile in 1:26, won by a mile in a five-mile race. I. A. Rhine forfeited the second race to F. S. Cahill, there being only two entries.

The third race, for gasoline machines, three miles, called for two heats, but scratches brought the event down to three starters. The Ford car defeated F. B. Libbey in the Olds car by a furlong. There was some misunderstanding as to the distance in this race, and while the timers stopped their watches at the end of the third mile, the drivers sent their machines arouud two miles more.

There were two entries in the sixth race for electric machines of any motive power, but the racers failed to appear before the starter.

The race for the Washington Post cup brought out the largest field, in which a Ford, a Cadillac, and three Olds machines were the contestants. The Ford people won by a quarter of a mile from the Cadillac.

The free-for-all for machines of any motive power had five starters, but two dropped out after the first mile. The Franklin autos ran first and second all the way, and at the conclusion of the tenth mile Driver Boyd was home before the other Franklin vehicle turned into the home stretch.

A special race between a Franklin machine and a motor cycle was arranged, and it proved to be interesting for a mile, when the Franklin left nothing but a big cloud of dust behind for the cyclist to breeze through. After this race the machine which won the first race gave an exhibition run. It was stripped down to only necessary works, and covered the first mile in a minute and a half, and after reaching the end of the back stretch the car stopped.

SUMMARIES OF AUTO RACES.

First race; for gasoline machines weighing from 881 to 1,432 pounds; five miles—A. L. Kull, Ford Company, first; H. A. Rhine, Hayner-Apperson Company, second. Time, 8:08 3-5. Two starters.

Second race; Trades Unionist cup, for gasoline machines weighing from 1,452 to 2,204 pounds; three miles—A. L. Kull, Ford Company, first; E. P. Nussbum, Olds Motor Works, second; F. P. Libbey, Olds Motor Works, third. Time, 3:45 4-6. Three starters.

Third race; for gasoline machines listing at $1,000 and less; stock cars, with road equipment; five miles—A. L. Kull, Ford Company, first; Charles E. Tyser, Cadillac Company, second. Time, 9:12. F. P. Libbey, E. P. Nussbaum, and O. J. De Moll, driving Olds machines, also started.

Fourth race; free for all; any motive power; stock cars with road equipment; ten miles—J. W. Boyd, H. H. Franklin Manufacturing Company, first; J. H. Edwards, H. H. Franklin Manufacturing Company, second. Time, 17:33. H. A. Rhine, Hayner-Apperson Company; E. P. Nussbaum, and F. P. Libbey, Olds Motor Company, also started.

Special race; motorcycle against Franklin gasoline machine; three miles—Franklin machine won. Time, 5:09.

Exhibition race; three miles, by Ford gasoline car.

In the infield a number of amusement features were grouped on what was termed the Pike, and adjoining the Pike the Barbecue Committee, under Martin Hellmuth, made all ready for the inner man.

The field sports were started promptly at noon, and were run on the track, freek races being hugely enjoyed. The three-legged race proved very exciting, resulting in dead heats twice, making it necessary to run the third time.

During the continuance of the field sports an exciting game of baseball was played between the Navy Yard team and the Unions, the latter being largely recruited from the Government Printing Office. The game ran on to the tenth inning, the Navy Yard men making seven runs in the ninth inning and tieing the score. By a supreme effort the Unions landed one run in the tenth inning and won the game, the score being 12 to 11.

ALBERT F. DAWSON, Candidate for Congress, Second District of Iowa.

From a boyhood spent on a farm, then working as a common laborer in a brickyard, and later clerking in a store to secure money to complete his education, to a nomination for Congress at the age of 32, marks the career of Albert F. Dawson, who has been nominated for Representative in Congress from the Second District of Iowa. Orphaned while a baby, he was reared by his grandparents, and practically all through life he has made his own way in the world.

He was born January 26, 1872, in the village of Spragueville, Iowa, and received a common school education in the school at Preston in that State. His grandparents were poor, and he helped support the family and buy his books by sawing wood, marketing vegetables, and acting as janitor of the schoolhouse. He attended the State University of Wisconsin one year, paying his own way with money earned by clerking in a general store at Preston.

At the age of 19 he entered the newspaper business as editor of the Preston Advance, and later became city editor of the Daily Herald, at Clinton, Iowa. From this position he came to Washington in 1895 as secretary to Congressman Curtis, and upon the latter's retirement Mr. Dawson became secretary to Senator W. B. Allison in 1899 and has served in that capacity ever since.

Labor has always found in Mr. Dawson a true friend, and in his position at the Capitol this friendship has been demonstrated on numerous occasions. The various legislative committees, representing trade organizations at Washington, attest to many acts of courtesy extended to them by Mr. Dawson in advancing their interests and extending aid and assistance to them at all times.

Personal Mention.

Alex. Watson, late of the Philadelphia Inquirer staff, is in this city, and will locate here permanently.

Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, spent Labor Day, at Charleston, W. Va., where he made an address on that day.

A. F. of L. Executive Council.

The Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor will meet next Monday in this city. The session of the Council will be held at headquarters and the Ebbitt House has been selected as the hotel for the visiting members of the Council.

President Gompers, at present in the West, where he recently delivered the Labor Day address at Ottawa, Ill., will arrive on Sunday to attend the session.

DEATH OF JOHN W. THOMAS.

For a Third of a Century a Well-Known Washington Printer.

It is with sorrow and yet with relief that I record the death of John W. Thomas, which took place in this city last Sunday evening. He had been for several years, as all know, so complete and helpless an invalid that he was a great burden to himself, and though the object of the most loving care and the tenderest solicitude was manifested for his comfort and welfare, his passing is best for all.

Mr. Thomas came to this city and obtained employment in the Government Printing Office near a third of a century ago. When the Congressional Record was established, in 1873, he became the reviser, handling the galley as well as the page revises, a position which he continued to fill until 1887, after which he was still employed in the Proof Room except during the time when out of the office because of political changes. He was ever a careful and efficient workman and had the entire confidence of his superiors at all times. He was compelled to retire from work four or five years ago because of the inroads of the disease which finally resulted in his death. From childhood he had been disabled by the loss of a leg, but was so expert in the use of an artificial one that he went around almost as well as anyone.

To the best of my knowledge, he never held office in the Union, but was a candidate for delegate in 1875, at which time he was a close competitor of the late William H. Hickman, whose plurality over the vote for Mr. Thomas was but three. But he was a staunch union man, active and pronounced in his views, ever to be relied on for any service needed at his hands, and strong in supporting the officers and the policy of the Union. In his dealings with his fellow-workmen he was always helpful and accommodating, and no one who applied to him for assistance went from him empty handed. No subscription for the relief of distress ever went by him without his name for a generons sum. He once expressed himself to his copyholder on such an occasion, as nearly as I can recollect it: "I would rather be thus able to help the distressed out of my earnings than to have the wealth of Goiconda without the disposition to so use it." Many years ago a fellow-workman, to whom he had given a fifty-dollar bill to get changed for him down in the city, absconded with the money. When, months after, they again met, the defaulter showed a disposition to avoid him. "Oh, you poor devil," said John Thomas, "you need not run from me; that fifty dollars hurt you a good deal more than it did me." He bore malice poorly; he was never able to render evil unto those who had wronged him.

Mr. Thomas leaves to mourn him, of his immediate family, a widow and two sons, the elder of whom, some 23 or 24 years old, Edward H., has been for three or four years in the far West and on the Pacific coast, where he had gone on account of throat troubles, maintaining himself by his musical talent, while the younger son J. Harper, is employed in the Government Printing Office. A brother, Edward H. Thomas, for many years a proofreader in the same office, is well known to all, between whom and the deceased a more than usually strong brotherly affection existed.

The funeral services were held at the chapel of J. William Lee's undertaking establishment on Wednesday afternoon, and were attended by only immediate friends, the interment being in Rock Creek Cemetery. Philip S. Steele, of the First Division of the Government Printing Office, conducted the services and made a beautiful little talk on the life of the deceased, being probably more intimate with him than anyone else from having worked on the same desk with him for four or five years. "Rock of Ages" and "Nearer, My God, to Thee" were well rendered as duets by two ladies. The pallbearers were all men who had been his lifelong friends, being Charles Spencer, William L. Schmallhoff, Charles F. Garrett, H. S. Weyand, and Charles A. Durno. There were a number of beautiful flower pieces.

A. F. BLOOMER.

Genuine Hobo.

In a quiet and ruminating hour I like to get next to a genuine hobo. They are not so thick as they used to be, and the Peoria workhouse stands as an awful menace and discouraging factor as opposed to the interests of the non-commercial traveler.

I found one of the roving gentlemen the other day and my heart warmed to him. He was a typical tramp and he told me that he had been on the road for about forty years. If the truth must be told he looked the part. There was grime enough on him to account for forty years. Thirty-five or thirty-seven of them would not have supplied those layers and I gave him the benefit of the full count. My prize was a Boston gentleman and in his early days he had been a printer. Twenty-five years ago the roads were full of tramp printers, but the linotype machine has knocked them all out. They used to swarm into Peoria in the fall and if there were too many of them here at any one time the surplus would drift up to Chicago or down to St. Louis. And what characters they were! How they could talk and what moving adventures they had experienced by flood and field between coast and coast. My beauty of the other day was a remnant of this class. He might have been seventy years of age. He told me that he had set old Uncle Horace Greeley's manuscript and also Wilbur F. Storey's in the golden days of the Chicago Times. In fact he knew Storey when he was running a newspaper in Detroit and before he moved to Chicago. He knew the elder Bennett, and Raymond and Thurlow Weed and Sam Bowles of Springfield, Mass., who threw out nearly all the capital letters in his paper and reserved the remaining few only for Sam Bowles and God Almighty. He knew George D. Prentice, of the Louisville Courier-Journal before Henry Watterson came up to fill the space with picturesque diction. He was a leaf out of the past and he has moved on. He may never come this way again. He was headed South, as he expressed a desire to winter in the vicinity of the gulf. His days are dwindling to the shortest span and when he goes he will be about the last of his species. With him the tramp printer will become extinct, but I was glad to have met him before he passed on. Take the tramp printer for all in all we shall never look upon his like again.

Heroes.

Another group of unpublished heroisms comprises those sacrifices made in order to give advantages to children or to brothers and sisters. I know more than one successful business man whose mental poverty and social disabilities are due to the fact that he began in his early days to make his own living, and before he was twenty to take care of his younger brothers and sisters. He went into the factory or warehouse that they might go to college. He scrimped that they might have money for tuition and books. He saw them growing in brain power, while his crowded days left him no opportunity to look within the covers of a book. He is now past middle life. Yet he would not do differently were he to live his life over again. He knows the greatest of all joys, that of pouring himself into the life of another. No one speaks of him as a hero, but he has been just that all these years.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

I received a letter from Carlos B. Tomlin a few days ago in which he says that so far he is in no better condition than when he left here, due in part to a severe case of pleurisy contracted on his way out, by which he was kept in bed for three days at St. Louis and two days at Kansas City, and which troubled him at the time he wrote the letter. Although in possession of a good appetite he was still losing flesh, now weighing but 133 pounds. He has been unable to sleep more than four or five hours a night, which is not enough to build up a sick man. It had rained nearly all the time since he arrived, keeping him indoors, and the weather was so chilly at night, and often in the daytime, as to require a heavy overcoat in order to keep warm. He is located in the hospital, where everything is very neat and clean, and the meals are what one would find in a first-class boarding house, with perhaps a little more latitude in ordering meats. There are forty of them in the hospital, mostly young men, and the most cheerful set of invalids in the world, even the sickest being willing to crack a joke. He was surprised to hear that Colquitt is back in Washington, as he had heard that he wanted to go back to the Home. He spoke of the death of Harris, who went to the Home from this city, of which announcement was made at the last meeting of the Union. He was a victim of Bright's disease as well as tuberculosis and his limbs were swollen three times their natural size. His mind became affected before his death and he was a pitiful sight. Carlos sends his best to all inquiring friends.

In a day or two after this is printed I will return to work after my leave, which, according to advertisement, I spent in the valley of the Tiber, and I enjoyed every minute of it. Talk about your trips to Atlantic City, Cape May, Falls Church, Sycamore Island, and so on! They are not to be compared for a moment with just standing around and looking and feeling important. It is just glorious to lie in bed until you hear the office whistle blow, then arise and dress leisurely, go out and get your breakfast, light a Henry Clay, and stroll around the streets watching the strained, pinched, and haggard faces of people in search of a livelihood. If you go to Atlantic City or any other pleasure resort, you are only one of thousands of merrymakers and of no more importance than a two-line item in a yellow newspaper. Here you are it—the whole cheese. Oh, no; Washington is the place to spend your leave if you want to get the good of it and go back to work feeling that you have been on vacation.

I met Charlie Sudwarth one day not long ago and he took me in to see his printing office, on Twelfth street, between E and F. He has a well-equipped establishment, capable of doing all sorts of work, and he seemed busy, among his jobs being the Bulletin, which he prints by contract. For some time up to seven years or so ago "Sud" was bankman in the old Third Division, after which he was connected for several years with what is now the Henry E. Wilkens Printing Company, until he set up for himself a year or two ago. He has all the appearance of prosperity and deserves it, for he is a hustler and knows how to print.

I ran across J. G. McGrath one evening recently, for the first time in a number of years. He is now some sort of a clerk who has charge of the printing of certain bureaus of the Treasury Department—I don't pretend to know just what his job is, but it is a thundering sight better than putting nicks next to the thumb in the G. P. O. or anywhere else. We fell to running over the fellows who have fallen into snaps in the Departments—John S. Mills, George C. Havenner, J. Dexter Kehoe, Arthur H. Smith, Walter W. Ludlow, Douglas G. Miller, Joseph A. Arnold, Ephraim Cornman, Ben D. Stallings, Dennis L. Moynihan, Harry H. Pierce, and others, all comparatively of recent date, besides dozens of others of former years, every one of whom is a conspicuous success—and we concluded that in any of the ordinary clerical positions, in competition with the ordinary run of men, the printer is distinctly a good thing.

I received another letter from H. Herbert Steele a day or two ago, dated September 1, in which he says the hucksters are crying strawberries as though it were April; that San Francisco is a summerless city; that Frank Wandress wears an overcoat the year round, and that George A. Tracy, grown stouter and with thick clothes, says that the climate is just right. Printing is dull there, owing to the great influx of men the past two years, influenced by rosy ads. inserted by the Typothetæ in the Eastern press. Eight hours is the prevailing workday of organized mechanics, and the printers' job scale of $19 50 is the lowest for skilled workmen, carpenters receiving $4, painters $4 50, plumbers $5.50, bricklayers $6, and plasterers $6.50 per day, while musicians get $23.50, bartenders $18 to $20, and brewery-wagon drivers $22 per week and beer. Billy Trounsell, a machinist in the G. P. O., who was let out in 1894, is a machine tender on the Examiner, at $40 per week. Many here will remember Trounsell while in this city, and others will remember the great hospitality he showed the boys in San Francisco while on their way to establish the Philippine government printing office. Steele sends best regards to his friends in this city, mentioning Joe Babcock, Dan Vaughan, Mr. Wheat, and Mr. Robinson, especially, and I find this the easiest way to convey his message.

It is with sincere sorrow that I hear of the sudden death of Ben Shannon, at Harrisonburg, Va., from an overdose of morphine taken to induce sleep. I had heard that he had been suffering from nervous troubles. As a partner of Bob Smythe in the publication of newspapers in Staunton and Harrisonburg, he showed good business ability and made some money. He was a genial companion and a good friend, with nothing of the underhand or sneaking in his make-up. Peace to his ashes.

The Post of Wednesday morning contained an account of the finding of the body of poor Charlie Crow in his room at 621 Fourth street northwest, at half-past two o'clock p. m., on Tuesday, dead, with two gasburners turned on, and the coroner decided that it was a suicide, though some of Charlie's friends think that his death was accidental. I am afraid that the coroner's judgment is the correct one. I met him on Pennsylvania avenue a few days before his death, and he spoke of the introduction of machines in the office in which he had been employed as the end of his usefulness and opportunity, and though there was a shade of despondency in his manner, it was not of a character to indicate to me that he thought of taking his life—on the contrary, he spoke of it rather lightly. I had known him for about twenty-five years, and had taken a great deal of interest in him. His was a nature that did not seem able to tie itself down to plodding work. For several months he would be as steady as a clock, and then the evil in his nature would get the best of him. A number of times he went away from the city as a "tourist," staying away several years sometimes, and he has been all over the country. His was one of the cases in which we say, "He was his worst enemy." He was firm and loyal in his friendships, going to any length in the service of one for whom he had conceived a liking, never indulging in petty meannesses to avenge himself on those who had incurred his enmity, full of animal courage, and with positive and pronounced opinions. I am truly sorry to know of the death of Charlie Crow, as well as the manner of his taking off.

Third Division.

Public band concerts will be given as follows during the week ending Thursday, September 15, 1904:

Thursday, Sept. 8—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Judiciary Park.

Friday, Sept. 9—Engineer Band, Washington Barracks and Franklin Park.

Saturday, Sept. 10—Marine Band, White House Grounds.

Monday, Sept. 12—Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Iowa Circle.

Tuesday, Sept. 13—Engineer Band, Washington Barracks and Dupont Circle.

Wednesday, Sept. 14—Marine Band, Capitol Grounds.

Thursday, Sept. 15—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Judiciary Park.

It seems that Max J. Knoble went to Atlantic City along with Saltzman, on a "fishing trip."

John R. Brown, Slug 13, and Wm. H. Duling, Slug 103, both permanent men, were added to our force on Friday last.

J. S. Garner got back from the "wilds of New Jersey" last Thursday, looking, if possible, bigger and healthier than ever.

Chris. McGraw, the apron man, was reported by his substitute on Tuesday to be "doing fine," which is cheerful news that we are glad to hear.

E. C. Saltzman quit work last Saturday at 12 o'clock to go to Atlantic City, and up to Tuesday evening he had not been heard from. It is truly said that "none but the rich can enjoy this life."

Henry T. McConvey, Slug 113, E. D. McKenna, Slug 114, M. H. Phillips, Slug 122, and Willis L. Hall, Slug 129 (the latter an old employe in this Division, recently from Burlington, Vt.), were added to our list of "temporaries" Tuesday morning.

For a month past George C. Sparks has been staying in Laurel, Md., having been taken there in the belief that a change of air and scene would do him good. A letter received from him last week informs us, however, that there has been little or no improvement in his condition, he having again commenced spitting blood, an unfavorable symptom, which, it was thought, had been overcome. Mr. Sparks and his family deserve our sympathy.

Franklin O. Sanders got back on Tuesday from Watsontown, Pa., where he has been "rusticating" since August 17. Gladstone and Roosevelt have some reputation in the wood-chopping line, but Mr. Sanders made a new record one day last week, when he trimmed five immense maple trees of their surplus foliage, which included taking 15 feet from the top of each tree. He has come back, as the Post paragrapher says, to "take the rest cure."

Otis J. Singleton informs me that he is not on his leave, as announced by me last week, but that Mrs. Singleton, instead is enjoying her annual visit to her old home at Edgertown, Mo. Following the example of Messrs. Saltzman and Cowles, Mr. Singleton will make a joyful pilgrimage to Edgerton in the early part of November, when he will incidently cast his ballot for President, and after enjoying his leave, the reunited couple will return to Washington.

When "Goldy" went away recently he didn't have a chance to "do" "Little old New York," the place that O. Henry, in August McClure's, calls "old Badville-near-Coney." So he went down there (at least it is so reported) to stay over Labor Day. I wonder what the chairman would say to this, about his metropolitan home:

You'd think New York people was all wise, but no. They don't get a chance to learn. Everything's too compressed. Even the hay-seeds are baled hay-seeds. But what else can you expect from a town that's shut off from the world by the ocean on one side and New Jersey on the other?

A few days ago while walking toward the G street entrance I heard someone say, "Is George W. Beavers in town?"

"What!" inquired another voice.

"Why, Beavers; the man who used to hold an office in the Post Office Department, and who has been in New York so long, fighting the efforts of the Government to bring him here for trial."

"Well, what about Beavers?" said the second man.

"Isn't that him right in front of us?" said the first man.

"Not on your life; that's Theodore Gerber!"

And the other fellow wilted.

The following from the Post of September 1 is "mighty interesting reading" for all concerned:

Yes, I retire from Congress on the 4th day of next March and will have then completed twenty years' continuous service in the House," said Representative James D. Richardson, of Tennessee, the "father" of the Democratic side of the House of Representatives, as he was taking the train for Boston yesterday.

"And," he continued, "I shall at the coming session make another attempt to secure for the deserving employes of the Government Printing Office a thirty days' sick leave with pay. The large army of Government clerks in the various departments, in addition to their annual leave, are accorded by law a sick leave not exceeding thirty days in any one year with pay, and it is nothing more than fair that this same privilege be extended so as to include the employes of the Government Printing Office.

Thos. L. McEneany has just received a letter from the chief yeoman of U. S. Monitor Monadnock, conveying the information that in view of the fact that Mr. McEneany had made a request that the body of his brother, Joseph McEneany, late private in the U. S. Marine Corps, who was drowned April 23, while boating in Shanghai harbor, China, be sent to Washington for burial, no headstone would be erected, but that the money which had been raised for that purpose by the crew of the Monadnock would be sent here with the hope that the family would accept and use it as a token of the respect in which their late shipmate had been held. The letter enclosed a check for $94, which will be used as intended by the donors. It is needless to add that Mr. McEneany deeply appreciates the action of the crew of the Monadnock and feels a just pride that the memory of his brother should be so highly regarded by his companions.

NAVY YARD ITEMS.

Nuggets of News From Uncle Sam's Big Gun Shop.

Dr. W. K. Ferris, the eye specialist, of East Gun Carriage Shop, and family, are at Asbury Park N. J.

Capt. Jno. Randolph, of Breech Mechanism Shop, and wife, are enjoying themselves at the St. Louis Fair.

Frank Bassett, quarterman West Gun Carriage Shop, with his family, has gone to Mathews County, Virginia, for an outing.

I met Billy Lyons a few days ago wheeling his latest production. Billy looked very fatherly as he watched the cooing babe. There are others, but none like Billy's kid.

Adolph Eisenbeiss, of East Gun Carriage Shop, with Mrs. Eisenbeiss, have gone to Hagerstown, Md., to visit her father, who is critically ill.

Hugh P. Orani was the successful candidate in the recent examination held in the Yard for subinspector at the the Naval Hospital. He has received his appontment and entered on his duties.

Artie Christman, of Hogan's Alley, is now peddling recipes for canning fruit. He has been such a failure on the ponies that he thought it better to change conditions. We wish him success in his new departure.

The Secretary of the Navy has appointed an examining board to convene at the Yard September 5 to pass upon the qualifications of the different candidates who seek the appointment as master tool maker at $5.52 per diem.

Foreman Charles Robinson, of the Gun Division, is improving Twining City by the addition of a row of frame dwellings. Charley is a hustler, and Mayor Bradbury had better look out for his laurels or Charlie will be the next Mayor. The right man in the right place, with Robinson in charge of the guns.

An examination was recently held in the Yard for the establishment of an eligible list of subinspectors of powder. The following passed their examination and have received their appointments: C. D. Storm, H. E. Kaighn, and E. T. Lawrence. They will be detailed to the different powder factories to guard Uncle Sam from inferior ammunition.

Among the casualties in the Yard during the month of August were J. H. Cook, Mathew Donahue, J. T. Pryor, O. O. Morison, and Edward Brennan. With the latter exception, the injuries were not of a serious nature. Mr. Brennan, while unloading some timber, had his leg fractured, the bone protruding through the flesh. He was conveyed to Providence Hospital, where all was done to save the leg from amputation.

I had a narrow escape a few evenings since. While walking along one of the streets of East Washington, a "red devil" came flying along. I immediately thought that Jim Watson, who is spending his vacation at the Hotel de Harris, was out for an airing. I soon found my mistake, as I recognized the pleasant greeting of an old friend, Sam Bates, Master Mechanic West Gun Carriage Shop. Sam was cutting the wind at a nineteen gait. Better look out old man, or Lieutenant McCathran's corps will go you one better and Judge Kimball will make it twenty.

The many friends of Col. John T. Ryan, of the Foundry Division, will be pleased to know that a promotion is in store for one who claims to be the youngest volunteer during the civil war. Starting as a private and ending a colonel is something to be proud of. What position the Colonel will get I can not as yet disclose. Whether it be Foreman of the Iron Foundry, or Master Mechanic of the new Steel Plant, I know it is something good because the Colonel says he is just as sure as he is certain that he belongs to the Salvation Army. Good luck to you, Colonel. Better luck than playing the ponies.

It strikes me very forcibly that Columbia Lodge, being the largest and most thoroughly organized body in the Yard, should take some action to have Congress provide a law wherein workmen in the discharge of their duties in the Yard should be provided, without cost to them, with proper hospital accommodations, and that they should be carried on the rolls with pay while unable to work. Congress handsomely provides for the different hospitals for free beds, and yet it seems impossible for an employe of the Government who may be injured, to secure accommodations without pay. Notwithstanding he falls in the line of duty, his pay ceases the hour he is injured, and to have added to his sufferings the hospital charges make it hard indeed. I hope our legislature committee will look into this matter.

Bro. Geo. Connors, better known as "Judge," owing to the fact that he is a graduate of law and legal adviser to the boys, is now at his home, Renova, Pa., spending his vacation. Judge Connors, being a society man, found that working through the day and attending social functions at night his system was being strained too much, and has sought a temporary relief by going to his country home. There is a strange coincident, however, connected with the visit. A certain young lady of Capitol Hill, as soon as the "Judge" left, also remembered that she too, had some relatives at Renova. We await developments. This being leap year no one can tell how the bashful "Judge" might receive a plea. Possibly he might enter a demurrer—more likely he will let the case go by default. We think, however, the case will be settled out of court. Anyway, I expect an invitation to a reception when the "Judge" and the lady return to Washington.

Messrs. P. L. Paylar, Alonzo Adams, Thos. Frazier, and J. H. Kaufman, of the Yard, will attend the meeting of the Soverign Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows, which meets in Frisco September 17 to 24. They leave Washington September 9 with the famous Washington Canton drill team to again enter the competitive drill, for the world's championship and a cash prize of $2,500. They won the championship last year in Baltimore. The travel across the continent to hold the title is quite an undertaking. The members of this jurisdiction have provided a special train for their brethren, with stop over privileges at New Orleans, San Antonio, El Paso, and Los Angeles. The Southern Pacific Railroad Company has arranged for a special agent to furnish the Canton with all the California fruit they can consume from the time they enter the Golden State until they leave. On their return they will stop at the St. Louis Fair. Success to you, boys, and may you bring back the prize.

Well, our Saturday excursion to Marshall Hall is over and it was a howling success. As predicted, it was one of the largest excursions that left the city during the season. The committee, headed by Brother Tucker, carried out the program to the letter. The tug-of war, the 100-yard dash, the 75-yard dash, the 25-yard sack race, the pie-eating contest, and the young ladies race, were hotly contested. The ball game also had its rooters for both sides cheering their favorites. The Machinists Band furnished the music, which was first class in all respects. The supervising force, headed by Foreman Lynch, were present and mixed with the boys in all the enjoyments. One of the pleasing features was a public courtship on the boat of a member of the Foundry Division and his best girl. Holding her dimpled hand he poured the feelings of his heart into her willing ear, to the amusement of all who were present, except Parson Emmons, who seemed shocked at the public display. But, yet, Brother Emmons, you looked as happy as a school boy with your new bride of a month. I trust our Foundry brother will take notice and hereafter confine his love-making to private quarters.

The Manila Times, of July 19, 1904, has the following concerning one of the staff of the Bureau of Printing, at Manila, formerly of this city:

On Saturday evening last, the employes of the Bureau of Public Printing gave an informal social in honor of Mr. Chas. F. Lanman, foreman of the photo-engraving department of the Bureau.

His residence, No. 47 Calle San Jose, Ermita, was prettily decorated for the occasion with palms and potted plants, and the evening was spent in music and mirth. Impromptu musical selections were rendered by different guests during the course of the evening, and refreshments were served at frequent intervals. The entire force of American employes, numbering about sixty, was present, which demonstrates the high esteem in which Mr. Lanman is held by his fellow workmen.

Mr. Lanman has been connected with the Printing Bureau since his arrival in the Islands from Washington, D. C., over two years ago. He is to leave for Hongkong on Saturday, the 23d inst., on the steamer Empire. From that point he will continue his journey around the world via the Suez Canal, Italy, and France.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

First Division.

After a vacation of about forty days, Dan Haggerty returned to work on Tuesday morning.

C. E. Etchberger, jr., returned to work last Friday, after having spent the past two weeks in Atlantic City.

Billy S. Shinnerer, of the "Y," returned Saturday from Arkansas, where he had been visiting his sick mother.

Pay day on Friday, half-holiday on Saturday and a full holiday on Monday. The Angel Gabriel may blow his trumpet any time now.

T. M. Donn now wears a happy smile. His wife and daughter returned this week from Colorado, where they have been visiting since early last spring.

I am requested by the friends of Frank O. Jones, slug 97, to announce that gentleman's candidacy for the chairmanship of the First Division at the next election.

Morris L. Phillips, who left here some three months ago for Illinois, where he underwent an operation for appendicitis, has returned and been a assigned cases in the Third Division.

Maker-up T. Frank Morgan will take a vacation for the next thirty and possibly sixty days. Together with Mrs. Morgan he will visit their old home in West Virginia and make a tour of the West.

John W. Sherman, of the "Y," and J. N. Cobb and C. L. Williams of the main room, put in an appearance on Tuesday, thus leaving but seven men out of 225 on leave on that day.

Among the compositors to return to their cases last week were W. H. Guthridge, L. W. Baldwin, Marion De W. Siewers, J. C. Shinnen, R. L. Davidson, Wiley H. Davis, C. A. Howle, Wm. L. Taylor, Chas. P. Peake, and Wm. R. Abbott.

News notes of the recent St. Louis convention appear in the September issue of the Typographical Journal over the signature of J. Monroe Kreiter, who was a candidate for reading clerk. Some people's wounds are easily healed.

The Post of last Thursday contained the interesting information that Congressman James D. Richardson would undertake to have passed at the next session of Congress, a law granting printing office employes thirty days' sick leave. It would not be a bad idea for Columbia Union to appoint a committee to assist the gentleman from Tennessee in his efforts.

I was shown a curiosity the other day, and to my way of thinking, by a curious man. It was nothing more or less than a $10 bill which the possessor, Mr. William Holeman of this division has carried in his pocket for fifty years. The bill was issued by the Merchants and Mechanics National Bank of Memphis, Tenn., and while in itself it is not so much of a curiosity, the curious part of the whole thing is that a man can carry ten dollars in his pocket for fifty years and never spend it. Here's one who takes his hat off to Mr. Holeman.

M. M. Cronin, assistant on the galley press, is taking his leave. Mike sailed the high seas on board an American man-of-war for seven years. He was with the fleet off Santiago, and at Tientsin China, during the Boxer trouble. There are few spots on this revolving sphere where he has not put into port. He is just as much at home in Colombo, Hongkong or Vladivstock, as he is in San Francisco or New York. He has made love to the dark-skinned girls of the South Sea isles as well as to her fair-haired sisters on Norway's ice-bound shores. He is a post graduate from the college of experience, and an interesting person to listen to when in a reminiscent mood.

The news of the death of Ben. Shannon which occurred suddenly at Harrisonburg, Va. on Tuesday, was received with sincere regret by his many friends in the G. P. O. His connection in an official capacity with the several divisions had made for him an unusually large acquaintanceship. He was a ready talker, full of wit, and a union politician of considerable magnitude, most of his work in that line being in the interest of others. He was particularly fond of indulging in a harmless "knock" now and then, and was the organizer and first president of Si Daougherty Post No. 1, Independent Order of Back Cappers, which met for a long time in the "Morgue" of the old building. Some ten years ago he was married to Miss Metcalf in this city, and since that time has paid close attention to his home and to placing himself on a solid financial basis.

Down in the Fifth Division there is a shifting of cases, and the laying of pipes that indicates the coming of machines. Here will be installed the machines of the Lanston type. As is generally known, this machine comes in two sections—the keyboard and the caster. In the front or east end of the division, ten keyboards will be placed, while the casters—ten of them will be located in the rear, or next to the Record room. It is a little early in the game to estimate the results of the Lanston machine, but from 2,000 to 4,000 ems per hour is expected to be obtained. Aside from the keyboard operator, one man to every three casters will be required, thus requiring thirteen or fourteen experts to ten machines. In the Fifth Division the work is of a peculiar nature—court work predominating—and if there is a place where the Lanston will be successful it would seem to be there. Foreman Albert Cottle's force now consists of 105 men, and no reduction in the force is contemplated. Out of eightehn men who have been detailed to learn the machine, five have declined.

With a few strokes of his mighty pen James Monroe Kreiter has "swat" me. And for what reason? Over and over again I ask myself these questions: Have I not always attended union meetings and listened most attentively to the flow of oratory from his silvery tongue; have I not always applauded his efforts until red spots appeared in the palms of my hands, and even in moments of extraordinary exhiliaration have I not stamped my feet upon the floor? Did I not indorse him for reading clerk? Then why has he intimated some one else was "loading the toy pistol?" Aye, even worse than that—he has called these literary gems, these nuggets of brain, "stuff." Oh friend, beware! Once upon a time there lived a man named Belcher who referred to some poetry from the pen of one Wm. T. Talbott as "stuff." Thereupon the entire corps of correspondents arose as one man, pulled the plug, and sailed into the aforesaid Belcher in such a manner as to render him hors de combat temporarily, and cause him to seek the quiet of the country for rest and recreation. Nor was he permitted to come back to the reservation until he had hung high into the air the banner of peace. But I shall not allow myself to become angry. After assisting my exteemed friend to reach the top notch on the ladder of fame I can not now be cast aside. I am with him even unto the end. And now, in the face of his last crushing blow, I place his name in nomination for reading clerk at the Toronto session.

Anyone desiring to have a twenty changed should apply to Jack Hasson.

"King" Brady, it is said, is at his old business of conquering the hearts of the fair sex.

Benny Sollers does not wear that "Sunny Jim" expression which was his wont. Why?

The two "Freds" are not such good friends as formerly, Whammond attributing all his troubles to the duplicity of Freddy Hondts.

Hoiby may now fairly be classed as the champion checker player of the Bindery, as he recently beat Reese four games out of six.

Fred Whammond appreciates a joke as well as the next one, but draws the line at a joke which requires him to produce a dollar note.

Jake Hales, "Buck" Wade, and Billy Kelly are thinking of starting a colony at Brentwood, Md. There will then be no doubt as to how Maryland will go. At all events it will never go for prohibition.

John McCarthy wears a very subdued air just now and is recognized as one of the conservative diplomats of the Bindery. He seems to be adverse to be drawn into any discussions, and only his friends "on the inside" know the cause."

Bill Reese says he is going to examine every one carefully hereafter before he invites him to be shaved at his expense. The other day he invited a friend into a barber shop and the aforesaid friend not only got a shave, but a hair cut, shampoo and a bath, all at Bill's expense.

Prof. Charles McEnaney has just returned from a trip to Ocean City, Md., where he spent an enjoyable time. During his sojourn there he had everything that goes with such trips and all on the beach was his, the only medium of exchange being his well-known expression, "That'll be all right."

In Memoriam.

Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, has lost through death two members during the week.

In the death of John W. Thomas the union lost an old and tried member, and his affliction in the close of his career was born with patience and fortitude.

Charles Crow was a good union man, aggressive, loyal, and ever ready to fight for the right. What his conduct as a man and a citizen was is open to construction. He was of a convivial nature and sought kindred spirits in his rounds. In early life, having had the advantage of a good collegiate education, he was at home in any company, being a good linguist and entertaining talker.

"PIKES" (BY MCPIKE.)

One of our poets (see Eccles-easticus) wrote a few "varses" quite recently commemorative of the birthday anniversary of Slug 16, and, sad to relate, the "Pome" got onto the nerves of the party of the second part to such an extent that up to this writing (Thursday last) he has not been able to report for duty,

E

Betwixt a capital E and old London there's found
An affinity comprising less substance than sound;
Still it is there, and this is how it only can be:
Each, in its way, is the capital of England—d'ye see?

F

An F that's inverted may to some extent look,
In its outlines at least, like a common fish-hook;
But, noting not that, there's a resemblance more real,
Because an F, like a hook, will make an eel feel.

The author of the poem, "The Pleasure Found in a Babe," which appeared in this column two weeks ago, has acknowledged himself, but is too modest to allow his name to be published. Following is one by him which will appeal to all printers who have ever lived in a small town:

THE LITTLE COUNTRY PAPER.

There's a little paper printed perhaps many miles away,
That a fellow likes to read at the ending of the day;
There's nothing does him so much good, when he's tired and laying down,
As the little country paper from his old home town.

It's not a great big paper with a colored funny page,
And it doesn't seem to worry much about the doing of the age;
But it straightens out your temper when your mind is weighted down—
That little country paper from your old home town.

It tells about the peach crop, the wheat, and the corn,
That there will be preaching on next Sunday morn;
And how it keeps you posted on who is up and who is down—
That little country paper from your old home town.

It says that cider making will very soon commence,
That Silas Prime is making a new stone fence;
It knocks the corner loafers who are always laying aroun'
Does that little country paper from your old home town.

You can take all the morning dailies, and the evening papers, too,
And put them all together and read them through and through:
But when you want a paper that will take away a frown,
Just read that little paper from your old home town.

M. M. Peace has gone on his leave.

This room now has a total of 141 men and 133 compositors.

Mr. H. A. McPike and wife are spending a few days in Virginia.

Messrs. S. F. Gillespie and T. J. Alleger go on leave this week.

Dr. Wm. J. Manning is with alley 1 again after spending his vacation here in the city.

Messrs. H. S. Edington, A. F. Lowe, W. J. Gould, and T. B. Hoagland have returned from their vacation.

Sunday morning Vincent F. Howard's heart was made glad by the arrival of a son at his home—the first.

Harry A. Watkins is another member of this force who has attained the degree of master mason in Myron M. Parker Lodge, of which W. G. Glenn, also of this room, is worshipful master.

Mr. J. H. Swerdfiger, Socialist, goes to Chicago next week as one of five delegates from Washington to a convention of the Theosophical Society of the World. Before returning he will also visit St. Louis.

Cornish tells a good one on Alfred Dietz. While waiting for "a run down" from Cornish, which, unknown to him, had already been passed, he absentmindedly threw in the portion of his take which he had already set up.

Mr. Thomas J. Alleger, slug 114, will celebrate his seventy-fifth birthday next Tuesday. He looks many years younger, and gets up his average along with the younger men without the aid of a "trusty sit." We wish many returns of the day.

are such as may be counted in the pocket. At the same time styles and qualities are unexcelled.

The little daughter of Mr. E. J. Newcombe (Grace), who gave a birthday party to her friends this week, issued unique printed invitations. It was set up of all kinds of wrong fonts, caps and lower case, reversed and crooked lines as if it had been done by a child.

T. J. McDonough, slug 21, spent Labor Day at his home in Philadelphia, and marched in the parade. Over 25,000 union men were in line. Banners decrying the non-union Inquirer were freely displayed, especially when passing that office. He says Wm. M. Garrett, our late secretary, was also there.

A member of the Record force lately transferred to this room says he worked on a text-book one time in Massachusetts, which a professor read proof on, when he wanted anything changed in position he marked, "move] so] many millimeters to the right." How many printers would understand this measurement?

H. NEWSOM.

By the Way.

The candidate pledges himself, but often pleads a defective memory after election.

The gold standard having been established, it now behooves us to try to get some of it.

Here in the District of Columbia we may exercise self possession, if not self-government.

The purchasable voter has already remarked on the similarity in size of the two barrels.

Both parties are reaching for the labor vote. Fortunately the record of both is an open book for guidance.

Those voters who can not swallow what the other parties stand for may turn to Dr. Swallow, the prohibition candidate.

If one were to accept the advice of spellbinders and party organs he might be tolerably sure not to make a bad choice by voting either way.

Free raw material may mean the kind of meat they give us at the barbecue, or the "wash goods" that go with a free lunch at the opening of every new bar.

By strange oversight the political parties have each failed to place in their platforms the promise of abundant crops and rich harvest for four years ensuing.

Whichever way the result turns, Congress may expect that labor will still be found knocking for recognition and pleading for the fulfillment of promised privileges.

The purchasable voter is last to decide which of the two great parties is most worthy of his support. The paramount issue will be determined by the size of the bunghole.

The politicians recognize that labor is quite a factor and plays a prominent part in determining election results, and because they need it in their business they set out to capture the factor(y) vote.

Col. Bryan has tendered his services to the National Committee, and his further interest in the cause is attested by the suggestion that he shall not be required to begin work till sometime in October.

Tom Watson's friends claim to be the first since the war to name a presidential candidate south of the Mason and Dixon line. With some impatience we wait to learn the possible effect this announcement may have on the "Solid South."

If the polygamists and antis would consent to a test of strength by putting a ticket in the field, the voters would then have an option on about everything which should concern all who feel they must have a voice in the settlement of great public questions.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of September 6, 1904

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at the usual hour by Chairman Wells.

Excuses were made for the absence of Vice-Chairman Daly and Sergeant-at Arms Peyton.

The minutes of previous meeting were read and approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Chas. H. Mettee, president of the Building Trade Section of Baltimore Federation of Labor, asking for information regarding concrete workers. Referred to Secretary to give desired information.

From G. Jule Murray, secretary of Painters Union, No. 368, stating that the Painters had withdrawn their delegates.

The Secretary was directed to forward letter to Central Labor Union requesting that body to enforce the rules.

ROLL CALL.

Under roll call of unions to submit business twenty-six delegates from sixteen Locals were marked present.

Sheet Metal Workers stated that Meads & Reynolds and W. S. Spencer, members of the Master Builders Association, had given contracts to the Joseph Mathy Co.

The Secretary was directed to bring the matter to the attention of the Employers Association.

Hod Carriers asked the assistance of Business Agent on certain jobs.

There being no further business brought to the attention of the delegates, the meeting was adjourned.

Ladies' dining rooms. R. A. Driscoll, N. Cap. and G. Clams and Crabs.

Truth in Fable.

The Manufacturer, hearing that his men were about to organize a Union, appeared on the Scene and entered his Protest.

"I am in favor of Unions," said he, "but I am against allowing any set of men to run my business."

"But we have no intention of running your business," said the men. "We are organizing to protect ourselves."

"I will protect you," said the Manufacturer. "I want free men in my Factory. I want no slaves to a walking delegate. Be free men! Stand upon your Americanism. The laborer should be free in all things."

But still the men insisted upon Unionizing, and finally the manufacturer said.

"Drop this Union Talk and I will increase your wages 10 per cent."

This appealed to the employes more forcibly than Unionism, and talk of organization was dropped. A few months later wages were reduced 20 per cent, and a month later another reduction of 20 per cent took place.

"We will not stand for it," said the Employes.

But the Manufacturer gave vent to a Loud Laugh and asked:

"What are you going to do about it? You have no means of taking concerted action."

"Alas, we listened to your palaver about 'free labor,'" said the Employes.

"Yes," retorted the Manufacturer "By 'free labor' I meant labor that I was free to use or abuse as I saw fit."

Moral: The wise man will study the subtleties of our language.—Will M. Maupin in Commoner.

Unionism Defined.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, was asked to explain unionism. In a sentence he replied: "The labor movement has for its purpose the securing of the best possible economic and social conditions for the masses, and the attainment of these with the least possible friction, the meeting of problems as they confront us; the making of the day after this a better day than the one preceding."

Butchers' Strike Off.

After a struggle of two months, with a consequent loss in wages, figuring up in millions of dollars, the great meat strike has been called off. It will be hard on the men who came out on a principle to seek new fields of employment, as only places for but one-half of the number on strike can be secured, and the prominent men in the strike will naturally suffer for their convictions.

It is bad at best, but it will only steel the minds of the men to renewed effort when the occasion warrants it again. Organized greed has won, but there has never been a strike of any magnitude without its beneficient effect. Possibly the conditions may be different in the near future for another trial of strength between master and man.

Firemen Ask For Arbitration—Brewers Using Non-union Barrels—Stage Alliance Secures Agreement—Portner Case in Hands of Committee—Resolutions of Thanks.

The regular weekly meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8:10 p. m. on Monday by President Dickman.

The minutes of August 29 were read and approved.

The Grievance Committee reported progress.

CREDENTIALS.

Bricklayers Union, No. 1: Milford Spohn, William Roach, James F. Murtaugh, and William Pollard.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Local No. 5, Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, protesting against action of Central Labor Union in seating J. M. Heisley as a delegate-at-large. Filed.

From E. J. Ratigan, secretary Council of Allied Building Trades, inclosing communication from Painters Union, No. 368, and asking for action in that case. Filed.

From Local No. 63, Stationary Firemen, asking appointment of arbitrator in case of an employee of Washington Brewing Co., and member of No. 63, recently discharged. Request granted.

From Samuel Gompers, President American Federation of Labor, on method to secure pledges from candidates on labor measures. Filed.

From J. A. Cable, secretary-treasurer Coopers International Union, calling attention to the fact that some brewers in this city have kegs and barrels made by Cincinnati Cooperage Co., a non-union house, and asking the good offices of the central body in looking into the matter. Referred to Allied Label League.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Paperhangers protested against action of Central Labor Union in permitting Painters to retain seats on floor of this body.

Bakers' Drivers called attention to a circular from Hod Carriers Union, No. 1, which did not bear the union label. Information was to effect that No. 1 was an illegitimate organization.

Musicians asked for immediate action on Kernan case. Point of order sustained against immediate action, and case referred to Grievance Committee.

Sheet Metal Workers requested secretary to again call attention of Arlington Brewing Co. in reference to employment of nonunion metal workers. Granted.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Contract Committee reported contracts for approval with Lafayette Square Theatre and Academy of Music, which were approved by the committee, and request indorsement of Central Labor Union.

They also reported a contract of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen, No. 148, for indorsement.

The committee also reports the contract of the Firemen's Union, No. 63, for indorsement.

The committee reported progress on the Portner case, and expect an interview with Mr. Portner's representative this week.

The case of Bottlers' Union against Bottlers' Protective Association, for a violation of terms of contract, was considered by the committee and will be acted upon during this week.

The case of Elite Laundry Co. was considered by the committee, representatives of the company claiming that they wish to be fair to organized labor and are willing to sign a Central Labor Union contract. It is expected that the contract will be ready for presentation at next meeting.

The report of the committee was received and the recommendations calling for indorsement of contract adopted.

The request of the Allied Council of Building Trades that the Executive Committee inquire into the financial condition of the Section, with further amendment that they also inquire into the cause of the withdrawal of organizations from the Section, was adopted.

The following resolution was adopted:

WHEREAS, Labor Day, 1904, is a thing of the past, and the Central Labor Union of Washington, D. C., celebrated it in a manner befitting to organized labor and its friends; therefore be it

Resolved, That we extend a rising vote of thanks to those business men of our city who contributed their presence and time by taking charge of our automobile and athletic events at Benning Race Track on that day; and be it further

Resolved, That this body give a smoker on October 3, 1904, and invite these gentlemen to be present and receive from our officers a typewritten vote of thanks.

Respectfully submitted,

In Memory of John W. Thomas.

Tribute to the memory of John W Thomas, by the Chapel of the Proofreading Division of the Government Printing office, Washington, D. C., September 7, 1904:

This Chapel has assembled for the purpose of paying due respect to the memory of our late fellow-workman, John W. Thomas, who died Sunday evening, September 4, 1904, aged fifty-eight years. Mr. Thomas first entered the Government Printing Office as a compositor in December, 1869. He was the first, and for a number of years, the chief reviser on the Congressional Record, being employed during the recess of Congress as a proofreader in this division, and was, with the exception of about three years, employed continuously during all these years until he was compelled to cease work on account of the sickness which, after his long and patient suffering, finally caused his death. In consideration of his long service and cordial relations with the employes of this Division, the following preamble and resolutions are recommended by the undersigned committee:

WHEREAS it has pleased the Supreme Being, in his inscrutable wisdom, to remove from our midst our late associate and fellow-craftsman, John W. Thomas; and

WHEREAS we recognize in the life of Mr Thomas so much worthy of commendation—so many admirable traits of character, as exemplified through his genial disposition, generous devotion to the interests of the craft, justness in his dealings with his fellows, courteous demeanor, and as an indulgent and loving husband and father: therefore

Resolved, That this Chapel extends to the widow—ever devoted and solicitous for the comfort of her husband throughout his long illness—and to the children and relatives, its utmost sympathy in their sad affliction and great bereavement.

Resolved, That a copy of these preambles and resolutions be transmitted to the widow of the deceased, and to the TRADES UNIONIST and the Typographical Journal.

Sorrowfully submitted,

L. H. PATTERSON,
J. A. SCOTT,
H. H. BOERNSTEIN,
J. R. RANKIN,
W. S. BAKER,

Quitters Keep Away.

If there is one enterprise on earth that a 'quitter' should leave severely alone, is advertising," says John Wanamaker. "To make a success of advertising one must be prepared to stick to it like a barnacle on a boat's bottom. He should know before he begins it that he must spend money—lots of it. Somebody should tell him, also, that he can not hope to reap results commensurate with his expenditure early in the game. Advertising doesn't jerk, it pulls. It begins very gently at first, but the pull is steady. It increases day by day, year by year, until it exerts an irresistible power. It is likened to a team pulling a heavy load. A thousand spasmodic jerky pulls will not budge the load; while one-half the power exerted in steady effort will start and keep it moving. There are three ways to make advertising pay, and these are the only ways. There are no others. First, is to keep at it; second, is to keep at it; third, is to keep at it.

Fred Whammond complains lately of being kept awake nights by mysterious sounds in his room. Wonder what it is?

Washington bids fair to rival Boston in culture and education if the bookbinders of the latter city continue to pour in upon us.

Henry Hoiby planted a crop of potatoes once and when he thought it was time to dig for them he found only the roots of the plant.

Voters will be enabled to get a one-fare rate this time, excepting those who go to points east of New York. What will our Boston friends do?

J. St. Clair Hambly, the recognized Beau Brummell of the Finishing Room, reports that the prospects for a winter's social campaign are very favorable.

Sam Childs declares that Gus Bauer will make more money while on his leave than if he had worked. Sam claims that Gus is playing the part of waiter during the Eagle's Convention.

Some of the boys from the city of culture are not at all pleased at the way in which Jim Fogerty attempts to avoid them. An investigation is to be made to ascertain what sort of gum shoes Jim wears.

Jack Atkins, from the Windy City, has always looked down upon New York, but upon a recent visit there he saw Luna Park and Dreamland and threw up his hands. He said "I never saw anything like that up to hum."

Wm. C. Connor will return this week to Washington from Riverdale, Md., where he introduced with great success six of Harry Von Tilzers popular songs. Findley Hayes is also entertaining the residents of Langdon with the same music.

One of our bindery boys who recently visited Boston was asked by a barber there if he knew Pat McManus in the big bindery here. He said, "No, but I know Joe McManus, who is from Boston." "Oh! bosh," said the barber, "his name may be Joe in Washington, but it is Pat in Boston."

DEATH OF WILLIAM H. TOWERS.

WHEREAS by the death of William H. Towers, which occurred at Richmond Hill, N. Y., September 11, 1904, at the age of 71 years, Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, and the Proof Room Chapel, loses one of their most highly respected and useful members. Mr. Towers was probably as well and favorably known as any member of our craft in his generation. In the year 1879 he was honored by being elected President of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, the year in which the International Typographical Union met in Washington for the second time. His long connection with the Washington Chronicle and National Republican as foreman, and subsequently as foreman of one of the divisions of the Government Printing Office, brought him closely in contact with a large number of printers, all of whom speak highly of his kindness, consideration, and fairness to those who worked under his management. His more recent employment in this chapel endeared him to all of us who knew his qualities of heart and mind; therefore be it

Resolved, That although our late brother had lived the allotted time of man, his death is regarded as a distinct loss to this chapel.

Resolved, That his amiability of character and cheerful disposition under all circumstances are worthy of emulation by us all.

Resolved, That we as a body extend our sincere sympathy to the members of his family in their bereavement.

Resolved, That the foregoing preamble and these resolutions be published in the TRADES UNIONIST and the Typographical Journal, and that a copy be forwarded to the family of the deceased.

WORK OF I. T. U. CONVENTION

A Few Leading Propositions Reviewed by One of Our Delegates.

EIGHT-HOUR DAY MAIN ISSUE

Priority Law a "Square Man's" Hope—Officer's Salary at Present Adequate—The Cummings Memorial Fund—Sanitary Conditions for Printers.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

The last convention of the International Union was in every sense a business convention. Little time was given to mere academic discussion, and out of the great volume of propositions submitted—propositions which could pass unobserved the nemesis, the evil eye, the awful laws committee with its never-ending "committee reports unfavorably"—a few deserve the patient and considerate attention of the membership.

THE PRIORITY LAW.

Of all the spooks, hobgoblins, and usurping devils known to International jurisprudence this is certainly the most persistently recurrent of the whole troop. Enacted at the behest of the "square man" simply because it was desired to show him that he was "square," the law has been a constant menace to hundreds of locals, a real benefit to none. It makes the I. T. U. a party to every little squabble that may occur anywhere in a local jurisdiction without any compensatory advantages whatever. In a moment of mental mastery at once as surprising as it was commendable the referendum enacted that it would enact no law governing the internal management of a local printing office. This was well and good; but the old priority law remained to be hauled out on any and every occasion when Bill Brown or any other fellow happened to think that possibly, maybe, perhaps he was not getting all that he could compel, and thus once more show to the natives that the International "stood behind him" in his determination to force himself upon an office in which he was not wanted.

The amendments to the constitution to be submitted will not enable us all to say whether the International shall indeed be international in character or whether one half the time and most of the attention of the organization shall be given to mere local questions in which none but the local or the individual are interested, or whether we will eliminate this noisome feature, relegating it to the local where it belongs and allow our officers to turn their attention to matters that interest and vitally affect us all.

THE EIGHT-HOUR DAY.

After mature and deliberate consideration the convention voted unanimously for an eight-hour day, to commence on January 1, 1906. The referendum ballot will contain a proposition laying an assessment necessary to provide the funds required to carry out this purpose of the I. T. U. My faith in the local membership, my opinion of its gratitude for favors received and receiving, preclude the necessity of an argument for the adoption of this provision. Count Columbia Union as unanimous for eight hours and an assessment to get it.

OFFICERS SALARIES.

A proposition to increase the salaries of president and secretary from $1,800 to $2,300 will be submitted. This would make a total of $2,700 each per year, the law providing $400 for these officers in connection with their duties as officials of the Home. While not desiring to influence the vote of any member, I am opposed to this proposition for a good many reasons. The present salary ($2,200) seems to me almost if not quite adequate, though the responsibilities and importance of these positions are constantly enlarging. Bad luck to the day when the mere salary paid our officers shall induce men to seek the positions.

THE HOME.

Every union printer is proud of the Home, not only the union printer of America, but of all the world. If the building and maintaining of the Home had been the sum total of performance of the International Union it would live in loving memory of a grateful and gratified membership. With all the good the Home has done and is doing—a work of fellowship and brotherhood unequaled by any organization anywhere in all the world—the convention submits to the membership a plan for extending and enlarging the utility and beneficence of this institution 50 per cent. The Cummings memorial fund provides about half the amount required. A contribution of fifty cents is requested from the membership, which would enable the trustees to build an addition to the Home that would at once be a perpetual memorial to a noted printer and a practical benefit to the membership. The hospital annex was erected from the proceeds of a fifty-cent voluntary Christmas offering in 1896. On Christmas day, 1904, let every printer have the satisfaction of knowing that he has contributed fifty cents to enlarging, beautifying and making more serviceable to the craft the Union Printers Home.

PHYSICAL CONDITIONS.

Printers are peculiar people. I guess that is why they amount to something—get into the newspapers, are talked about, make a noise in the world. And yet they don't know it all. The glass-blower years ago inquired into the physical effect of his occupation; the iron worker the possible injury from heat to body and brain; the cigar-maker and clothing worker the curse of unsanitary workroom and sweat-shop. From the efforts thus made by these organizations regulations consistent with the dangers attending the employment of these workmen were secured, sometimes by agreement sometimes by legal enactment. The machine in the composing room will soon be universal. What do we know about it? How long can one run a machine and retain health and vigor? Who knows? But we should know, and have the employment regulated accordingly.

At another time I shall have more to say on the topics here only touched upon, unless, perchance, I have already exhausted your patience.

To Form a Dramatic Club.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

Recently a suggestion was made by a number of employees of the Government Printing Office, and who have at some time or another "trod the boards" in both a profesional and amateur way, that it would be quite the proper thing if these wooers of the dramatic muse could be induced to form a dramatic club or society. There are many good people of dramatic ability in the office who, if they could be induced to connect themselves with an organization of this nature might make the venture a profitable one and at the same time afford amusement to their friends. In order to start the ball a-rollin' I mention the matter here, and will be pleased if those interested in the subject will give the matter a little serious thought, to the end that an organization might be affected.

Newspapers Good Enough.

Two hundred of the leading merchants of Reading, Pa., have declared that advertising in the newspapers is good enough for them, and that henceforth they will use only the newspapers for such advertisements as they may publish.

They will have nothing to do hereafter with schemes or ads in hotel registers, desk pads, bill boards, clocks, key-boards, charts, programs, tickets, cook books, moving pictures, enunciators, curtain advertisements, oil paintings and pamphlets. Merchants and business men everywhere are reaching this sensible concluslon.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of September 13, 1904.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at the usual hour by Vice-Chairman Daly.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

A bill from the Trades Unionist Printing Co. for $5 was approved and referred to the Central Labor Union for payment.

The report was accepted and the recommendation concurred in.

ROLL CALL.

Under roll call of unions to submit businsss, twenty-five delegates from fourteen unions were marked present.

Hoisting Engineers asked what assistance the Council could give them on the jobs of R. Callahan and J. Martin. After considerable discussion the matter was referred to the Business Agent, with the request that he inform the Engineers of the result of his inquiries.

Bridge and Structural Iron Workers reported that the Sycamore Pleasure Club had let a job to an unfair firm.

Delegates report from Central Labor Union as to the action of that body on communication from Council relative to Painters being filed; and that a smoker would be given October 3.

A committee of three was appointed by the chair to meet Executive Committee of Central Labor Union and furnish data as to the condition of Council. Desmond, Mills and Ratigan, committee.

The meeting then adjourned.

Labor and Capital.

Less is said now than a few years ago about the interests of the laborer and capital being identical, says the New York Journal. There was a time, not long ago, when that sentiment was a favorite theme for newspaper editorials, sermons and postprandial talks. "Why do not employers and employees get together and settle their differences in a business manner, as industrial partners and coworkers should?" was a popular way of expressing the thought. Rarely do we now hear such opinions expressed, especially in the big industrial centers.

Why this silence, which may be taken to mean a change of mind? The explanation is probably to be found in the fact that organized labor and organized capital in several of the large and important industries became converts to the idea of "an understanding between the contending forces," and in giving the idea practice increased considerably the cost of their united services to the public.

By the way, there is something wrong with the theory that the interests of the wage payer and the wage receiver are identical. Would it not be better to say that they have a mutual interest in the peaceful adjustment of their natural antagonism?

Personal Mention.

John S. Leech, public printer, Bureau of Printing, Manila, P. I., left this city yesterday for an extended visit to his old home, Bloomington, Ill., where he will remain until after the election in November. Mr. Leech has enjoyed his stay in Washington among old friends, and leaves with kindly recollections of his reception in Washington.

J. L. Rodier, who is doing good work as a special agent in the field for Philadelphia Typographical Union, No. 2, in its fight against the Inquirer of that city, was in this city during the past week. Mr. Rodier is enthusiastic over the results accomplished in the fight against the Inquirer and the great moral effect of the present campaign in the future. He has had large and enthusiastic audiences everywhere, particularly in the anthracite coal regions, where a copy of the Inquirer now is a rarity.

In purchasing goods from advertisers in this paper, do not fail to mention the fact that you saw the advertisement in THE TRADES UNIONIST. It will accord you good treatment at the hand of the salesman, and incidentally help the paper.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

George A. Tracy sent me a copy of the San Francisco Call of Sunday, September 4, on which paper he is employed, consisting of 46 pages, much of it devoted to the Knights Templar Conclave, with two sections printed in colors. It surely is a metropolitan paper, there being nothing in the East that excels it.

Foreman C. M. Robinson told me that he contemplates taking fifteen days' leave of absence and spend it in looking at the city which he inhabits, as I did, being satisfied that he will be able to gratify any sight-seeing desire he may have right here. Many a resident of this city is better informed regarding the objects of interest of other places than he is of those right here at home, though this is the greatest sight-seeing city in the United States. Besides, one can have the advantage of sleeping in his own bed every night, eating his own "chuck" every day, and seeing every hour people whom otherwise he would not meet twice a year. I'm for Washington as a summer resort.

* * * *

Ladies and gentlemen, when the question is presented to us, as it will be in the near future, whether we will consent to tax ourselves a small amount—one-half of one per cent, 50 cents on each hundred dollars earned—to help our fellow unionists get what we have so long enjoyed, and which we would never have had if they had not assisted us in getting it by bringing their influence to bear on Congress—the eight-hour day—let us smother our thrifty dispositions and put our shoulders to the wheel to help. The amount to each individual is so small there is no one who will really feel it, notwithstanding that a fifty-cent piece looks bigger to some people than a cornfield to a hog, while the aggregate will be large enough to furnish the sinews of war for a conflict which can be won if we but have the money. In many places they already have the eight-hour day, and in many others existing contracts provide for it before the time set—January 1, 1905—for its universal enforcement. We are behind many other organized organizations—we who are looked up to and quoted as the most advanced and enlightened in the trades-union movement—in this matter, and there is scarcely an occupation in which it is so necessary and desireable. We of the G. P. O. are the best waged workmen in the whole printing field—let us give of our prosperity to help those less well off. I do not know how soon the proposition will come up to be voted on, but of all unions in the country it should carry this one by the largest majority.

* * * *

By an unfortunate omission either on the part of the compositor and proofreader or myself, the name of John F. Connolly as one of the pallbearers at the funeral of the late John W. Thomas did not appear in the account of it in THE TRADES UNIONIST. I will take advantage of this occasion to say that the ladies who so beautifully sang the duets are the daughters of the Rev. Mr. Maydwell, pastor of Waugh M. E. Church, who delivered the prayer at the close of the services—information which I did not then have.

* * * *

Otto F. Thum recently sent me a copy of the Constitution of the United States, with those articles inclosed in black rules which Governor Peabody has violated, accompanied by the Declaration of Independence, presented with the compliments of the Westeren Federation of Miners on Labor Day. There will be such reaction some day against the crimes of that official and those at whose behest he committed those crimes that Colorado will look back on the administration of 1904 as the one in its career over which to forever blush and hang the head.

The death of William H. Towers, of the Proof Division, at Round Hill, N. Y., on Sunday last, news of which reached the office on Monday morning, was not altogether unexpected by those familiar with his condition, for two or three years ago he suffered a paralytic stroke, from which he never fully recovered, and such a stroke is almost invariably followed by another, the death cause in this case being given as apoplexy. Mr. Towers was the son of William Towers, at one time Chief Clerk of the Government Printing Office, who died about twenty years ago, being at the time a copyholder in the office. The deceased lived practically all his life in this city, with the exception of a few years spent in New York City as a proofreader on the World. He was foreman of the Daily Chronicle until it perished, about 1877, part of the time of the news room and part in a similar capacity in the job room. From that time, during the administration of Mr. Defrees, he was in charge of a division of the G. P. O., until 1882, when he took the foremanship of the National Republican, which he held until that paper suspended, four or five years later. After his return from New York, six or seven years ago, he received an appointment in the G. P. O., which he retained until his death. As stated above, he was disabled for some months by paralysis about three years ago, and, owing to his age, it was then feared that he would never recover. Mr. Towers was in his seventy-first year at his death. At least two of his sons are printers, but the eldest, David I., was for many years a theatrical manager; the other, Mark, works on the Post, or did the last I knew anything of him. Mr. Towers was a fine workman in any capacity in a printing office. He was true to his friends, of a quiet, amiable disposition, eminently just and impartial as a foreman, looking to the interests of both employer and employe, and, all in all, a man who will be much missed and his loss deeply deplored. Mr. Towers served Columbia Typographical Union as its president in 1879.

It makes a fellow proud of the city to look at the massive proportions of the new Union Passenger Station, with its wonders in the way of cavernous excavations, broad and deep foundations of concrete, thick walls built of huge stones, ponderous machinery to handle the great weights, great dredging machines that lift a cartload at a time, and everything else in keeping, and reflect that not an American citizen is employed on it in any capacity which a miserable, ill-fed, ill-smelling, ill-paid Italian can fill—people who can and do maintain existence on 10 cents a day and therefore are able to work for less than an American can live on; who do not spend one cent in this country that they can carry back to Italy; who came without the intent to become citizens, and who are mentally and morally unfit to be such if they wished; who are blood-suckers on the nation, bringing nothing, but taking much away; whose permission to come and compete with Americans is the nation's crime against the workingman; whose employment should bring the blush of shame to every honest cheek. It isn't nice to think of, is it? Who are to blame for it? Our lawmakers primarily, and secondarily what is probably the greatest railroad company in the world, of which we are all proud. The greatest railroad company in the world erecting monuments to its greatness with the labor of the dirtiest, rottenest, worst vermin-infested offscourings of Europe! Faugh!

NAVY YARD ITEMS.

Interesting Items of Interest to Navy Yard Employes.

Lt. S. P. Fullinwider has succeeded Lieutenant McFarland in the Yard.

Rear Admiral Higginson, Commandant, is at Newport spending his vacation.

George E. Smouse, of the Gallery, has returned from a visit to his parents in Pennsylvania.

A. Andree and B. G. Ladd, Ordnance Department have been ordered to Boston for temporary duty.

The Navy Yard Team played a losing game with the Unions, Labor Day at Benning. Score, Navy Yard, 11; Unions, 12.

Mark Richardson of the Pattern Division, is lying critically ill at his residence with partial paralysis. Brother Richardson is one of the old landmarks in the Yard.

An examining board has been ordered to convene September 20, to examine and report on each candidate as may appear for the position of first-class electrical draftsman, Equipment Bureau.

Mrs. Annie E. French, wife of George T. French, of Secondary Mount Shop, died at her home in Twining City last week. The many friends of comrade French sympathize with him in his affliction.

The following have been appointed as a result of an examination recently held in the Yard for ordnance draftsmen: C. N. Gregory, H. D. Crocker, H. L. Boesch, M. R. Woodward, T. Ulke, W. E. Rose, B. G. Louden, L. L. Allen, G. A. Knox and R. F. Schmerhorn.

Wm. H. Henze, of the B. M. Shop, went out in the country a few days since to gather some fox grapes. He failed on the grape proposition, but succeeded in finding some poisoned oak. The result is that Brother Henze is almost unrecognizable. Better luck next time, Billie.

Prof. T. H. Crowthers, of Columbia Lodge, has returned home. He first visited Paris where he took the post-graduate course at the Conservatory of Music; then to Berlin for a season at a similar institution. He returns to us fully qualified to teach classical music to our wives and daughters in French, German, and English. His specialty is piano.

Chief Engineer Rich (erstwhile "Dr. Caciac"), of the E. G. C. Division, while on vacation visited his old home, Richmond, Va., to see the boys. He says he will never go there any more, as he was held up by a "cop" as soon as he arrived as a suspicious character and only succeeded in gaining his freedom by offering to the guardian of the peace a bottle of the doctor's new life restorer. What the doctor don't know about medicine would make a good ad for Justh's old stand.

Big Tom Carroll has a heart equal to his size. When the two teams met on the green to test their strength Brother Carroll's team won the honors easily. The reward was two boxes of cigars. In his magnanimity Tom marched over to the defeated team and presented them with one of the boxes. While he was doing the honorable his own team helped themselves from the remaining box. The result was when Tom returned he found the box, but it was empty. Tom will learn after awhile.

Some time previous to the transfer of Secretary Moody to Attorney-General he conceived the idea and put in execution, that more naval officers were detailed as inspectors than necessary, and that civilian inspectors could be secured to fill these places. An examination was recently held in the Yard and the following skilled machinists have received their appointment: J. M. Fuller, J. McC. Davis, W. E. Mattingly, H. W. Brougher, W. H. Henze, W. H. Lantz, A. H. Kersting, J. F. Siebert, W. C. Hay, and H. F. Severn. They will remain in the Yard for thirty days, under instruction, when they will be assigned to different stations where ordnance is being manufactured to act as assistant to officer in charge.

The entertainment committee of Columbia Lodge, No. 174, to make it interesting to the patrons on their excursion to Marshall Hall last Saturday, provided a ballot to be cast for the most prominent and handsomest member of that Lodge. The cost of each ballot was 5 cents. After much electioneering, in which many candidates sought preference, the judge decided in favor of Bro. G. W. Price, who was presented with a gold badge representing the I. A. of M. While Brother Price felt highly elated, Brother Tucker was equally despondent, not because he did not secure the medal, but that Brother Price had been declared the "Adonis" of Columbia Lodge, that office having been pre-empted by "Tuck" for several years. "Tuck" should remember that, shorn of his flowing curls, and with the infirmities of old age, he can not compete with the boys.

Major Brad, the other evening, after his labors of the day, was sitting in his old arm chair reading his Bible, when a messenger rode up on his wheel and handed him a telegram with 49 cents due. Handing the boy a half dollar, and telling him to keep the change, he broke the envelope, with an inward dread that something serious had happened to his best girl, who was summering at Newport. His anxiety turned to anger when he read:

DEAR MAJOR:
Send me $50 at once by telegraph, as I am stranded at Renova, Pa. If you have it not, see Jim Mathison, Joe Williams or Lou Heath.

(Signed) JUDGE CONNORS.

To say that the Major was mad is drawing it mildly, but as he never cusses, he curbed his temper and resumed his reading of Solomon's Proverbs wherein he says: "It is all vanity and vexation of spirit." Wait till the Judge returns, however.

Hon. C. A. Wheeler, of Georgia, passed through this city last Wednesday on his way to Baltimore, to make arrangements for the annual meeting of the Executive Board of "The American Sons of Labor," who hold their conference in that city September 14. This Executive Board consists of one member from each State, who is deputized to act for that State in all official matters. At this meeting one of the two candidates, President Roosevelt or Judge Parker, will be indorsed. The record of each toward organized labor will be thoroughly investigated and the one securing their indorsement will be much benefited, as that indorsement carries with it not less than a half million votes. Being a strictly "secret association," none of its business will be made public. One other question will be brought out in this meeting. A careful tab has been kept of the record of each Congressman as to their attitude toward organized labor. Those who have been favorable will be indorsed and vice versa. After the election no doubt their will be many who thought they had an easy job, who will awaken to the fact that "you can fool some of the people all the time; some people part of the time, but you can't fool all the people all the time."

TIM TICKLE.

Labor Conventions.

There seems to be a growing sentiment among the trades unions of the country against the holding of annual conventions by their national organizations, says the New York Journal. Necessary changes in the laws of the organizations are more satisfactorily made by referendum votes, and if reports of officers are printed and mailed to local unions nothing of importance is left to require a national convention, at least not every year. The Molders and the Granite Cutters hold conventions only on demand of the membership. The Cigarmakers are supposed to meet once at least in eight years, but it has been nearly ten years since they met, because the membership decided to extend the time without date just before the date for holding the last convention arrived.

The cost to the unions for holding a convention is from $5,000 to $60,000. It is believed by the anticonventionists that the large amount which could be saved by reducing the number of conventions, or by abolishing them altogether, could be used to great advantage in other directions.

Official Gazette.

There are ten casters ready for business.

The Gazette can now boast of a side show of its own.

Have you subscribed? Good! That's the caper. Help the cause along.

Miss Nellie Theaker is visiting in Chicago, and intends going to the Fair at St. Louis.

Byron A. Ford has been "under the weather" for several days, but seems all right at present writing.

Charles N. Warren thinks he will take some leave commencing Thursday. Everybody else is doing it.

Joe Cross has been touring the Southwest (Washington) during his leave. He returns to us the picture of health.

"Charlie" Baker, our "original Spess man" is looking robust these days. He has just returned from his leave.

Andrew Turnbull brought some beautiful flowers to the office on several occasions. Judging from their looks Andrew is a good horticulturist.

Mrs. Nellie G. Stagge has been visiting Colorado and its mines and talks very entertainingly of her trip. On her way East she stopped at St. Louis and visited the Fair.

I attended John Thomas' funeral last week. My earliest recollection of Washington and the G. P. O. include him and his genial, hearty manner toward every one.

Frank R. Trimble was called from work Monday on account of an accident to his little boy. I understand that the child's arm was broken. Our sympathy is extended.

The following transfers have been made since last writing: J. L. Garrett, E. E. Coates, A. L. Bodwell, R. J. Mears, H. J. McConvey, W. J. C. Greevy, J. R. Brown, W. H. Dulin, C. E. Sikken, and E. D. McKenna.

There should be a correspondent for the Specification Division. There's lots doing in that progressive crowd. I don't feel equal to the undertaking, although a number of good items have been given me from there.

Bob Harstin, our genial chairman, has progressed so far on the machines that he can distinguish the difference between a "justifying scale driving rack cylinder piston guide wire sleeve nut check nut" and a "justifying scale driving rack cylinder piston guide with stop nut."

Mr. Snell, who has charge of the Monotype machines, has returned to the city after a two weeks' visit to St. Louis. Both he and Mr. Smith, the instructor, are very much pleased with the progress the machine class has made. Three of the casters are now kept busy turning out "live" matter, which is interspersed with the hand composition and printed.

Stuart C. Gordon, brother of Miss Laura B. Gordon, of the Gazette force, was married to Miss Charlotte C. Schondau on Wednesday evening, September 7, at the Church of the Advent, by Rev. E. M. Mott. Walter L. Evans and Herbert R. Van Denburg acted as ushers. A large number of friends witnessed the ceremony and after a reception at the residence of the bride's mother the young couple left for Philadelphia and Atlantic City.

Miss Marion Booth allowed me to examine a fac-simile copy of the first patent issued by the United States Government, which she has. It was issued to Francis Bailey, of Philadelphia, Pa., January 31, 1791, and was for a punch by which to impress matrices of type on material for printing. In those days the specifications were written, and this one has the signatures of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson. The first printed patents were issued about the year 1837.

H. J. REDFIELD.

THE HOMECOMING.

R. G. M. Ross.

At night, tho' weary, happy am I at last,
The day has been o'er long—at length 'tis past;
The small brick cottage coming into view
Hastens my feet. You smile. Well this is true;
For at the door a sight I would not miss—
My wife wee—who greets me with a kiss.

My slippers, pipe and easy chair
Are always ready. And with loving care,
The table set, she brings her chair quite near,
And questions of my cold—her greatest fear—
Is that a cough I have will interrupt our bliss,
I chide her for her fears, and take a kiss.

Through life's dark ways, sometimes the dark'ning night
Seems closing in. My wife always bright
And cheerful as a sunny summer morn—
'Twas a happy day for me when she was born.
No marriages in heaven, no love, no none of this;
I would not care to go and lose my wife's kiss.

Paper Making Machines.

The inventor of machinery for paper making, as distinguished from mere pulping machines, was Louis Robert a clerk in the employment of Messrs. Didot, of the Essonnes paper mills, near Paris. In 1798 he completed a small model for a continuous web of paper on an endless wire cloth, to which rotary motion was applied. Continuous length was thus secured, though at first the width was only that of an ordinary piece of tape.

A machine soon followed producing a width of twenty-four inches, for which Robert had a patent from the French Government and a reward of 8,000 francs. Messrs. Didot bought this patent and the machines, and in 1801 induced a well-known English firm—Fourdrinnier—to take it up. Helped by a clever young mechanic named Donkin, of Dartford paper mills, they so improved the machinery that a Fourdrinnier machine is still the practical equipment of every paper making establishment the world over.—London Globe.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

First Division.

Don't forget next Sunday is Union Meeting.

Dr. Chas. R. Radley, of this division, is learning the linotype.

Horace Cranford returned from a thirty-day vacation last Friday.

E. R. Sprague, 98, started on a vacation of fifteen days' duration last Friday.

C. E. Zimmerman has gone to Pittsburg, Pa., to attend the wedding of his sister.

Chas. Danenhower, the man who boils the type, is taking fifteen days' rest from his labors.

Imposer Jack Burnside assumed the role of a workingman on Saturday after having had thirty days rest.

If somebody else had been doing the loading probably Thos. Jefferson would have been given the credit for the Louisiana purchase in 1803.

Rumor has it that in addition to Frank O. Jones, Chairman Nachman, Harry Templar and Jack S. Robinson will be candidates for chairman.

Henry W. Gray, the "little" man who looks after the big vault, is taking fifteen days leave of absence. Imposer McFarland has charge of the vault during his absence.

F. C. Roberts, of the Fifth Division, who was to have made the Labor Day address at New London, Conn., was prevented from so doing by the death of a brother which occurred in Georgia.

"President Jackson in bringing about the Louisiana purchase in 1803," etc., says my esteemed friend in the Typographical Journal. Will Mr. Kreiter please tell us what Thomas Jefferson was doing about that time?

It has been suggested to me that possibly the ten-dollar bill which Mr. Holeman carried in his pocket-book for fifty years is no good. That doesn't make a bit of difference. Some people would have spent it anyhow.

Chas. S. Elder, 86, has returned from a visit to his old home in Maine. There must be something mighty attractive up in the old Pine Tree State, for all the boys who spend their vacations there are overdue when they reach Washington.

Clarence L. Vliet, 78, is taking fifteen days leave. Mr. Vliet is a suburban farmer on a small scale, and takes this time of the year to gather in the pumpkins and other good things which he has raised during the summer. Vliet is a wise old owl.

Every printer who is interested in the affairs of his union should read up on the propositions soon to be submitted to the membership to be voted upon. Especially so on proposition No. 1, which is so ably discussed on pages 260 and 261 of the September Journal, and relates to the part the I. T. U. shall take in controlling the internal affairs of printing offices.

Several discussions have taken place in the last few days relative to the salaries of the president and secretary of the I. T. U. If the uninformed will take the trouble to look in the Typographical Journal they will discover that each of the above gentlemen draw $150 a month for I. T. U. services, and in addition $33.34 per month for salaries as officers of the Printers Home, thus the two combined giving them $2,200 per year.

A. W. Bentz, of the correcting alley, has handed me a copy of the Arrow, a little paper published by the Indian pupils at Carlisle, Pa. Among other things I note that "Ignatious Ironroad and Dock Yukatauchie are again employed in the printing office," and that "Jack Tomahawk, Wm. Silverheels and Tom Whitecrow" will play with the foot ball team this year. This information is given for the benefit of the Carlisle and Harrisburg delegations in the G. P. O.

Did you ever watch a party of tourists pass through the room? I have discovered one thing—if there is a printer in the bunch he is bound to let it be known. Generally he is the fellow who brings up the rear. He trails along with a wise look in order to show his contempt for what the guide may say. Sometimes he cleans his finger nails with a steel rule. Heading for imposer Wetmore the other day one of these fellows began at long range talk about sixteen page sigs., pie, etc. At last he dropped anchor beside Wetmore and began a heart to heart talk. "Got a pretty big office here?" said he. "Oh, yes," replied Wetmore. "Do lots of work, I guess?" and again the imposer replied in the affirmative. "I guess you get a good deal of work from these small towns around Washington, don't you?" After receiving another reply in the affirmative he assumed a dignified air, and slowly followed the guide.

Now that the machines are in actual operation, every day we will hear of some individual who is developing remarkable speed. I do not believe in publishing such items. I never could see the justice in posting on the bulletin board each day the record of individual operators, which was practised by many newspapers. The fact that one man exceeds another by a few hundred ems does not follow that the slower man is not earning his money. Some of the fastest operators in the country to-day are men who made a poor showing at the start, and I believe the great Stubbs to be one of them. The conditions under which men and women in the G. P. O. are learning are not the same as on newspapers where one is given a specified time to make good or have the foreman perform an operation on his neck. The real valuable man to this office will be the one who studies the style and sets his matter accordingly.

The extent to which the Government is a publisher of daily publications is not generally known even to the employees of the G. P. O. We are all aware of the great Congressional Record with its distinguished corps of editors, and of the "Journal of the Supreme Court," probably the most exclusive publication on the globe, but there is yet another, published every week day in the year in which is printed the reports of our consuls, scattered all over the world. This publication is now issued from the Third Division, under the supervision of Foreman E. A. M. Lawson. Up to a few months ago it was published from the State Branch and by direction of the Bureau of Trade Relations, but now these reports are turned over to the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Commerce, all printing for that department being performed at the main office. Mr. Lawson tells me that the circulation of the daily is continually growing, manufacturers and business men throughout the country being anxious to secure it in order to keep posted on the business conditions of the world. Three thousand two hundred copies are now printed, many of them going to daily newspapers, the reports being again published in news form. The publication is unique in at least one respect—it has the largest staff, and the best paid set of reporters on the globe.

"PIKES" (BY MCPIKE)
IN A SYMBOLIC SENSE.

If a colored man waiter, no matter where at,
In waiting as waiter, should slip up and fall flat
While toting to table a turkey, well cooked and immense,
Why whould such a mishap, in a symbolic sense,
An idea convey to your own mind, if you please,
Of disasters and troubles in lands o'er the seas?
That is the question, and if you'd answer it right,
Make a note first of Africa's downfall and plight,
Followed, of course, by the demoralized state
Of Turkey itself when it skipped from the plate;
Yet, not any less sad was the fate which befell
Poor China, we guess, when it was knocked into—well,
Say into pieces, While Greece was bereft of all hope
When the scrubwoman got there with her mop and her soap.

This up-and-down letter isn't at all above price,
Being strictly in it, just there at the middle,
And yet without it no one could cut any ice,
Nor play on a fife, a triangle, or fiddle.

J

Why the letter J is like unto your nose,
Or like any nose that on any face grows,
Is simply because, as you'll likely espy,
'Tis always in place when it's near to the I.

K

Why the letter K is like a pig's tail?
Perhaps you can guess, though likely you'll fail,
And so we will tell you—hope you will mind it—
At rear end of pork you always can find it.

L. J. Runyon goes on leave to-day.

Messrs. J. C. Wilson, J. L. Clendenin, and Comrade W. F. True are on leave.

Messrs. L. L. Lippincott, W. T. Talbott, and James E. Harper have returned from leave.

J. H. Babcock has been sick for several days. We hope he will soon be able to return to work.

H. C. Towne returned last week from a vacation spent at his home in New Orleans. He viewed the fair at St. Louis on his way back.

The engineer might as well tie the whistle down and let her rip all during lunch hour. Five seconds has been suggested as a sufficient length of time to blow it instead of sixty.

The youngest son, twelve years old, of H. L. Kause, formerly of this room, now of the Job Division, is now suffering from a broken arm. On Sunday or Monday he was coasting down the Bladensburg hill on his wheel when he was thrown over the handle bars.

J. H. Swerdfiger, socialist, theosophist, etc., etc., will be very much missed in alley 7 while on his leave. Some of his socialistic ideas are startling. He says that if socialism prevailed we would be detailed from the case to help in the harvest field when the busy season was on. Some would even prefer this to going to the Spess.

Dave Pollock, who had several hemorrhages about two weeks ago, is now sitting up. His doctor advises him to go West to try and regain his health. Every printer in the G. P. O. knows Dave to be a good fellow and liberal to a fault. He never turned down a subscription. It would be a handsome thing for all the printers to join in a substantial testimonial to him now when it is most needed.

Among all the souvenirs given out by visitors to the convention at St. Louis, the finest was that of George E. Easterling of Denver. It was a handsomely illustrated book containing many scenes of Colorado and some humorous pictures, all in color, and printed by the firm of which he is the superintendent. When delegate to Washington last year he also had a fine souvenir. Mr. Titus F. Ellis brought one of the first mentioned back with him.

C. L. Nace tells of a series of hard luck our chairman had when he went fishing Sunday. After catching quite a string at Chesapeake Beach he called to a stranger to come where he was if he wanted good luck. The man's hook got caught in Cornish's string of fish and disengaged them. Then when he was preparing to leave he put his hand in his pocket when it got caught in some hooks and could not be gotten out without assistance. To get even he laid off Monday and went up the river, but did not get a bite.

Joseph T. Geraci had a hard time finishing his toilet in the crowd at the elevator Thursday afternoon. He had his coat on one arm only and was trying to put on his collar and tie. Every one in reach assisted him all they could (?) which only retarded him. His tie first became wrapped around his collar, then out at one side after the collar was fastened. Two strong men helped him on with his coat. After his arms were forced in the sleeves they lifted him high in the air by the coat collar so he settled quickly into it. Then the elevator arrived, much to his satisfaction.

While doctors and scientists are experimenting with cures for consumption and the best way to treat it and thousands of dollars are being spent in seeking cures, still individuals persist in habits which they know causes or will lead to it. Many who have wrecked lungs attribute it to the use of cigarettes. If they do not cause the lungs to become diseased directly, they certainly do attack one in his weakest point—in whatever he is predisposed to. Moderate drinking and smoking always runs into immoderate use—and then, when one's health is gone he sees the error. The manufacture of cigarettes should be abolished. It strikes the nation at the foundation—at boyhood.

Third Division.

Public band concerts will be given as follows during the week ending Thursday, September 22:

Thursday, Sept. 15—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Judiciary Park.
Friday, Sept. 16—Engineer Band, Washington Barracks and Lincoln Park.
Saturday, Sept. 17—Marine Band, White House Grounds.
Monday, Sept. 19—Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Smithsonian Grounds.
Tuesday, Sept. 20—Engineer Band, Washington Barracks and Franklin Park.
Wednesday, Sept. 21—Marine Band, White House Grounds.
Thursday, Sept. 22—Marine Band, Marine Barracks; Cavalry Band, Fort Myer and Judiciary Park.

It is either a Toy Pistol or an Air Gunn.

Arthur LeMerle is doing nobly on the rule cases, etc.

Arthur P. Ferl, Slug 104, a recent acquisition, came here from Manila, P. I.

One of the recent arrivals is Robert J. Mears, who worked on frame 32 last winter.

We have a man in our room whose sneeze resembles the sound of a cuckoo clock when it strikes two.

Secretary Piehoff will soon begin an eight days' leave of absence. While he is away Max J. Knoble will act as chairman.

It will be noticed that Chas. S. Gunn sometimes has "moments of extraordinary exhiliaration." At least he said so last week.

How pleasant to be able to name one's own literary productions. Gunn says his writings are "literary gems—nuggets of thought!"

The black smoke that comes out of the tall chimney of the Elite Laundry is indeed a "black smoke nuisance," and should be treated as such. An ample fine would be highly appropriate it seems to me.

It is a pleasure to record the fact that Max J. Knoble and E. C. Saltzman returned from Atlantic City two days after Labor Day. Both were so badly sunburned that they looked as if they had taken prominent parts in a lynching bee.

Owing to the increase in size of the Division it has become necessary to detail H. W. Kitzmiller to preside at the proof press, and the augmented force have their hands full. Mr. Kitzmiller is one our best compositors, and if detailed permanently to the press will receive a merited promotion.

Chase's Theater is now the only place of amusement in the city where the music is provided by union musicians. It is said that the music at the Columbia on the opening night was so bad that it interfered seriously with the show. I wonder how long the public is going to stand for that sort of a thing?

Alley 7 is desolate and Alley 4 has cause for rejoicing. On Tuesday evening Jos. E. Goodkey swapped frames with C. J. Unger, who thereby became Slug 42, while the first named drew Slug 24. It is with no intention of reflecting upon Mr. Unger that I say that he will have his hands full if he tries to fill Goodkey's shoes. (This last is not intended for an Irish bull.)

The news of the death of Ben Shannon, formerly assistant foreman of the old Second Division, was conveyed to me last week too late to chronicle in this column, His old associates in the Third liked Mr. Shannon well, and deeply regret his taking off. There is nothing to add to the details published last week. We can only say with Pard Bloomer, Peace to his ashes.

Later information is to the effect that our chairman had such a good time when visiting the Catskills that he applied for and received thirty days' additional leave of absence. Labor Day and the Jewish New Year have been celebrated "with prompt and eclat" (as Bill Nye used to say,) and the balance of the time will be devoted to doing up the various mountain ranges and valleys of pleasure with which the Empire State and the Borough of Manhattan are plentifully provided.

Another member of the firm of Shakspere, Bugg & Co. (in this instance it is the "Co.") has mounted the pons asinorum and from its dizzy heights is now hinting pitifully to the "entire corps of correspondents" to arise "as one man" and help him out of the trouble he got into with James Monroe Kreiter. Dear Charleyboy, take my advice and let the Monroe doctrine alone. And don't get any false notions into your head about the undersigned. He is not, nor has he ever been "off the reservation," moreover he is now, as ever, unalterably of the opinion that Talbott's "dreadful stuff" is just as dreadful as when Adam Bugg and one or two others (comprising the "entire corps of correspondents" referred to above) shot their little bolts; he has never hung out any "banner of peace;" nor has he been at any time rendered hors du combat. Do you get me? Now, Charley, having corrected your inaccuracies, let me express the hope that in the future you will be a little more careful in your statements. I have no interest, one way or the other, in your controversy with the Boy Orator of the Avenue; but I will venture the opinion that you can't floor him with any reference to what I called "stuff." If you don't think I'm right, just ask Mr. Kreiter, and I am positive he will agree with me.

J. W. BELCHER.

He Had a Card.

At the recent laying of the corner stone of the new weather station at Peroia, Ill., the Hon. J. V. Graff, member of Congress from that district, handled the trowel and set the stone.

The new station is situated at Bradley Institute, and President O. J. Bailey, of that institution, paid a high tribute to organized labor. In his address he said he was interested in labor and organized labor, and he believed it was right for men to assemble for the common interest, but at the same time they should have in mind the best interests of the people. "I believe it can be said of Peoria organized labor such is the fact. I believe in the common brotherhood of man and I am opposed to that which seeks to build up by the downfall of another class. Let us favor organized labor for the good of humanity."

"Mr. Graff is a member of the Bricklayers Union, as I believe," said Mr. Bailey, "and under those circumstances can rightfully put this stone in place."

Mr. Graff's labor record was clear, for the Bricklayer's Union, of Peoria, issued him a regular union card, authorizing him to spread the mortar. When he stepped up to the stone and took the trowel in hand, William Sessling, "steward of the job," asked him to show his card. Foreman L L. Miller had previously presented him the card issued by the union. Mr. Graff promptly showed it. The work then proceeded.

In purchasing goods from advertisers in this paper, do not fail to mention the fact that you saw the advertisement in THE TRADES UNIONIST.

At the Conclave.

A number of Washington (D. C.) printers are expected to be in attendance upon the Knights Templar conclave in this city next week. Typographers are prominent in fraternal societies of that city, and for years printers have succeeded printers as commanding officers of the Knights of Pythias, Masons, and Odd Fellows. The Masonic Disciple is edited by A. F. Bloomer, a proofreader on the Congressional Record, and the Washington TRADES UNIONIST says more than 500 Masons of that city are members of the allied printing trades. Charley Otis, formerly of this city, and now a reader in the Government Printing Office, is a Past Master Mason of the District of Columbia.—San Francisco Labor Clarion.

Thrives on Opposition.

Our opponents talk of men losing their individualify when they join a union, a labor organization. That is simply absurd. As soon as a workman enters a modern industrial plant he has lost his individuality. No longer is he a whole workman in the sense of the position he occupied some years ago. He is simply one little cog in the great wheel of industry. He is one atom in the great aggregate of employees who furnish the finished product.

Of course, the organizations of labor are growing in the same proportion that industries develop, and the organizations of labor will continue to grow, despite everything the opposition may try to bring forth, despite all of their abuse, despite their talk about the Gompers eight-hour bill and the Gompers-Mitchell anti-injunction bill, and despite their caricatures of us in the alleged comic papers, as breeders of discontent. These things will do no good as far as eliminating the organizations of labor is concerned. It is like the shamrock of the Irishman, "the faster you pick them the thicker they grow."

You can not drive out this natural growth of the organizations of labor any more than you can drive out of the human heart the desire for better hopes, for better conditions, and for a better life. A people may be born in slavery and die in slavery and never know what freedom means, but the workingmen of America have tasted freedom. They know what real liberty is, that liberty which comes from the power of united organization. They have tasted that freedom.—American Federationist.

Kernan's Lyceum Declared Unfair on Account of the Musicians.

RESOLUTIONS TO A DELEGATE

Hod Carriers Are True Blue—Smoker Committee Have Arranged For a Good Attendance—Navy Yard Band Given Vote of Thanks For Services on Labor Day.

The regular weekly meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order on Monday evening at 8.15 o'clock by President Dickman.

In the absence of Secretary Winslow, Delegate Dietrich was appointed secretary pro tem.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

On motion, President Joseph N. Weber, of American Federation of Musicians, was given the privilege of of the floor and invited to a seat on the rostrum.

The Grievance Committee reported on case of Kernan Theater with Musicians Union. The committee having reported that Mr. Kernan ignored the request of the committee for a conference with him, recommended that Kernan's Theater be declared unfair. The report of the committee was adopted and the recommendation concurred in.

The Grievance Committee reported progress on other cases in its hands now under consideration.

Bill from Council of Allied Building Trades, for printing, on being approved by the Auditing Committee, was ordered paid.

The following resolution, submitted by H. W. Sherman on behalf of several members of the Central Labor Union was adopted:

WHEREAS, Brother Milford Spohn has been a member of the Central Labor Union of Washington, D. C., since the institution of the Central Body of the District, serving as its first president and filling all the various positions of responsibility in the gift of the organization; and

WHEREAS, All the services that he has rendered from year to year in the interest of the local organizations composing the Central Body, involving personal sacrifice and loss of time, etc., he has never in the history of the organization submitted a bill therefore; and

WHEREAS, It has been said that organizations of labor have not appreciated the services of men who have rendered signal service, etc., and that many of them have been subjected to many things that were not just and creditable; and

WHEREAS, Let it be known that this Central Body has appreciated these services rendered by Brother Spohn, and recognize his great tenacity of purpose and loyalty to the cause of labor therefore; be it

Resolved, By the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia, that they hereby vote to Brother Spohn the sum of one hundred dollars ($100), in recognition of his great services and sacrifice to the best interests of this central organization.

Resolved further, That a committee of three be appointed to present Brother Spohn with the gift as provided for in this resolution, together with a copy of the same, in appropriate language and manner.

H. W. SHERMAN,	R. G. M. ROSS,

J. F. MCCARTHY,	C. A. PFAU,
J. D. BLAND,	N. C. SPRAGUE,
JOS. A. DALY,	JNO. R. HARTLEY.

The chair suggested that the resolutions, on being engrossed, be presented on the occasion of the smoker on October 3, which was agreed to.

Communication received from Bartenders League was read and referred to Grievance Committee.

A communication was received from the Council of Allied Building Trades, submitting a resolution requesting all building trades represented in the Central Labor Union, not now affiliated with the Council of Allied Building Trades, be compelled to do so under the laws and rules of the Central Labor Union. Action deferred until the Executive Committee shall report on matters pertaining to Council of Allied Building Trades.

Communication from Hod Carriers Union, No. 21, was read in which they disclaim any part in a picnic given by an alleged organization known as Hod Carriers Union, No. 1, where the union label was omitted from its printing. The communication says "that Hod Carriers Union, No. 1, is not affiliated with any central body, being composed of fined of suspended members of No. 21. They advocate low wages and the open shop system. We advocate the label as well as the card, and instruct our members to buy only labeled goods. A daughter of one of our members refused to buy a fan during the hot month of July because she could not find one with a label on it. She was told subsequently that fans as yet have no label. We are doing our best for the success of the labor movement." The communication was placed on file.

The Auditing Committee made its report, which was accepted.

The Committee on Smoker reported that arrangements were being perfected for the entertainment of the guests of the Central Labor Union on the night of October 3.

Under roll call of unions, Bridge and Structural Iron Workers reported that the Sycamore Island Pleasure Club were to erect a bridge with nonunion labor. The delegates were asked to aid No. 5 in the matter.

A vote of thanks was tendered to the Navy Yard Band for its services on Labor Day and a like action was tendered to the Police Department for services on that day.

Not a Mud-Slinging Campaign.

Oh, the speech, the beautiful speech!
Upwardly mounting as though it would reach
The sun-lighted cloudland of elegant gush,
Soaring along with a wild, Western rush,
Ripping and roaring and tearing along
With its flight urged still higher by applause of the throng!
Oh, wouldn't you like on the hustings with me
To wander gesticulatory and free?

Oh, the speech, the beautiful speech!
He climbs on the stump and begins to impeach
The opposite party. In thundering tones
He denounces the venial Brown, Smith and Jones;
He smears them with slander and pelts them with wit,
And out of the depths of a sarcastic pit
Roars language invective through floodgates of wrath
Till a swirl of destruction envelopes his path.
Here he pauses for breath and thanks Heaven it is clear
That it won't be a mud-slinging campaign this year.

Then again his voice mounts till it loses its grip
In a ragged old shriek of defiance, when—bip!—
An eloquent protest has struck his left leg,
A mephitic, pestiferous, out-spoken egg;
And before he can dodge—bang!—upon his off ear
Another impinges, and ere he can steer
His way through the crowd and in gloom disappear,
To old Mudslinger's mind it is not quite so clear
That it isn't a mud-slinging campaign this year.

—WILLIAM TIPTON TALBOTT.

Third Division.

George R. Merriam is back from Vermont after a month's absence.

Albert P. E. Doyle spent a short period of leave last week in doing the town.

J. L. Sauls started on the 14th instant for his home in Florida to be gone sixty days.

"It is just like taking candy away from children to make us work this afternoon," said one of the boys last Saturday.

My quotation from Bill Nye last week was spoiled by the misspelling of a word. The line should have read, "With pomp and eclat."

Chris. McGraw, the apron man, is still reported by his substitute as "doing fine." As Chris. is under the care of Doctor Chadwick there isn't much occasion for anxiety.

A. K. Williamson, the J. Pierpont Morgan of the division, made an excursion to his home on T street last Saturday, and landed safe and sound at his frame at the usual hour Tuesday morning.

A. W. McEwen returned last week from a stay of twenty days at his home in Hunter's Mill, Va. As he was sick much of the time, Mr. McEwen did not not enjoy his vacation as he would have liked.

The laborers used to roll a truck about the room that sounded as if, like the "wonderful one-hoss shay," every part was in imminent danger of giving way at one and the same time. We don't hear that truck any more. What a relief!

Edward Jackson, laborer, after working for nine years in the First Division, and serving terms of several weeks with the Interior and State Branches and Specification Division, has finally landed in the Third, where he will probably remain.

This week sees the last of the open-air band concerts. The Marine Band will make its final appearances of the season on Thursday afternoon at 5 o'clock at the Marine Barracks, and on Saturday afternoon at 4:40 o'clock at the White House grounds.

J. C. Sowers, in charge of the correcting alley, started for St. Louis last week. He will take his full thirty days. In his absence his place will be taken by Edward J. Wood, assisted by that accomplished Georgia gentleman, W. Russell Branham. "The Farmer" and "Branny" are a fine pair to draw to.

Cliff D. Scott is a member of the District militia. Last Monday Cliff was one of a squad detailed for target practice. On reporting at the armory the boys were informed by their commanding officer that the range had been condemned. "We got back home at nine o'clock," said Shorty, "and had a clean pick-up the rest of the day."

By reference to a former issue of THE TRADES UNIONIST, I find that the firm name is "Bugg, Shakespere & Co.," and not "Shakespere, Bugg & Co.," as I had it last week. It gives me pleasure to give precedence to the proper person, more particularly in this case, where a wrong impression might have been given by my failure to make the correction.

Last Thursday afternoon A. H. McKnight was notified by telephone to come home at once. When he arrived he found that his sister, who had been in Washington on a visit for some time past, and who had called on Mrs. McKnight to say good-bye, had been taken suddenly ill. At present the patient is improving rapidly, although not yet able to leave her bed. Mr. McKnight has our congratulations on the favorable outcome of his sister's illness. We hope she will speedily be restored to health.

Charles S. Davis, our slug man, lately took a jump from frame 63 to frame 81. As 81 is the age of the Hon. Henry Gassaway Davis, the Democratic candidate for Vice-President, our Mr. Davis thinks that he, too, is old enough to run for Vice-President. Mr. Davis argues that as Mr. Dooley has stated that the vice-presidential candidate is related to William J. Byran by his middle name he thinks he is likewise related to the other Mr. Davis by his last name. "There is one more thing you'll have to do," I remarked to Mr. Davis. "What is that?" he inquired. "You'll have to dance the German; that is one of the accomplishments of the ex Senator from West Virginia," said I. "I'm afraid," said the slug man, "that it would be a case of dancing the German now and walking Spanish in November."

Some small idea of the immensity of the operations of the Government Printing Office may be had from looking over the Catalogue of the American Library Association, now in course of composition in the Fourth Division. The catalogue is set "half professional" measure, which is about 15 picas or 2½ inches long, and calls for a lead after each line. Over 4,600 pounds (about two tons) of leads have thus far been used, and as the job is something over half done, it is probable that between one and two tons more will be required.

Another immense job is the consolidated Index of the Acts and Resolutions of Congress, which has been under way in the Third Division during the present year. This Index gives, in alphabetical order, the title of every act and resolution from the time when Congress first assembled at the birth of the Republic to the present time, and although we have barely begun the letter "D," the maker-up has already turned out over 1,000 pages.

It having transpired that Wm. N. Goldstein, chairman of the Third Division chapel since the spring of 1903, had gone to New York to stay until after election, a special meeting held last Saturday took action in the matter. No doubt "Goldy" thought that the chapel was surely safe with Secretary Piehoff to look after things until the end of the month; but he did not anticipate what was going to occur. It seems that Mr. Piehoff started away on eight days' leave last Thursday morning, having appointed Max J. Knoble to act in his stead until his return. Max, being a devoted disciple of Izaak Walton, decided that he would like a day's fishing last Saturday, and, with an eye single to the interests of the chapel, appointed Arthur M. Le Merle to act as his substitute until Monday. Shortly after going to work on Saturday morning, Arthur awoke to the fact that if he attended to his multifarious duties of guardian of the rule cases, accents and dead board, to say nothing of giving out the "divvy," he would have no time left for marking rings and deciding fine points in the chapel laws. Then a bright thought struck him. "I'll appoint Goodkey!" he exclaimed; and forthwith Goodkey was appointed.

It seems that on the previous evening Mr. Goodkey had been approached by a number of members of the chapel with a request that he permit the use of his name as a candidate for chairman at the election to be held September 30. To this request Mr. Goodkey had replied in characteristic vein, saying, among other things, that if elected chairman he proposed to raise the Third Division to a higher plane, and intimating that since he had ceased to be chairman the ethical status of the division had not been exactly up to concert pitch. This statement, in the form of a letter to General Delahunty and others, was placed on the bulletin board and created a profound impression upon the minds of all who read it.

Shortly after his designation as acting chairman, Mr. Goodkey posted a notice informing the chapel that he hereby declared the office of chairman vacant, and calling a meeting for the election of a temporary chairman to hold office until September 30, said meeting to be held at 12:20 p. m.

After further deliberation the acting chairman took down the notice and posted in its place the following:

NOTICE.

I AM AN ERROR. Mr. Piehoff, who is now Secretary, became chairman upon the failure of Mr. Goldstein to hold office longer. Action upon Mr. Goldstein's alleged failure to act or absence will lie over until next election of officers, on September 30, 1904. Meeting to-day will be therefore called to elect a temporary chairman to act until Mr. Piehoff returns.

J. E. GOODKEY, Acting Chairman.

Promptly at 2:20 the meeting was called to order, and the chapel voted, on motion of T. Frank Hall, to declare the office of chairman vacant. Nominations for chairman to hold office until September 30, were then called for, and Messrs. J. E. Goodkey, J. W. Childress, and C. J. Unger were named. Mr. Unger declined to allow the use of his name. The chair appointed Messrs. Will W. Frye and C. F. Cooke to act as tellers, and requested the undersigned to check the names as the votes were placed in the box; then the meeting adjourned.

The balloting began at 1 o'clock and resulted as follows: Whole number of votes cast, 111; necessary to a choice, 56; Childress, 66; Goodkey, 39; Unger, 5; blank, 1.

Thus another bloodless revolution has taken place, and under the masterful guiding hand of Goodkey the office of chairman, which, until he assumed control, was being knocked about from pillar to post, has been conferred upon a man who will, it is confidently believed, remain at work during his whole term.

Le roi est mort; vive le roi?
Mr. Chairman, if you please!

COLUMBIA UNION MEETING.

Resolutions Adopted in the Interest of Temporary Employes in G. P. O.

The regular monthly meeting of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, was held on Sunday last, and was called to order at 2:30 p. m. by President Berg.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

The Nominations Committee having reported favorably on the applications of L. J. Reuth, Charles S. Beatty, and Edward V. Grady for full membership, and Charles E. Deming and W. E. Collier for apprentice membership, they were duly elected and those present obligated.

Bills for printing and stationery, amounting to $31.40 were ordered paid.

On reading of circular from Secretary Bramwood referring to I. T. U. vote, the secretary was directed to procure a certain number of ballots for the occasion.

The Business Committee, reporting a question of measurement of type submitted to it, coming from a down-town chapel, decided the matter in question as being price-and-a-half, but, on amendment, the Union decided it double price.

Mr. Ennis, from Codification of Laws Committee, asked for a reconsideration of a vote of a previous meeting calling for 2000 proofs of the laws now under preparation. The motion was lost.

The Finance Committee, reporting favorably on the claim of Jos. T. Sherier, late secretary to Secretary Garrett, for overtime, the bill was allowed.

The Library Committee reported that it had completed its labors in placing a file for the daily papers in the secretary's office.

The Grievance Committee, in a report covering the attitude of the American Hardware Co. toward organized labor, recommended that they be placed on the unfair list. Carried.

The Cummings Memorial Committee made its final report, stating that $805.65 had been secured through the aid of the committee, and that, with $10 secured from Woman's Auxilary, No. 13, and a pledge of $181 35 from Columbia Union, that $1000 would be placed to the credit of No. 101.

Mr. Dickman, from the Central Labor Union, thanked the membership of No. 101 for the liberal patronage of the Central Labor Day celebration, and announced that a smoker would be given to the Business Men's Association members who aided in making the athletic events on that day a success. He also gave notice that at the next meeting of the Union he would move to have the Union make the Merchants' and Mechanics' Bank the depository for the Union funds.

Mr. Steele, from the Memorial Day Committee, stated that arrangements were being made for observing the day in an appropriate manner, and asked that the sum of $100 be set aside for the use of the committee when the money is available. The request was granted.

The President reported five deaths since last meeting, and also reported changes in standing committees.

The secretary reported transfer of Jacob Persinger and H. J. Frank from passive to active roll; Lizzie Whitmee Lenhart and H. J. Duck from active to passive roll; George W. Brandt from apprentice to full membership, and George S. Colquitt, returned from the Home, to active roll. The secretary also reported that William Talbott, sent to the Home, June 1903, had vacated that institution.

The application of Mr. David Pollock for admission to Union Printers' Home at Colorado Springs was referred to a committee consisting of Messrs. Roberts, Brockwell and Ennis, which committee reported favorably. On motion of Mr. Brockwell, the application was indorsed by the Union and ordered forwarded to the proper authorities.

Mr. Ellis (by request) introduced the following resolution:

WHEREAS, A number of members of this Union whose names are on eligible register of the Civil Service Commission are now employed and carried on the temporary roll of the Government Printing Office; and it being understood to be the policy of the Public Printer to continue to make temporary rather than permanent appointments from our members as the exigencies of the office may demand; and it being believed by this union that one examination by the Civil Service Commission is a sufficient test of a compositor's capabilities; therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Columbia Typographical Union that the Civil Service Commission so amend their rules as to permit the continuance of the names of compositors who have passed an examination and been placed on the eligible register, and which appointments have been made to the temporary roll in the Government Printing Office, without the formality of examination, or filing of jurats and vouchers, unless he should desire to take such examination, in which case he shall make application, an annual request for renewal of such register by the compositor being deemed sufficient guarantee of desire and good faith on his part. Failure on the part of the compositor to make application for such continuance shall debar him from the benefits of this provision.

Resolved, That the foregoing be presented to the Civil Service Commission by a committee of this Union as the earnest desire of this Union, urging them to make such changes in their present rulings, if in their power to do so. Should the matter require Congressional action (if deemed so by the Commission), the same committee is hereby empowered and instructed to place the matter in the proper Congressional channels to secure early and satisfactory action by that body.

Mr. Ellis moved the adoption of the resolution, and a committee appointed to carry out its provisions. Carried.

Mr. McDonough moved that the officers of the Union, together with the author of the resolution, constitute the committee. Carried.

The Union authorized the President to ask permission of the Public Printer to allow a subscription to be passed through the Government Printing Office for the relief of the family of David Pollock.

Mr. Roberts, from the Eight-Hour Committee, asked that the secretary be directed to write President Lynch as to the desirability of members of this Union employed in nine-hour book and job offices voting on the eight-hour proposition in advance of the general referendum vote. The motion was lost.

Wood's Commercial College.

It is with considerable pride that Prof. Court F. Wood announces the twentieth scholastic year of his college, 311 East Capitol street. The great popularity of this school is a result of the absolute thoroughness which is observed in all branches of study, and the further fact that no time is wasted on matters that are not essential in the business training of his pupils. The sons of many of Washington's foremost business men are graduates of Wood's Commercial College, and among Prof. Wood's most treasured possessions are many testimonial letters from hard-headed, prosperous business men who commend in unstinted praise the splendid progress and proficiency which their sons have developed as a result of careful and painstaking instruction received at this school.

Among the several branches taught are bookkeeping, commercial law, shorthand, typewriting, penmanship and arithmetic, and the faculty for the coming term consists of seven skilled instructors. The study rooms at the college are light and cheerful, and an orchestra composed entirely of the pupils will be one of the pleasant features of the coming session. Well-known business men will address the students from time to time during the winter, and these occasions cannot fail to prove interesting and instructive.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1904.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

As most of the readers of the TRADES UNIONIST know, Col. Charles H. Slack, the great and only, recently resigned to take the managing editorship of the Bristol (Va.-Tenn.) Courier. Here is a specimen of his peculiar style of writing, which I clip from that paper of September 15:

VOLUME XVII, NUMBER 1.

On Saturday morning, September 15, 1888, the first number of the Bristol Courier as a daily publication was issued. It was a five-column folio, chock full of bright and interesting reading matter, with a few columns of live advertisements. For sixteen years the paper has pegged along, telling the truth and shaming the devil, rejoicing over the good fortune that came to the community, sorrowing over the griefs and bereavements that befell individuals. We had hope in our heart, high ideas in our head, and blamed poor management in our business office. Consequently our days have not all been those of pleasantness, and our nights have been hot and hustling. We started out to stay and we are here yet. We had colic, cramps, colds and coughs; we suffered from warts, corns and bunions; we went through the goslin period, and got over the big-head in short order, but came very near going by the board with delirious tremendous. We were poor but proud, and kept a piano in the parlor when there was not enough meat in the smokehouse to feed a predatory rat; and wore a diamond on our shirt bosom when there were no heels in our hose. Our troubles are not all over with yet. We are ambitious, and contemplate greater and better things for our faithful and well-wishing constituency. It will take time and cost money to perfect our plans. So, abide with the Courier, pay the printer, and we will do you good. This the first number of volume seventeen.

As every one is engaged in giving his opinion of the new machines and how they should be operated, I will offer some of mine. I can't afford to give it all at once. It is true that my advice is not always taken. I sometimes think that the very moderate speed at which the world is progressing, instead of the lightning-express motion which it ought to have, is due to the fact that very little of my advice is taken. And yet I have been pouring it out as free as water and not half so full of microbes. It is true that this advice has been given before and by others possibly as competent to run the world as I am, so I am more in the position of indorsing it than giving it originally. But this it: In learning to operate a machine, whether a Lanston or a Mergenthaler, don't worry about your speed, but devote yourself to securing accuracy. Get in the habit of requiring of yourself that absolute accuracy which the noble band of brothers collected in the proof room have been so persistently trying to teach you for years. The speed will come afterwards—if ever. It is better to get one line correctly within a certain time than three lines which will have to be reset (on the linotype), with more than hnman likelihood of a further reset when you get the revise. So far you have had "fol. lit." copy on which you do fairly well. What will you do when you have to punctuate and cap and figure for yourselves? We shall see. It is my private opinion that you will have "fol. lit." copy always, and that the office will see the advantage of preparing the copy exactly as it is wanted in order to get the best results. This is a matter that will have to be considered later. But there is no real speed in a rapid but "dirty" operator most of whose matter has to be reset. Commence right and stay that way, and then there will be no doubt of the success of the machines and of yourselves as their operators.

It is with pain that I observe some of the correspondents engaged in unpleasant controversy. It is a thing that can be more profitably avoided than engaged in. Besides, nine times out of ten one of the parties gets mad and takes his playthings and goes home to tell his mother about it, thereby spoiling the afternoon for the rest of us. It is true that sometimes one of the children thinks he can say nasty things without receiving sharp answers, but it does not generally work out that way. Then he feels aggrieved that he has not been treated right. Sometimes a fellow handing out sharp stuff, not being able to read the other fellow's mind, thinks his position is impregnable, until he gets a hard one back of the ear, and then his lips curl and he begins to bawl. A former correspondent once told me that there was nothing he so delighted in as a newspaper scrap, and yet the first time he became embroiled in one, and that with the sunniest-tempered and best-natured one of the whole bunch, he got mad and quit. Play nice, children, and don't fight and tear each other's clothes.

Johnny Ottinger has bought himself a typewriter. It is not probable that this is a disaster by which he will be the only sufferer. He will be wanting to print what he writes, and we will have to read it. We have had much affliction of this sort in the past from him when he had no typewriter, which we bore—perhaps not always patiently and uncomplainingly, but we bore it. In what shape will he break out next? He backcaps naturally and easily. It is second nature with him—perhaps first. Shall we have such a holocaust from him as we have had? I hope for the best, but have my fears.

I had a chat—a little one—with John L. Kennedy in the Record room one day last week. "The Record," said he, "has the finest plant of Mergenthalers in the world. No expense has been spared to make them absolutely perfect. Every machine has all that mechanical skill could give it to make it the best in the world." As we will undoubtedly have the finest corps of operators in the world after they have had just a little more experience and acquired just a little more skill, the Record room will continue to be an institution to which we can Point with Pride.

* * * *

John Crowe returned to Philadelphia the other day, after several weeks of work in the downtown offices, having failed to secure employment as a temporary in the G. P. O., for which I am sorry, for he is one of the most wholesouled, best fellows in the world. But I hope that room may be found for him in the near future and that he may become a permanent institution among us.

Maj. John R. Rankin was called home in a hurry on Monday evening. Mrs. Rankin had fallen down the front stairs with her ten-months-old baby in her arms. While both suffered contusions, neither was dangerously injured.

It was a great satisfaction to every Union printer to notice that the union label has been restored to the proud position which it so long occupied in that sterling artistic journal of printing, the Inland Printer. I never fully understood the merits of the case or the full circumstances under which it was pulled down, but it is glory enough for me to see it again flying, as I knew it would be with Mr. McQuilkin at its head.

The death of Charles Avory Hughes, for a number of years a copyholder in the Proof Division, came as a shock last Monday, from Dover, Del., where he had gone when stricken by the disease which prostrated and carried him away. Some ten days after being in camp with the District militia at Harper's Ferry he was taken with typhoid fever, which developed into typhoid-pneumonia, and terminated fatally in about three weeks. The funeral was on Wednesday, at Dover, his wife's former home, his associates in the office, the militia, and the Masonic fraternity being represented, floral offerings having been sent by the Proof Division. Dr. Hughes graduated several years ago in dentistry and was a bright practitioner. He came here about fifteen years ago, when no more than a boy, from Columbia, Tenn., being but 33 at his death, and the greater part of the time was a copy holder. His father and mother are still living, and besides them he leaves to mourn his untimely death a yonng wife and twin children about three years old.

Clarence B. Langan, who worked in the old Fifth Division while it was under John S. Leech, but who left here about seven years ago on account of bad health, died at Sabinal, Tex., last Friday, after years of suffering. He had gone there with his mother, his only living relative, in the hope of relief, but his life was only prolonged. Tuberculosis, his malady, went from his lungs to his stomach and hastened his death. He was a genial, generous man, and many friends here will learn with regret of his demise.

The papers last Tuesday announced the death of Harry L. Watson at Atlanta, and that the body would be brought to this city for interment. Mr. Watson was formerly employed in the Government Printing Office, but for four or five years has been in Atlanta, where he was very popular and held a responsible position on the Constitution. He was here on a visit during last August.

* * * *

The Nashville (Tenn.) Labor Advocate of September 16 contained a notice of the death of Mrs. Margret Russell Alford, mother of James R. Alford, formerly of the G. P. O., who went to the Philippines about a year ago. On Tuesday there was a report in the office that Alford himself was dead, the word coming that the news of his mother's death had been cabled to him at Manila, receiving the answer that he too was dead and that his body was then on its way to the United States. I have no means at this time of verifying the facts.

A later report is to the effect that Alford is not dead, but had suffered a paryletic stroke and is on his way home.

Though Titus Ellis did not go to St. Louis as a delegate, he brought home a delegate's badge—more than one, I guess, because he gave me one. We'll send him to Toronto if he wants to go.

Mr. John F. O'Sullivan, a linotype expert from the New York factory, is engaged in showing the Record boys how the thing ought to be done. He has a national reputation because of his skill and acquaintance with the machine.

The friends of Howard D. Loud, formerly of the Government Printing Office, but now proofreader for the Law Reporter Printing Company, will learn with regret of the death of his estimable wife, Mrs. Ada Loud, which occurred at the family residence, 432 K street northwest, Monday, September 12, 1904. Mrs. Loud had been under treatment for an operation of the lungs for more than a year, and had but recently returned from a summer outing apparently in splendid health. In the forenoon of the day of her death she had been shopping, and in the afternoon laid down for some rest. She was discovered about 5:45 o'clock cold in death. Physicians immediately summoned pronounced the cause heart failure. Mrs. Loud was a native of Mississippi, 32 years of age, and is survived by husband and two children. Interment was at Glenwood Thursday morning, September 15, after services at the residence by Rev. A. W. Pitzer, of Central Presbyterian Church. The floral offerings of friends were numerous and beautiful, Mr. Loud's co-employes being particularly sympathetic in that respect.

NAVY YARD ITEMS.

Newsy Notes—An Able Argument on Advantages of Union Labor.

On December 1 a board of officers will convene in the Yard for the purpose of examining candidates to fill eleven vacancies in the force of machine draftsmen, ordnance department.

Lieut. W. K. Gise, Master Mechanic J. H. Lawrence, and Master Mechanic Chas. M. Smithson, will be the board to examine apprentice boys under instruction, and report on the progress and promotion.

Andrew Johnson, of E. G. C. Division, has returned after a two months absence. He and his family have been visiting his parents in their Southern Mississippi home. Andy is one of those fellows you are always sorry to see go, and glad to see return. What better can I say of a man?

When Wm. F. Beaumont walked into the Tool Shop last Friday morning to resume labor, the whole department assembled enmasse to welcome their companion who had been absent since April last on sick leave. Billie says he feels a little queer, as he has for several months been hobnobbing with Governors, Congressmen, bankers, and judges at Red Sulphur Springs, W. Va., all "lungers," seeking health restoration. He will fall gracefully into old lines, however, and resume normal conditions.

Secretary Morton visited the Yard this week. He was much pleased with all he saw, gun manufacture being so different to engine construction exciting his curiousity. He looks a broad-guaged man. I hope the connecting rods between him and the wage committee will be the proper length, and that he will so adjust the valves that the lead will not be less than 20 per cent. As engineer of the train we expect him, with the assistance of the wage committee, to bring it in on time, although more than two months delayed.

Many of the followers of fisherman Isaac have returned from their vacations, and the wonderful tales, of the more wonderful catches excites the envy of the less fortunate brothers who failed therein. The chief of all seems to be our old friend, Harry B. Last year, on his return, he positively stated that he visited a certain spot at the mouth of Chesapeake Bay and in one hour he succeeded, with hook and line, in extracting from the briny deep (130 dozen) white perch. This year Harry went to the same grounds. He assures me that he again attempted to reach the same spot but the fish were so thick that they raised his boat almost out of the water and he was glad to escape with his life. "Can any reader of THE TRADES UNIONIST beat this?"

The Batchelor Club of Capitol Hill is without a president. The late president, Wm. Laurence, has succumbed to Cupid's arrow and has become a benedict. His days of conquest are over. No more will he parade the avenue and make goo-goo eyes at the fair damsels and receive in return the glances that make him the envy of all his companions. "Buck," the masher, has had his day. Thirty-three times he has visited the City Hall to procure the license that united two hearts that beat as one. Thirty-three times he has stood as the best man and witnessed the act that joined the twain in one flesh. But that is in the past. On June 7, at Alexandria, Va., by the Rev. Jos. A. Jeffries, of Trinity Church, Wm. T. Laurence and Miss Minnie I. Beatty were married. R. I. P.

The Naval Gun Factory Band, under the leadership of Prof. Chas. F. Stanley, gave a concert in the Navy Yard Saturday evening. The music throughout was of high order, which was fully recognized by the vast concourse of people who filled the yard. The following program was followed strictly to the number:

PROGRAM.

1. March, "Vidette"—Kuebler.
2. A Japo Rhapsody, "Karama"—Mabel McKinley.
3. Selection from Opera, "Lucruzia Borgia"—Donizetti.
4. Polka—Cornet Solo, "The Pioneer" (Mr. James Joyce)—Durand.
5. Waltz, "Daughter of Love"—Bennett.
6. Intermezzo, "A Missouri Mule"—Blake.
7. Selection from Opera, "Wang"—Arr. by Thomas.
8. Patrol, "American"—Meacham.
9. Waltz, "Sounds From Erin"—Bennett.
10. March, "Rowsey Dowsey Girls"—Asher.

Finale, "Star Spangled Banner"—Key.

The wage committee, Emmet L. Adams, chairman; David Thomas, and T. F. Dornin, accompanied by President Samuel Elder, of Columbia Lodge, and James O'Connell, International President I. A. of M., had a pleasant interview last Wednesday with Secretary Morton relative to an increase of pay for the employes of the Naval Gun Factory. The committee were much pleased with their visit, as they found that the Secretary was willing to work on a broad-gauge basis—one who believes that the laborer is worthy of his hire. After acquainting himself with all the particulars, as to the difference between the pay of the machinists in the Yard and other Departments, he will ask for another conference with the committee, and a conclusion will be arrived at, which will no doubt be satisfactory to the Secretary and the committee. As President Roosevelt has announced himself favorable to the increase, based on equity and justice, the committee feel assured of a reasonable increase in pay.

UNIONISM.

"Does Unionism pay the Government?" is one of the momentous questions of day. Experts have appeared before Congress, pro and con, and yet there is no solution of this great problem.

Let us take, for instance, Columbia Lodge, No. 174, I. A. of M., who controls the machinists in the Washington Navy Yard on one hand, and the Navy Department and its officials on the other.

It is well known in all the mechanical world that the work of manufacturing ordnance is such that great skill is required, and that it takes years to acquire that delicate sense of touch of the mechanic that will enable him to perfectly perform his duties as a gun builder.

Approximately, there are about eighteen hundred machinists employed in gun manufacture. Of these Columbia Lodge has on its roster fourteen hundred, or about 80 per cent.

Now let us see how Columbia Lodge protects the Government. In the first place an applicant must truthfully state on his application where he served his apprenticeship; where last employed, and the kind of work he is best adapted to. He must be vouched for by at least two members that he is a sober and industrious mechanic. So much before he gains admittance. After his admittance the shop stewards see to it that he performs his duty strictly to the letter; and, if he fails, either through idleness, intemperance or failure as a craftsman it is their duty to bring him before the union on charges; and if proven guilty to be fined or expelled.

Is not Columbia Lodge doing its duty in protecting the Government when it holds its members to a strict account as herein stated?

It is of course here understood that those mechanics who are not in membership with the union are not subjected to any inspection of said shop stewards, as they are not in any sense accountable to the union for any infraction of the rules of the Yard. The difference between the two is simply this: The union man is ruled by two governing forces, the strict rules of the union and the supervising force, while the non-union man is only subjected to the one, the supervising force.

The issue is here in plain words. The supervising force do not understand the situation, or they would, from the highest foreman to the leading man, become affiliated with the union, with the full approval of the officers of the Naval Gun Factory.

Let us see for a moment what benefit would be obtained. Men in authority are looked upon as they, who by superior ability and by strict attention to their duties, have been promoted from the ranks to be supervisors. This being granted what a power they would be in an organization in protecting the parties they represent as well as those under their jurisdiction in framing legislation for the craft, and providing the Government with the best class of sober and industrious mechanics obtainable.

But this is not the case. I say it with regret, simply because of a lack of understanding between the two parties.

Admiral O'Niel, ex-Chief of Ordnance Bureau, has often declared that there are no equals to the gun builders in the Naval Gun Factory, and yet he did not know that when he made this declaration that to a great extent it was due to the strict censorship exercised by Columbia Lodge on its members.

Let us take up another question. The building of the battleship Connecticut by union labor, and the Louisiana by non-union labor. It is well known that the Newport News Ship Building Co., as soon as the contract was entered into, were in perfect readiness to proceed with the construction of that vessel. Was the Government in a like position? Not so. Everything necessary had to be constructed, from the building slips to the monster cranes for handling the work; a force of men to be organized in all the different trades; and yet with all these objections to be met, the Connecticut, being built in the Government yard at New York by union labor on a basis of eight hours per day, including holidays, with pay, is really in advance of the Louisiana which is being constructed by a nonunion firm at ten hours per day, with no holidays with pay.

Is this not demonstrative proof to silence the opponents of the eight-hour labor law pending a regort from Mr. Cortelyou on the matter?

Are not the facts herein given substantial evidence that it pays the Government to encourage union labor. Who can answer nay?

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

First Division.

Owing to other duties my career as a correspondent for the First Division closes with this issue. In the brief time I have acted as such I have tried not to offend. What I said in the beginning I repeat now—my object has been merely to create a more brotherly interest in each other. To my friends in general and in the First Division in particular, as a correspondent I bid you an affectionate adieu.

Will some gentleman in the Third Division please pull the plug?

Ed. S. Geyer has again been detailed to duty in the average room.

Ed. Latham, 97, is subbing for Oliver Shaw while the latter is on leave.

Imposer T. M. Donn is taking his second throw at the leave business and is booked for twelve days.

Chas. F. Purdy, 5, is compelled to remain away from his work owing to the presence of diphtheria at his home.

W. R. Verlander is again locking up forms in the "Y." His twenty-eight days of rest came to a close last Monday.

Chas. Durno, 3, has been detailed to practice up on the linotype. Mr. Durno had several months' experience a few years ago.

Dennis Sheehan, helper, has been transferred from this division to the Gazette, and put to work on the Lanston caster.

Frank M. Thompson, 102, is taking fifteen days leave, and during that time intends to get better acquainted with Washington.

R. L. Davidson is slated for twelve days leave. Mr. Davidson just completed a vacation of fifteen days' duration a few weeks ago.

Maker-up Fred W. Follett, of the "Y," is enjoying camping life on the banks of the Potomac. Mr. Follett is booked for fifteen days leave.

Edgar P. Bennett has taken up his abode in this division and can be found on Slug 25. Like his predecessor, Mr. Doty, he comes from the Second.

W. D. Skeen, 43, returned on Monday from a ten day trip to Atlantic City. While there last week Billy witnessed the old Atlantic on a rampage, and says the sight was beautiful.

Voler V. Viles, the three V'd young gentleman from the State where they have to be shown, has gone to his old home in Springfield, Mo., for sixty days, Mrs. Viles and young son accompanying.

J. W. Mathers, maker-up in the "Y," is looking over his estate near Vineland, N. J. I am told by his fellow workmen that his estate consists of several beautiful sand hills, and a few droves of well-bred mosquitoes.

The following was handed to me by a suburbanite:

"The average farmer may not be a religious man, yet when he sees his fruit trees covered with caterpillars he is one of the first to say 'Let us spray.'"

The labor force was reduced last week by the following, who are taking leave. P. R. Harvey, of the "Y" press; E. R. Gaither, stationed at the form elevators, and that distinguished son of Ham, the astute statesman and polished floor polisher, Simon Pocher.

During the last few weeks, D. T. Lloyd, of this division, was the winner in four out of five contests in solving the New York Journal maxim. The competition not only rests in solving the maxims, but in formulating in a 20-word idea, the benefits to be derived from shrewd advertising.

NOTES OF LAST SUNDAY'S MEETING.

The meeting was fairly well attended.

James Monroe Kreiter watched the game from the bench.

Joe Goodkey started, but "threw a shoe" in the stretch and failed to finish.

Harry C. Knapp, of the Times, has been appointed a member of the Grievance Committee.

F. C. Roberts was present and made a "pungent and terse" report on the eight-hour movement.

John B. Dickman told about the Central Labor body—and also about Merchants and Mechanics' Bank.

Secretary George Seibold makes an efficient reading clerk. He should, however, use his stage voice while reading.

Philip Steele, of the Memorial Committee, will have $100 and the best talent in the city to make Memorial Day a success.

Having recovered in health and confidence, President John R. Berg handled the "big stick" in a most satisfactory manner.

"Judge" Chas. Ennis, of the Laws Committee, believes in holding down expenses. But the "spenders" are too numerous for him.

Among the ladies present was the charming Miss Teresa McDonald. In a new fall bonnet I think I noticed a little delegatorial bee.

For the first time in over two years Ex-President Joe Johnson was heard on the floor of the Union. And this meant a treat to those present.

Smiling Joe Stelle, of the Relief Committee, generally has a good report to make. Joe believes his mission is to give relief before death, not after.

Millard Peake said he was a believer in three fives—five hours work, $5 a day, and five days a week. Then a low voice asked, "How many drinks?"

Harry Sauter, as chairman of the Business Committee, had his first battle. But he had the hot end of the stick and his committee's decision was lost.

Frank A. Kidd was there with the goods and spoke at length on several subjects. I think I will have to do a little christening myself and call him the Anderson of No. 101.

A change of heart has come over Hugh Everett. One month ago he wanted a fine of $25 placed on members failing to observe a boycott. Sunday he wanted a $5 fine removed.

For the benefit of the members who wished to know where we would be "located" if all members of No. 101 attended the meetings, I would suggest we would still be on G street.

F. N. Whitehead took a hand in the game to advocate the eight-hour proposition. "Whitie" returned last week from a 'six weeks' tour, including several places in the United States and Texas.

The Amos Cummings Memorial Committee presented its final report and asked to be discharged. But the good work performed led the Union to make the committee permanent. Chairman T. J. Rowe, Chas. T. Graff and T. A. Bynum are deserving of congratulations,

CHAS. S. GUNN.

Ira M. Ingalls comes to us from the State Branch.

Chas. Indermauer was sick a few days last week.

Chas. C. Cassell was sick several days last week.

S. M. Milburn, laborer, was assigned to the Second Tuesday.

H. J. McClurg and Benj. B. F. Graves have been transferred to the ring alley.

Nat. G. Watts, one of the ring-alley trusties, is now running proof press No. 2.

Wonder what the printers of the Library Branch are doing. Let us hear from you, Brother Nelgner.

Returned this week from leave: E. N. Bunker, V. T. Howard, H. A. McPike, and S. F. Gillespie.

Transfers to this room from the Gazette Division: J. W. Cross, Frank R. Trimble, and W. A. Lavalette.

D. R. Walters has been suffering from poison in his legs contracted while out bathing, but is now able to work.

Edgar P. Bennett, who was formerly bank man on the night side in this room, was transferred last week to the First Division.

Joseph T. Geraci (pronounced she) lost a pocket-book containing $5 one morning last week. By noon it was returned to him. Mr. Patch found it.

Frank Lippincott called attention the other day to the fact that six of the eight men in his alley were named Frank. One other whose name was not such said he was frank by nature and that made seven.

The following came over Tuesday from the Gazette Division: William Schmidt, W. A. Ball, Hugh Everett, Wade H. Crowther, S. E. Gover, S. H. Lenoir, A. E. Smoot, William J. Burr, S. M. Simpson, Samuel Esmay.

Tommy Dougherty was showing a visitor the different boxes for the type one day, whereupon the visitor remarked: I can understand how you see large letters like the "m" so readily, but do not see how you so quickly locate the small ones, such as the "l" and "i".

E. E. Richards received a letter from W. J. Phillips, who lately went to San Antonio for his health. He says he worked seven straight nights on the Express Mergenthalers as soon as arriving there. Before leaving here Mr. Phillips had just been to the factory in Brooklyn to perfect himself in the operation of the machines.

The resolution introduced at the meeting Sunday by Mr. Newcombe, of this division, and included in the report of last Sunday's meeting, will be thoroughly appreciated by temporary men in the G. P. O. If carried out it will save them much time and expense each year in making out applications and swearing to acknowledgments before notaries.

Dick Kendall, of Arkansas, who worked on the bill force last winter (and for many winters past) is in town. He has been running a freight engine on the B. & O. between Grafton and Wheeling, the fourth division. His visit here is due to a lay off on account of a head-on collision he had. Many bruises and sores testify to his participation in the smash up. He expects to work here this winter, the weather being too severe for railroading. He is looking healthy and stronger than when he left here last spring.

L

Without letter L there would be no loop-hole or leak,
Nor other words numerous in the language we speak,
And try as you might, you could never hope to succeed
(Should the indispensable L ne'er more serve your need)
In constructing a link out of ink, a lair out of air,
Nor other things more needful, as you're doubtless aware.

M

A favorite letter is this with miners of gold,
And of all other metals that are dug up and sold,
And the reason assigned, you may have heard it before,
Is that this letter alone will make more out of ore.

N

'Tis easy to see what lack of pleasure there'd be
If the letter N by mischance should cease to enhance.
Our joy gladness and glee, our mirth laughter, etc.,
Because there's no room to doubt, if N was knocked out,
That henceforth nonsense and fun this sad world would shun.

O

There's no resemblance at all between an O and a horse,
In the matter of looks, nor as a matter of course,
And yet it isn't a hardship to conclusively show
That a mere G is sufficient to make them both go.

Some leaves have been taken, others are fading, and leaves to print will soon be here. All these and the suspicion that Charley Leeds has made his last rounds in the free distribution of lead pencils at twenty-five cents each are sure horbingers of that peace and quiet which follows a season with the smart set at Newport, a week's splash at Atlantic City, a days frolic at Marshall Hall or Cabin John's, or the sublime loneliness of the country farmhouse where rest comes in great bunks and everything is lovely and in profusion—except modern improvements. Really, it does some good to get back. Just like being reinstated.

Steve Caldwell is sole owner of one of the best equipped and most elaborately furnished restaurants and billard parlors in Albany, and to all appearances is "making money hand over fist." Steve is full of reminicences of printer life in Washington, and his interest in the "boys" here is not shadowed by the good fortune which seemingly has placed him above the necessity of asking favors of Uncle Sam. His place is on Broadway, should you have occasion to ring him up.

Bureau Athletics vs. Unions.

The rooters from the Bureau will shout for the Bureau Athletics and the Government Printing Office fans will root for the Union team. As this game will practically close the amateur baseball season in the District, and Saturday being the last half holiday to be enjoyed by Government employees this summer, a large crowd no doubt will witness the sport. Both teams are on their mettle and will play their best to win. Admission to grounds, grandstand included, 25 cents. Tickets, 25 cents. Tickets can be obtained from the managers, M. E. His remains were brought to this city, and the funeral took place from the residence of his sister, Mrs. E. L. Robertson, 142 U street northwest, Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock. THE NONPARIEL MINING CO.

R. W. Burkhart Visits Its Property on Thunder Mountain, Idaho.

As many of the boys know Mr. R. G. Bailey, formerly of the G. P. O., and as many of them are deeply interested in the outcome of the Nonpariel Mining and Developing Co., I have decided that a short description of my trip to the far West would be of interest to all.

I left Washington on July 7, and after stopping at the Exposition four days, proceeded to Dixie, Idaho. My journey from Kansas City to Denver was over the Santa Fe route, thence to Billings, Mont., over the Burlington, and thence to Spokane, Wash., and to Stites, Idaho, over the Northern Pacific.

The journey from Kansas City to Stites consumed four days. At Stites I took the mail stage to Elk City, sixty miles over a fine mountain road, making this part of the trip in a day and a half. Mr. Bailey met me at Elk City with three horses—a saddle horse each, and one animal to carry the pack, consisting of shelter tent, bedding, food supplies and camp outfit.

From Elk we visited all the big mines in that district, traveling toward the biggest of them all—the Printer Group—on our journey.

After two days we reached the cabin, Mr. Bailey's chateau, built with his own hands.

Here I was glad to get a few days' rest from a very hard and wearisome trip. For a raw recruit to stride a mountain cayuse for ten to twelve hours per day, up and down the breaks, is enough to tire out even the experienced.

At the cabin I found ease and comfort, with no noise of cars and hurrying to and fro of restless crowds; but here, amid the hoary and rock-ribbed hills the fresh mountain air seemed to invigorate the system as a tonic.

I found Mr. Bailey in the best of health, he having gained about twenty pounds since his advent into the mountains. He has become a lover of nature, studying her formations and creations all of his time. But of course it is her rocks that he is studying more than anything else.

Regarding the Printer Group, I will say that I was more than pleased with what I saw on the properties. One can form only a poor conception of those big ore dykes by reading about them—you have to see them to appreciate their immensity. There are a dozen or more dykes that vary in width from 75 to 150 feet, running for more than a mile up the mountain. Gigantic outcrops as big as a house can be seen on these dykes. To me there seemed to be untold millions of tons of this brown porphyry and porphyritic quartz there. I selected seven composite samples for assay from the dykes. These samples gave an average of $9.24 per ton—$4.54 being the lowest and $21.72 being the highest value obtained. The latter was from the end of our 80-foot tunnel.

I studied the properties carefully and intelligently and the conditions and opportunities for us there are not overdrawn in the least. I bank on the assays altogether. I selected them honestly and fairly for a test of the general run of our ores, and I believe they were honestly assayed by Mr. Manning at Boise. Thirty samples assayed have given an average of about $8 per ton. If we get an average of $3 per ton our property will produce untold millions of dollars.

I visited a big mine 40 miles from ours, which is a "dead ringer" for our property, except that our ore bodies are larger and our general assays average higher. I obtained the following facts and data from this property, known as the Hogan mine at Orogrande, Idaho. The ore bodies consist of large porphyry dykes, the ore being blasted from the mountain side—the way we can work ours. A 20-stamp amalgam mill was crushing 100 to 120 tons every twenty-four hours, the ore averaging about $2.50 to $3 per ton. Power was furnished from an open cut ditch, which gave ample pressure for a water wheel. Fourteen men constituted the entire force, seven on each shift. This property was making big money and is said to be worth $1,000,000. This is its third year of operation. Ore was being mined and milled for about 50 cents per ton. "What others can do, we can do." If this company can pay big dividends on $3 rock from a 20-stamp mill, surely we can do as well if we have a $9 rock.

The directors of the company here have signed a contract with Mr. M. H. Ramage, 606 Bond Building, for the sale of stock sufficient for milling equipment. After October 1 all stock sold here will pass throngh his hands, and he will sell the same for 35, 40, and 50 cents per share. Stock may be ordered of the directors until then at 25 cents per share.

Mr. Bailey is very enthusiastic as to the future outcome of this proposition. He would have given up and quit the hills long ago had he not strong convictions of ultimate success there.

As side enjoyments of my trip one recreation was trout fishing in the Little Salmon River on the properties. The first evening in an hour and a half the catch was 8 pounds. I had the pleasure of eating wild grouse, and other wild meats. I did not get sight of a live deer while there, but had to come back to old Missouri to see one—mine. There are many deer and bear there. Mr. Bailey keeps himself supplied with wild meats during the winter season

Work will be pushed this winter and next year the mine ought to become a producer. At least that is what we have set our pegs to do.

Bindery Notes.

Bill Glover has returned to his first love after a short stay at the Navy Department.

Willie Wild Wave proved to be a very good entertainer for his colored audience the other evening on First street.

That was a most unpopular order which decreed that we should work all day last Saturday. "Condition of the work" was the reason assigned.

"Doc." Osborne is daily adding more accomplishments to his already long list. He is now known as the champion amatuer photographer.

"Pa" Roche has been the recepient of some very interesting literature during the week and he is wondering who credited him with being such a linguist.

If all the boys get married this fall who say they will there should be a notable increase of the Benedicts in the Bindery. Bill Holt is the latest one to so declare.

It is said that Johnnie McLean is anxious to cast a vote this fall, and with that end in view has started to raise a fierce beard so as to give the impression that he has reached his majority.

John McCarty, Henry Hoiby and Billy Ferguson went on a fishing trip the other day, and between the three of them they managed to land one cat fish, six inches long. Possibly the "bait" was bad.

Bookbinders are urged to keep away from Chicago and to pay no attention to charges against the officers of the unions there. The aforesaid officers have the confidence, not only of the locals most directly concerned, but they also have the approval of the International Brotherhood.

One of the bindery boys stopped into a drug store the other evening to drink an egg frappe with Harry Figg, who has recently returned from a tour of the Southwest, and when he, Figg, wanted to ascertain the time, it was noticed that he had to borrow an oyster knife and a keg mallet to open his watch. They have strange ways of doing things in the West.

There is food for reflection in the following from the quarterly bulletin of the New York Bureau of Labor: "Twenty of the forty-seven disputes, between employers and employes during April, May and June resulted in the favor of the employers, and only five in the favor of the employes, while nine were compromised. The compromises were nearly all made on demands for increased wages, which was still the leading cause for disputes. The employers were almost uniformly successful in the disputes involving trade unionism." It may be that trades unionism is, after all, not the ultimate.

PASTE.

In purchasing goods from advertisers in this paper, do not fail to mention the fact that you saw the advertisement in THE TRADES UNIONIST. It will accord you good treatment at the hand of the salesman, and incidentally help the paper.

A Drastic Labor Law.

An old labor law of England, in force 121 years ago, would satisfy the most radical member of the Manufacturers' Association. It contained the following six clauses:

1. Any tailor who joined a union was to be sent to jail for two months.
2. Tailors must work from 6 in the morning until 8 at night.
3. Wages were not to be higher than 48 cents a day.
4. Each tailor was to be allowed 3 cents for breakfast.
5. Any tailor who refuses to work was to be imprisoned for not more than two months.
6. If any employer paid higher wages he was to be fined $25, and the workmen who took the increase were to be sent to jail for two months.

A Hospital Town.

When the new hospital in Vienna, of which the foundation stone was recently laid by the Emperor of Austria, is completed, it will form quite a town in itself.

The total area covered is 2,400,000 square feet, and there will be forty separate buildings, of which thirty-two will be clinics or hospitals and the remaining eight will be devoted to offices and residences for the staff. All the clinics will have flat roofs with gardens, so that patients, particularly consumptives, can be in the open air as much as possible. Each patient will have 1,030 square feet space, the largest proportion of space allotted to a patient in any hospital in the world.

A correspondent of the Frankfurter Zeitung says that the ultimate cost will be from $7,000,000 to $8,000,000.

The hospital will be on the "pavilion" or "cottage" plan. Each pavilion, with its sick wards, operating and lecture rooms, will form a hospital by itself, and of these there will be eighteen. The hospital will have 2,300 beds. The magnificent operating rooms will be of a new type. In the clinics for infectious diseases the patient will be separated from the professor and the students by a glass partition.

A number of the medical students will live in the hospital for the purpose of close study and observation. The latest technical achievements will be utilized throughout the institution.—London Daily Mail.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of September 20, 1904.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at the usual hour by the Secretary. In the absence of the Chairman and Vice-Chairman, Delegate Desmond was chosen to preside.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

Communications from Tile Layers Union, No. 2, and Steam Fitters Helpers, giving notice of the number of cards required for the next quarter were read and referred to the Secretary.

A bill for extra calls on telephone service was read and referred to the trustees.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Delegate Nothnagel, from the Central Labor Union, reported the action of that body on the communication from the Council relative to building trade unions being allowed representation in that body which were not represented in the Council, as being placed on file until the Executive Committee had made report, and that preparations were being made for the "smoker;" also that a donation of $100 had been made to Milford Spohn for services on Legislative Committee.

Delegate Ratigan, from the special committee to meet the Executive Committee of the Central Labor Union, reported that Delegate Desmond and himself had attended two meetings of the committee and that a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Council had been called to meet the Executive Committee of the Central Labor Union on the evening of September 21. The report was received as progress.

The Business Agent stated that he had carried out the request of the Council made at the previous meeting.

Under roll call of unions to submit business, twenty-one delegates from fourteen unions were marked present.

Hod Carriers asked that the Secretary be directed to inform Captain Sewell, at the Arsenal, of the scale of wages in effect in the District for hod carriers. The request was granted.

Steam Fitters stated that their secretary had been directed to notify the Council of the number of cards required, but that the secretary had evidently neglected so doing.

Tile Layers Helpers, through their secretary, ordered thirty cards.

Slate and Tile Rooters stated that at a special meeting of their union all men in the employ of the Mead Roofing Co. had been called off at the request of the Sheet Metal Workers.

Delegate Desmond offered the following resolution: That all unions affiliated with this Council be required to subscribe to at least as many cards as they pay per capita tax to their National or International Unions. The resolution was, after discussion, laid on the table as an amendment to the By-Laws.

The Secretary was directed to communicate with the Granite Cutters Union and the Washington Lodge of Machinists relative to the number of cards carried by their membership, and also with all unions which have had no delegates present at the meetings of Council for the past few months.

There being nothing further brought to the attention of the delegates the Council adjourned.

THE TRADES UNIONIST.

OFFICIAL ORGAN CENTRAL LABOR UNION, WASHINGTON BRANCH, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Vol. IX. No. 16. WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1904. Price, 3 Cents.

THE CENTRAL LBAOR UNION

Corby Bros. Commended For Attitude Toward Carriage Workers.

THE BAKERS CONTRACT READY

Grievance Committee Makes an Able Report—Appropriation of $25 For Textile Workers—Musicians Active in Fight Against Kernan—District Work Under Investigation.

The regular weekly meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8 p. m. on Monday by President Dickman.

In the absence of Secretary Winslow Delegate Dietrich acted as secretary.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

Credentials presented by Perry Miller to represent Bricklayers Union, No. 1, were received and the delegate seated.

A bill for printing, amounting to $15.75, was approved and ordered paid.

A bill from Delegate Silver and one for incidental expenses were also approved and ordered paid.

The Grievance Committee reported that the contract under consideration with the Master Bakers and Local No. 118 was nearly completed.

In the case of Hod Carriers against Norcross Bros., the committee reported progress.

The Grievance Committee reported that the Tharp case with the Bartenders had been settled.

The committee asked for further time in case of Firemen against Newspaper Publishers Association.

A communication was received from H. H. Humble and F. H. Hambright, members of the Sycamore Island Club, in which they disclaimed any knowledge of certain work being given to a nonunion firm for construction of a bridge by the club, and that had it been known to certain members of the club that such was the case an effort would have been made to aid in having the work given to a fair firm. Placed on file.

On the appeal for assistance for the Textile Workers sent out by the American Federation of labor, the sum of $25 was appropriated.

A communication was read from Local No. 1103, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, stating that a fine of five dollars was to be imposed on any of its members patronizing Kernan's Lyceum Theater. Placed on file.

ROLL CALL OF UNIONS.

Delegate Brinkman, from Carriage and Wagon Workers, stated that the firm of Corby Bros., bakers, had let an order for new wagons, but on attention being called to Corby Bros. by Carriage and Wagon workers Union, the wagons were returned because they were built in a nonunion factory. Delegate Brinkman moved a vote of thanks to Corby Bros. for their attitude in sustaining a Central Labor Union contract. Carried unanimously.

Musicians Union called attention to the fact that Kernan's and Lafayette Theater were on the unfair list, and urged delegates to bring the matter to the attention of their respective unions.

Grocery Clerks Union called attention to Bernard Walz, grocer, on the unfair list, and asked that all union men insist on buying groceries only where the blue button is worn by the clerk.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The Contract Committee reported on controversy between Bottlers Union and Bottlers Protective Association, and filed a letter in the case, which was subsequently referred to the Bottlers Union.

The Smoker Committee reported progress.

On motion, fifty copies of the Union Herald was subscribed to for one year.

Attention being called to the fact that certain contracts on District work was being done in excess of an eight-hour day, the Legislative Committee were instructed to look into the matter and secure legal advice.

Adjourned.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

Argument in Favor of its Adoption to Change Existing Conditions.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

In the last issue of THE TRADES UNIONIST attention was directed, in the Bindery Notes, to the Quarterly Bulletin of the New York Bureau of Labor in which statistics were given to show how few of the "disputes" between employers and employes were settled in favor of the employe, and the comment was made by the writer calling attention to the report, that perhaps, after all, trades unionism was not the ultimate.

This is a question which has for a long time occupied the thoughts of many of the thinking trades unionists of the country. They have seen their "best laid plans gang aft aglee," and they have felt correspondingly discouraged. They have seen many attempts to enforce scales of wages, or to bring about better trade conditions thwarted by court injunctions, organized "strike breakers" or by military interference. They have listened to the soft words of the public man who tells them that the right to organize into unions is a fundamental one which no legislative, judicial, or military body has the right to curtail or abrogate. Yet they find, on the other hand, that when these organizations attempt to put into effect any one of the principles or purposes of the organization they are met with the rebuke of these very same public men who tell them that their methods are unlawful, revolutionary, and calculated to reduce order to chaos, government to anarchy. They see their chosen leaders caricatured, maligned and persecuted. Their spokesmen in "disputes" refused further employment at the trade they are accustomed to follow; they see even the university professors denounce their movement as one liable to reproduce the horrors of the French Revolution or the Commune. Anarchists, Socialists, and Trades Unionists are inextricably mixed up in the daily press as being of the same class, giving an entirely erroneous impression to that large class of our citizens who never think of seeking any other avenue of information save that prepared by the illy-informed, or venal, editor of one of our "journals of civilization."

All these things and many more which these merely suggest have caused many of us to look around and see if there is not some way in which we could employ our organizations so as to make them more effective. While I can speak for myself alone in this public utterance, I feel sure that I have many in agreement with me.

Any suggestion to "go into politics" as we now understand "politics" is out of the question, for it would only result in the disintegration of the organization, because of the machinations of the corrupt politicians, some of whom I regret to say hold membership in our various local unions. But we can "go into politics" in a way so as to minimize, if not entirely obliterate that partisan feeling which has proven so destructive to the purposes of labor organizations. My idea is to devote the whole strength of the American Federation of Labor to the bringing about of a pure democracy in this country by the means of the Initiative and Referendum.

For the benefit of those who may not be acquainted with this idea I may briefly explain it in this way: The Initiative will permit a certain percentage of the voters in any community, say 5 per cent, to present to the voters any proposition which to them may seem wise to enact into law. If a majority of the voters decide that it should be enacted it becomes a law, and no court will have the power to annul it. If, on the other hand, it should be defeated by the voters it fails to become a law. The Referendum is designed to permit the same proposition of voters to petition the proper State officer to refer to the voters any proposition which may have passed the State Legislature and which will not become a law until the majority of voters shall so decide by giving it their approval. If a majority approve it, it is a law; if a majority veto it the proposition fails of enactment.

This system merely gives the people the right to determine what laws shall govern them. Every Democrat, Republican, Prohibitionist, Socialist, Populist or other "ist" may unite upon this idea without sacrificing anything he may hold dear. Everyone who has any pet notion which he desires to have enacted into law may join in this movement enthusiastically and feel that he will at least have a chance to get the voters to consider his proposition. It involves no breaking away from party ties; it means no dissolution of the labor union but does mean a complete break up of corruption, fraud, bribery and all their accompaniments in partisan politics.

Are the Trades Unionists ready for it?

Bindery Notes.

That was a bold crowd that braved that Suitland Park trip last Sunday.

Bill Reese, with the sagacity born of experience, went to have his hair cut unaccompanied by Fogerty this time.

Master Polk's special duties must be enervating, as it is noticed he is drinking daily from a bottle labeled "Paregoric."

It is rumored that Cupid is playing havoc with the hearts of a ruler and his feeder. Can any one guess the happy couple?

J. St. Clair Hambley has just returned from a week's vacation. It is rumored that he was hobnobbing with the smart set at Newport.

Chicago, otherwise the Windy City, is always to the fore. Joe Motyka is now the most skillful chess player around these parts.

McQueen's praise of Detroit is unbounded. He will endeavor to revisit that scene of his delightful experiences at the earliest opportunity.

The old lady who sells candy in the Bindery finds a good customer in Jake Hales. He does not eat it all himself. Now the question is for whom does he buy it?

If Charlie Benker should ever desire to give up his job in the Bindery he could make good living as a guide. He has had considerable experience in that line lately.

Prof. Charles W. Eliot, of Harvard, claims that ice cream soda has high balls beat a mile. "Whispering Willie" says "there's a man who knows what he is talking about."

The apron man is happy whenever he approaches big "Bill" Johnston, as the latter orders about a half a dozen at a time. "Bill" must have a clean one each day. "Youth must have its fling," you know.

The bold Barney Collins is living in glad expectancy in connection with his coming trip to New York where he will not only have his name placed on the registration book, but will visit his old haunts and renew old acquaintances.

Bill Brady has nominated the following for places on his bowling team. They will have to "make good" or they will be released. Holt, Gaffney, Haiby, McNally, Rook, Hope, Bergerson, Huss, Niehus, Fowler, Warren, Brassil, Dreis, and Hammerbacher.

Jack Hasson is making preparations for his trip to the "Old Dart." He fully expects to meet many of his ancestors and will take great pleasure in introducing "King" Brady, who will accompany him. We daresay that Brady will find little difference between Ireland and Boston.

Union Label in England.

The American trade union label has not as yet been much adopted in Britain, only three unions having attempted its introduction. Those are the felt hat makers, cigarmakers, and the East London Jewish bakers. The latter union was refused an injunction against two employers who are issuing the label but refuse to conform to the conditions laid down by the union, which is now endeavoring to obtain an order from the court of chancery under the copyright marks act. The case can not come on for some months yet, and in the meantime the two firms are using and issuing the label.

PERKINS PHILOSOPHY.

Bill Perkins is a printer man toiling at the Spess.
Says he: This work is hard enough, although, at that, I guess
I'd rather be a plugging here to get my forty-eight
Than have some other jobs I've read about of late.

Kuropatkin he's the guy that's up against the Japs.
He's going to win a battle soon—that is, he may, perhaps.
If he should ever want a sub, it's up to me to state
My job suits me just to a T, I'll strive for forty-eight.

Rockefeller has some pleasant work—it's mostly counting "mon,"
But his dinner is a glass of milk and one Uneeda bun.
I may never reach his standard, but I'll not complain at fate,
I can digest a deviled crab and set my forty-eight.

Bishop Potter caused a stir when he expressed his views
That a man could mix religion and a good straight drink of booze.
What the church will do to Potter will be too sad to relate
He'd have no time for side lines if he was setting forty-eight.

General Corbin has some bumps due him—coming very soon—
For his recent order boycotting the soldier's honeymoon.
I'm glad he is not boss up here, or it would be my fate
To always wear a dress suit while setting forty-eight.

And there are many others who have fame and wealth to burn
Whose troubles far exceed the empty honors they may earn.
In their ceaseless strife for glory they seek happiness too late
And Bill Perkins does not envy them while setting forty-eight.

Women Suffrage.

From Progress.]

Colorado and Wyoming have women filling the office of State Superintendent of Public Instruction.

In Boston, where women vote on school questions, there is a seat for every child and full time instruction.

In New York City, where women cannot vote on school affairs, there are 89,000 children on half time instruction.

In Wyoming, where women have been voting for over thirty years, there are fewer illiterate children than in any State in the Union.

In 1902, over fifty-eight per cent of all the pupils in the public and private secondary schools in the United States were girls, and thirteen per cent of girls as against ten per cent of boys complete the High School course.

The Danish Folkething has admitted women to the inspectorship of schools and all the higher educational positions. It has also unanimously passed the second reading of the bill to give rate-paying women the Communal Franchise, unless they are married women or servants.

Miss Ellis Meredith, of Colorado, in reply to the question whether women in her State neglected their homes to seek for political offices, said: "They do not any more than they neglect their homes to seek office in clubs or church societies. Sometimes they take office to earn bread for those dependent on them. More women neglect their homes and children to play cards and attend social functions than to do political work."

The question of woman's labor is becoming a factor in the business life of the City of Mexico, as well as in some of the other cities of Mexico. Only a few years ago this help was almost unknown in offices and stores, but each recurring year the supply is becoming larger. The wages paid to young women are not as yet very large but the prospects are that as they become more efficient the standard of wages paid them will improve.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

For the information of the gentlemen discussing the new terminal station at lunch hour I submit the following:

Partly on account of the farsightedness of the Pennsylvania Railroad and partly on account of the liberality of Congress, the new terminal station at Washington will be the largest and finest in the world. It will follow the mandate of the act of Congress providing for its construction and be "monumental in character." Its cost, exclusive of viaducts, tunnel or power plants, will be about $5,500,000. The total cost of the improvements now under way will be $14,000,000.

In many respects the new station will be a model for the world, so far as steam railroads are concerned. New ideas are employed in construction, arrangement of the tracks, baggage and mail facilities, conveniences for the public and the vast amount of "elbow room" for the crowds that from time to time descend upon the national capital. Adopting the idea of the triumphal arch, and expanding it, the arches of the new station will, in truth, form the gateway of the republic.

Figures do not convey clearly the size of the station. The "passenger concourse" of the station will be more than twice as long and twice as wide as the concourse of the Broad street station, Philadelphia. The Union Station at St. Louis is notable for its size, being 600 feet wide. The South station at Boston is wider, with twenty-nine tracks. The Washington station will be 760 feet wide, with thirty-three tracks, and will be 1,150 feet long.

In equipment for the convenience of the public it will be a city in itself. Instead of standing in the midst of narrow streets the station will face Massachusetts avenue plaza, 500 feet wide and 1,000 feet long, semicircular in shape, from which a dozen streets extend. Great crowds may gather and disperse in comfort. Regiments may disembark and march away witnout confusion or delay. Having in view the great occasions that are celebrated in this capital, the Government and the railroad companies are building on a gigantic scale.—N. Y. Telegram.

An unpretentious object at the World's Fair excites equal interest with the bronze hand of Pope Leo among the treasures of the Vatican, or the liberty bell in the Pennsylvania building. It possesses none of the regal magnificence of Queen Victoria's jubilee presents, nor yet bears a label stating that it was "designed under the special supervision of Mr. Tiffany." It is the little desk upon which Steve Foster wrote "My Old Kentucky Home."

The sudden death of A. E. Ingalls recalls that, shortly after I was elected a delegate to the International, that gentleman called to my attention a practice of naming the local union, on receipt of its charter, such cognomens as "Cream City," "Flour City," "Forest City," and the like—appelations strictly local and confusing in the extreme. Acting on his suggestion, I drafted a paragraph, which was incorporated into the law of the International at the following session, that no name should be given a local union other than the city in which it was located.

In a letter to a lady friend in this city, Mrs. E. C. Jones, now in Kansas, announces a late addition to that gentleman's family.

Base Ball.

A meeting of the Government Printing Office and Bureau Engraving Trades Baseball League will be held at Typographical Temple, on Sunday October 2, at 2.30 o'clock. The object of this meeting is to affect a reorganization of the League for the season of 1905.

All players and others interested in baseball, who hold working cards in the trades identified with the Government Printing Office and its branches are earnestly requested to be present.

The printers of the Government Printing Office and its branches are invited to send delegates to the meeting looking toward the placing of two printers teams in the League for the season of 1905.

Russian Women Proverbs.

If Russian sayings and proverbs are a true index the position of women within the czar's domains is not to be envied. Here are some adages: "The head of a woman is as empty as the purse of a Tartar." "A woman without fear is bolder than a goat." "If you beat your wife in the morning don't forget to do it again in the afternoon." "Hit your wife with the handle of your ax; she is no pitcher to break at the first blow." "If you beat a fur it becomes warmer, and if you beat your wife she will be more true to you."

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Meeting of September 27, 1904.

The regular monthly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at the usual hour by Vice-Chairman Daly with all officers present except the chairman.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

A communication from Capt. John Stephen Sewell, in charge of the work at the Washington Barracks, relative to wages paid hod carriers was read, and the contents referred to the Hod Carriers Union.

A bill for printing, amounting to $35 75 was read, and on the secretary stating that all of the amount except $5 had been ordered paid by the Central Labor Union, the bill was referred to that body.

Under reports of committees, delegates from the Central Labor Union stated that the Lafayette and Kernan's Theaters were on the unfair list.

Delegate Ratigan stated that a meeting of the Executive Committee had been called to meet the Executive Committee of the Central Labor Union Wednesday, September 21, but that the place of meeting had been misunderstood by the members of the Executive Committee of the Central Labor Union, and that no meeting had been held, and that he had sent out notices to all members to be present at the meeting of the 27st, and that the Executive Committee of the Central Labor Union would be present.

Under roll call of unions to submit business, twenty-one delegates from twelve unions answered the roll.

Hod Carriers stated that they had straightened out the differences with R. A. Callaghan, and advised the Hoisting Engineers to visit the engineers employed by Mr. Callaghan with the view of receiving their applications.

Slaters stated that the Mead Roofing Company had signed their contracts and that their men had returned to work for the firm.

At this point the regular order of business was suspended and the Executive Committee of the Central Labor Union, represented by John B. Dickman and N. C. Sprague, was granted the floor.

Mr. Dickman stated that the Central Labor Union had directed the committee to visit the Council of Allied Building Trades to investigate its finances and ascertain if possible what was wanting in the management of the Council to place it on the firm basis which it should have to be more effective, and assured the Council that ever since the Council had been formed that he had been its friend.

Mr. Dickman was answered by Delegates Purcell, Desmond, Richardson, Brand, and Ratigan.

Mr. Sprague stated that the trouble was caused by the selfishness of the unions that had seceded or been suspended, and that there must be a "get-together" principle started that would be for the good of the general movement; that the committee had no plan to present, but that they were there looking for information, and would be pleased to hear any ideas that might be advanced by any of the delegates.

Nothing being advanced by the delegates, the committee thanked the Council for the attention they had received and retired.

The regular order of business being resumed, the secretary was directed to furnish the Executive Committee of the Central Labor Union with a copy of all matter he might have having a bearing on the Unions which had been suspended or had withdrawn their delegates.

After considerable discussion as to the best means to maintain the Council, the meeting adjourned.

In purchasing goods from advertisers in this paper, do not fail to mention the fact that you saw the advertisement in THE TRADES UNIONIST. It will accord you good treatment at the hand of the salesman, and incidentally help the paper.

In Bradstreet's report on labor conditions of the United states it is stated that there were 295,000 persons on strike or locked out in the United States on June 1 last, while on the same date in 1903 the number was 585,000.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

Foreman David J. Roberts, of the Fourth Division, as a loyal Kansan and a former newspaper man of that State, subsequent to a more than ordinary career as a "tourist," gets a number of Kansas papers. He recently handed me the following, from the Eskridge (Kans.) Tribune:

As we stated before, the editor of the Tribune is "off his feet" this week, and it has required considerable "packing" and an occasional "overlay" to make us "show up well." We are sorry to admit it, but it being the first time in twenty years, we feel that we can ask to be excused for "pleing a line" without being "pounded down" because we are "off point," a "battered character" and fit only for the "hell box." If we should we will quit the business and go to farming. We were raised on a farm any way; used to plow with a "wrong font" team that wouldn't "justify." We "pied" the first two rows across the field and were discharged for "incompetency." This week we have been short on "time copy," but the other boys have turned in and pulled up a pretty good "string;" so we will take a turn along the cool, sequestering shades of the Dragoon for a couple of days, and next week you will see us "lined up" all right. We make no excuses for "mistakes" in our "form" of life. We publish the news about others and grant others the privilege to talk about us as they see fit. We have been about the world some in our younger days. We have beheld the storm swell of the Atlantic from New England's rock-bound coast; have viewed the broad Pacific through California's Golden Gate. We have rested beneath the fir trees of the North and lolled in pristine luxury where the sweet magnolia blooms; have attuned our temper to the music of a thousand babbling brooks, drawn our inspiration from the grandeur of the Rocky Mountain scenery, and dispelled our cares and worries with "mountain dew," yet we have never seen the righteous forsaken or his seed begging bread. Forget it not.

This is all very beautiful, but why should he tell everybody that he has been drunk? That is one fact that I have noticed never needs advertising. The wise man never admits that "his foot slipped." He not only denies it but swears that he never was drunk in his life, probably taking as his standard the decision of the Scotch judge that a man is not drunk as long as he can drink.

* * * *

I had a postal card from Billy Wilkinson, of Austin, Tex., last week—I mention the fact because there are many within the sound of my typewriter who know or have known him—saying that he was on the eve of departure for the St. Louis Exposition. As he is probably broke and back home before this, I am afraid this news will be a little stale. While Whitehead, of the Job Room, was recently in Texas, he wrote Wilkinson from some nearby point that he was thinking of making him a visit. "For God's sake, don't come," wrote Wilky in reply, "for I now have enough money to take my family to St. Louis, and if you come it will be all gone and I'll be in debt besides." Having some regard for the sacred rights of the wife and home, Whitehead changed his route and Wilkinson and family have seen the Exposition. There is good in everybody.

* * * *

On coming here from his San Antonio (Tex.) home, two or three years ago, Bert. V. Wolfe hankered for the hot stuff of his gay Texas life, and not being able to find it here to his liking, he imported it direct for his own use, later taking the agency for this city and succeeding in getting it on sale in a number of grocery stores. It is the real essence of tarantulas, centipedes, and Gila monsters, without which it is impossible properly to compound chili con carne, hot tamales, and the numerous other Texo-Mexican dishes that, once partaken of, are never forsaken. It will be found advertised in another part of this paper, under the heading "Gerhardt's Genuine Chili Powder," with the places where it can be procured, Mr. Wolfe having the right idea how to properly reach the public, and it is safe to say that, having once given it a trial, you will never use any other.

The "Bankers' Identification Co." is an institution that evidently thinks I am easy money. I have never noticed that bankers had any trouble in getting identified and so can't see where there is any money to be made by a company organized for the purpose of identifying them. They offer to confer on me the inestimable advantages of investment in this company in about as sloppy a piece of printing as I have ever seen. If they had left to me the addressing of the postal card they inclosed I could use it in my business, but as it is Uncle Sam is the only one who profits by the transaction so far as I am concerned.

Harry H. Humble has forsaken the delights of the proof room for the strenuous life of a linotype operator, having received his transfer last Saturday night. But to be able to run a machine is a very desirable accomplishment in these saw and planing mill days, and if he does not like it the latchstring of the Proof Room still hangs within his convenient reach. I hope he may succeed in his ambition beyond his most sanguine expectations. I believe he has had some experience and liked it.

I have received No. 1 of Vol. 6 of the Union Label Magazine, being the Labor Day issue, consisting of 52 large quarto pages, containing portraits of all the labor celebrities and the Massachusetts and Boston officials. It is splendidly printed and a valuable number. It is published by the Union Label Publishing Company, 306 Sudbury Building, Boston.

On visiting a Masonic body in Alexandria recently I found Claude Haines, of the Agricultural Branch, and C. W. Mander, of the Times, acting as officials, while one of the candidates receiving the degree is a compositor in the First Division of the G. P. O. How we printers do slop over into the surrounding country!

The sudden death of Albert E. Ingalls, from apoplexy, while at work in the main proof room, came as a dreadful shock to every one. He had not been very well for some time and had evidently been failing for some years, but no one anticipated his decease. Mr. Ingalls, who had been an employe of the Government Printing Office for about twenty-five years, came originally from Cape Vincent, N. Y., a small town on the St. Lawrence River near the famous Thousand Islands, but had worked in other cities before coming here. He was a soldier during the civil war, enlisting as soon as he was old enough, being about 60 years old at his death. He was a delegate from this Union to Kansas City in 1888, his associates being George A. Tracy, Edwin M. Blake and William W. Nolle. He was very quiet and unassuming in his manner, genial and unaffected, with a strong affection for the few friends to whom he was drawn. It had been the intention of the authorities to keep the proofreaders overtime that evening, because of the great accumulation of work, but after the death of Mr. Ingalls the order was countermanded.

Robert K. Youngblood, whom many will remember as a proofreader here during the years 1894 to 1897, and who was also an employe of the office in the first administration of Mr. Benedict, was married in Albany yesterday (Wednesday) to Miss Ethel Wayne, of that city, and will pass through this city this evening on their way to visit the St. Louis Exposition. From there the bridal couple will go to Mississippi, Tennessee and Virginia, to visit Mr. Youngblood's parents and other relatives, and on their return, the latter part of October, will stop in this city for several days. His many friends in this city will be glad to hear of this somewhat belated move of Mr. Youngblood's and wish the happy couple many years of happiness.

A letter from San Francisco informs me of the death of George Bayless. The few remaining of those who worked on the Record during the long session of 1876 may remember him as a case-holder at that time, going from here direct to San Francisco at the end of the session, where he remained until his death. For many years he was day foreman of the San Francisco Morning Examiner. Originally from Ohio, he went to Louisiana during the "reconstruction" period, where he associated with "Red-headed Jim" Anderson, who achieved some notoriety in the early part of Hayes's administration, when, for supposed political services, he was recommended for a consulship "in a hot climate," which he never got, being subsequently killed at Eureka, Nev., in a street duel. Bayless was much liked in San Francisco, being a consistent union man without display, and his counsel was of much benefit to the craft in troublous times.

The Proof Division has been hard hit by the grim messenger of Death during the past two months, four having passed away—Fred A. Hall, at Mackinac Island; William H. Towers, at Richmond Hill, N. Y.; Charles A. Hughes, at Dover, Del., and now Albert E. Ingalls. But one, as will be noticed, died in this city—Mr. Ingalls—and he died literally "in the harness." All were good fellows whose passing made a void in the world.

A. F. BLOOMER.

NAVY YARD ITEMS.

Lieutenant Graeme has returned from his vacation and resumed his duties.

G. Davison, special mechanic, Yards and Docks, has been advanced to leadingman.

M. R. Woodward, ordnance draftsman, has tendered his resignation to take effect September 24.

W. H. Henze, subinspector of ordnance, has recovered from his sickness, due to an attack of poisoned oak, and is now on duty.

Joseph Pendleton, of the Carpenter Steel Works, Reading, Pa., was the guest of his parents, Captain and Mrs. Pendleton, this week.

Lieut. W. K. Gise has gone to Sag Harbor to act as recorder in the competitive test of torpedoes fitted with different motive powers.

An examination has been ordered for first-class structural steel draftsman and first-class architectural draftsman for labor at Guantanamo, Cuba.

J. C. Shaw, draftsman Department of Construction and Repair, has been promoted and transferred to the Architectural Division, Treasury Department.

The Navy Department has given its permission to Chief Naval Surveyer Reitz and Chief Engineer Kell, of the German Navy, to inspect the methods of gun manufacture, and the methods and model basin.

The Navy Department now has the report of the examining board relative to the appointment of master tool maker. It is the unanimous wish of the employees of that division that Quartermaster White will be promoted.

By an arrangement between the War Department and the Yards and Docks, Navy Department, the dredging operations now under way at the Eastern Branch will be discontinued until such time as the quay wall along the water front of the Yard has been completed.

CASUALTIES.

H. H. Miller, machinist, E. G. Shop, severe injury to both feet.

Robert Hayden, laborer, Yards and Docks, severe injury to foot.

J. E. Cook, machinist, E. G. Shop, taken ill and sent to his his home.

Wm. A. Watson, machinist, E. G. Shop, one of the oldest and most respected workmen in the Yard, met with an accident this week which was the most remarkable by the manner of escape from fatal injury. The huge hoisting crane was lifting a large casting, which, on its ascent, struck an 8-inch slide which was standing perpendicular. It toppled over and carried beneath it the aged machinist. Men looked in horror to see their comrade entirely crushed by some three tons of metal. Willing hands soon removed the debris and strong arms conveyed their shopmate to a stretcher. He was immediately conveyed by the naval ambulance to the Providence Hospital where it was discovered that no bones were crushed. Although seriously hurt he will recover. How he escaped being crushed into a pulp is one of those mysteries that man can not fathom.

LIABILITY ACT.

Some weeks ago I wrote of the necessity of the Legislative Committee of Columbia Lodge drawing an act relative to such accidents wherein a workman who falls in the line of duty, being reimbursed while inactive by cause of injury. I am more than ever impressed with this "feature" by the accident just recorded. The employees of the Yard are the least favored of all the Departments. In all the other Departments, with the exception of the Government Printing Office, an extra allowance of thirty days is allowed for sickness. In case of serious accident, the heads of the Departments, in their discretion, may allow an extra thirty days. As very few accidents are so serious as to last longer than sixty days it will be seen that a proper allowance has been made. The Government Printing Office is not so fortunate, as their allowance is limited to the thirty days leave. The employees of the Navy Yard are less fortunate, as but fifteen days leave is granted to them to carry them through absence, sickness or injury for the year. Better provisions should be made for our employees in the Yard than in the Executive Departments by reason of the nature of work that is at all times surrounded by danger of accident. It is to be hoped that President Elder will bring the matter at once before his Lodge that efforts will be made to have Congress pass a bill known as "A Liability Act," to reimburse an employee injured in the discharge of his duties.

BALLOTS vs. STRIKES.

AN OBJECT LESSON FOR WORKINGMEN.

But few people understand clearly the difference between money wages and real wages. If they did so they would not vote as they do.

Money wages is what is usually received for a day's or week's work. Real wages are the goods which this money will purchase. From this it follows that there are two ways of raising wages: (1) By increasing the amount of money paid, and (2) by reducing the price of goods.

Not only do wage-earners try to get as high money wages as possible, often becoming members of labor unions for this purpose, but they try to make their money go as far as possible when purchasing goods. Their wives will go miles to reach a store that sells five per cent cheaper than nearby stores. They scold their wives if they pay five cents more than is necessary. Yet, once in every two years they go the polls, at least a majority of them, and vote for a system that increases the cost of living by at least $100 a family per year, and that compels their wives to pay more for goods. Workingmen is this consistent? Is it logical? But this is what you do when you vote for tariff duties that foster and protects trusts that charge unnecessary prices for their products, prices often 30 to 40 per cent higher than they charge foreigners for the same goods.

Workingmen, then, have an opportunity every two years to raise their wages at least 10 per cent with their votes.

This is far more than they will ever raise average wages by strikes, though in individual instances and certain industries, wages may be raised 50 or even 100 per cent through labor organizations. By voting to "cut out" the "protected trusts" that charges monopoly prices, and get an unfair share of the joint products of labor and capital, actual wages of all workers will be permanently raised 10 per cent. Not only that, but more goods will be produced and consumed at the lower prices. Is not this better than strikes? Think it over, workingmen, when you go to the polls. Vote once in your life for yourself and your wives and children. Vote for the man who represents the people in Congress and not the monopolist, if he be a Democrat or Republican.

HEAVEN ON EARTH.

Every poor man longs for Heaven underneath the skies,
Not when he is in the graveyard, but before he dies.
Every poor man knows that idlers ought to work somehow;
He knows that eternal life is here, and the Judgment Day is now.

Kings and creeds have crushed the people everywhere they go;
Poor children walk barefooted through each winter's snow.
Politicians still divide us, as they have of yore,
When we learn that we are brothers we'll divide no more.

Speed the battle fast and onward, fight for life and peace,
Man shall triumph over master, slavery's blight shall cease.
When the sentry on the tower answers back "All is well,"
Earth will be a human Heaven, not a poor man's "hell."

I am sure there will be very general regret that Mr. Gunn has resolved to discontinue his correspondence from the First Division, especially since he was just about to receive good returns from his efforts by unanimous approval of the thing nearest his heart—namely, "to create a more brotherly interest in each other." There is a crying need for missionary work of this sort, and the partial failure of Mr. Gunn should not deter others from undertaking the job. Possibly a down-town man might be induced to take a throw at it.

CYCLE.

It is just as easy to form a good habit as it is a bad one, and it is just as hard to break a good habit as a bad one. So get the good ones and keep them.

The labor movement is more a question of humanity than a question of the almighty dollar. It has accomplished more in that direction, practically, than any other society, not even excepting the church. It is the greatest movement in the championship of human rights and human liberty.

The union is the greatest of existing forces in what is called Americanization. It breaks down the barriers of race, nationality, language and religion; teaches self-government and obedience to elect leaders; sets up the goal of an American standard of living. Neither church, or the schools, nor politics, nor employers can do this work.

In purchasing goods from advertisers in this paper, do not fail to mention the fact that you saw the advertisement in THE TRADES UNIONIST.

Second Division.

W. E. Holt is now Maker-up Phelp's assistant.

W. C. Beddow now has charge of the rings and all that pertains thereto.

Messrs. Wm. Kenworthy, John P. Murray, M. J. Nevius, Hugh Everett, and C. J. Sheriff have been transferred to the Record to learn the machines.

A woman ran hurriedly into our room the other morning a few minutes past eight and reported to Timekeeper Heslet. She had gotten off at the wrong floor.

There is some talk of members of this chapel organizing a club so as to have a family banquet. Why not have something the ladies can enjoy. Stag banquets are a little selfish.

Prejudiced stories of wonderful feats of composition on the linotypes are already being circulated. Actual observations of a "board of survey" often modify reports considerably.

The large job of the Index of the Acts and Resolutions of Congress, now being printed in the Third, was compiled by former Senator Peffer. He has been several years on the work.

Upon receiving the information Saturday morning that Courtney C. Thayer was the proud father of twin boys his friends in this division immediately made arrangements to present him with a baby carriage.

Religious exercises now mark the opening and closing of the business sessions of the Reading (Pa.) Carpenters' Union. Undoubtedly we are getting better.—Typographical Journal for September.

A chaplain for No. 101 has been urged several times in the columns of this paper. Why not bring the matter up for consideration in our Union?

Tim Tickle, the Navy Yard correspondent, had some convincing arguments in his column last week in favor of unionism being a benefit to employer as well as to the workman. All of his items are readable and crisp. One printer remarked that he liked to read his matter as well as Bloomer's. What more glory could a mortal ask?

H. J. Lowe has a curiosity from the Philippines, which was given him by a friend who was a member of the Fifteenth Cavalry. It is the figures of a native priest and wife carved out of two boars' tusks which have been stuck together. A scroll with Chinese looking characters is in his hand. It is used as a sort of idol and carried in the pocket to ward off evil.

E. N. Bunker has just returned from his leave on the Massachusetts coast, where he spent his time sword-fishing. When called up by telephone the other day he absently talked in the receiver and then hurriedly placed his ear at the same place to listen as if he was using a speaking tube. Getting no answer, Mr. Heslet suggested that he place the transmitter, which was lying on the table, to his ear.

I wish to thank the Inland Type Foundry, of St. Louis, for their bright little monthly journal, "The Practical Printer." Each issue contains many good articles on the better management of work in the composing room, valuable suggestions from other printers who have discovered schemes whereby they could turn out work which they thought their office incapable of. All of the display in each issue is of some one series of their many new faces of standard line and unit-set type.

An event of interest to those who wish for the betterment of mankind will take place next Sunday afternoon, at Fifteenth and D streets southeast, at 3 p. m. The corner stone for a new Christian Church will be laid by the children of the Southeast Mission. Last winter the Ninth Street Christian Church started a mission down there and this church is the culmination of it. Printers and G. P. O. employes took great interest in building up the Ninth Street Christian Church and they are doing the same with this one.

A fear has been expressed that some votes will be cast against the eight-hour proposition because of the likelihood of a little assessment. This anxiety is surely unfounded. We who have such favorable conditions will do all we can to obtain the same for others who have by their support made our prosperity possible. It was the ready response by the locals which saved the Census job to the Union and to the G. P. O. Their support also aided us in our restoration of wages and their existence and loyalty to the International keeps up our wages.

"PIKES" (BY MCPIKE).

SOME MORE ALPHABETICAL ABERRATIONS.

P

It may be taken for granted that you've never been told
Why P's like the name of a despotic emporor bold,
Who ruled and ruined old Rome many centuries ago;
So we will tell you 'tis simply because it's near O.

Q

Q stands for question, and that's what here we propose
To propound when we ask you why Q's like your nose,
And the answer is this, without quibble or quirk,
And you'll find it is true, whether Christian or Turk:
Your nose you must follow in your onward pathway,
And U follows Q just as the night follows day.

R

Why R is like water is quite easy to ask,
But an answer correct is somewhat of a task;
Yet we'll essay it, or at least venture a guess,
Which same is a poor one, we are free to confess:
If of water and letter the dearth was complete,
Springs, rivers and harbors would need take a back seat.

Third Division.

W. F. Johnson is now at the State Branch, having been transferred last week.

F. H. Hopkins, jr., formerly Slug 90, has resigned from the Government service.

Messrs. C. F. Cooke and R. W. Christian have been transferred to the machines.

We have had our last Saturday half-holiday for 1904. Now to settle down to business.

Robert P. Piehoff, Secretary of the chapel, returned Saturday morning from eight days leave.

J. B. Lehmann, late of the Gazette, now occupies frame 43, where W. F. Johnson formerly held sway.

Those wishing to subscribe for the Inland Printer may do so by applying to E. C. Saltzman, bankman, who is the duly authorized agent for the Government Printing Office.

Messrs. C. F. Cooke and W. F. Johnson have lately been transferred from this Division to the State Branch. Both gentlemen have been with us for a long time and their separation from us is regretted.

A. J. E. Hubbard, now editor and proprietor of the Colorado Springs Labor News, and one of the publishers of THE TRADES UNIONIST, was recently elected Fourth Vice-President of the Colorado Federation of Labor.

Simeon Johnston, Slug 66, one of the old printers recently transferred from the Gazette to his Division, and who for twenty-four years has been trying to keep up the lower case "h's" and "a's" in his case, says that now his "h-a-days" are about over.

A somewhat "cocky" gentleman marched down the room the other day, and as he marched he remarked in a loud voice, "I'm a King with a capital K!" "You're a Jay with a capital J!" quickly answered someone in the northeast corner. Then the King shut up.

Max J. Knoble expects to start Saturday evening on a hunting and fishing trip through the Shenandoah Valley. He will be equipped with 3,000 smelt for bait, all sorts of arms and ammunition, and a voracious appetite, and expects to have a thoroughly enjoyable time.

In an article entitled "Poets and humorists of the American press" in the Inland Printer for September, Finley Peter Dunne, the originator of the famous "Mr. Dooley," was referred to as "Peter Finley" Dunne. Not a a very big mistake, you will say; but hardly accurate.

T. L. McEneany went to Laurel, Md., last Sunday to see George C. Sparks, and found him considerably improved and able to be out, but still somewhat weak. George says he expects to come to Washington in a couple of weeks. He has had a long siege of sickness, and we sincerely hope he will now be restored to health.

The election for chairman for three months ending December 31, 1904, will occur Friday, September 30. I would like, if possible, to say a good word for Chairman Childress, whose official conduct during the brief time he has held office, has been all that we could ask; but as this paper is published the day before election he will have to take the will for the deed.

Mr. Gunn has made the amende honorable in stating that he has always tried not to offend. I shall take him at his word. I am not so fond of a "newspaper scrap" as may be supposed, and deplored the seeming necessity of dealing summarily with Mr. Gunn's somewhat slighting reference to me. As he has expressly disclaimed any intention of offending anybody, however, I am bound to express my regret for my part in the matter, and to hope that he will reconsider his determination to resign from the force of correspondents.

On the 21st inst., the day after the recent election for chairman to fill an unexpired term, Chairman-elect Childress received the following letter from former Chairman Goldstein, who, as appears from the date, was not aware that he had been superceded in office:

1719 MADISON AVENUE,
NEW YORK, Sept. 20, 1904.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE THIRD DIVISION CHAPEL.

Ladies and Gentlemen: On account of being detained in New York until after November, I hereby tender my resignation as Chairman of our Chapel, my resignation to take effect upon the election of my successor.

I wish to thank you one and all for the honor and confidence you repeatedly conferred upon me.

My kindest regards to you all,
I remain, yours fraternally,
WILLIAM M. GOLDSTEIN,
Chairman.

Mr. Goldstein enjoyed the respect and confidence of the chapel to an unusual degree, having been elected chairman six times in succession with practically no opposition, and there are many who are sorry that his enforced absence has been the cause of the election of a successor; but under the circumstances a change was inevitable, for a chairman must be on the spot in order to attend to his duties.

C. W. Baker and A. P. Beatty have been transferred to the Specification Division.

Edward Nicholson and Walter Myers have been added to the laborers roll of this division.

Mrs. Callie Jacoby and Mrs. Josephine Simpson have been transferred to the Fourth Division.

F. R. Trimble, J. W. Cross, and W. A. Lavalette have been transferred to the Second Division.

Miss Margaret A. Evans has returned to work after a trip to Niagara Falls. She brought home a number of souveniers of the trip and a large fund of interesting anecdotes.

Miss Alice Guild, Simeon Johnston, O. S. Miller, R. H. Pegues, J. L. Garrett, E. E. Coates, J. R. Brown, J. C. Morgan, W. H. Duling, and A. L. Bodwell have been transferred to the Third Division.

Frederick R. Imhoff has been assigned to duty as chief machinist of the monotype machines of this division. Mr. Imhoff is a Philadelphian, and has worked for the Lanston Monotype Company several years and was at different times in charge of Monotype plants in New York and Boston.

Hoo-ray! Hoo-ray!! Dan Chisholm and his well-drilled Odd Fellow soldiers have won the $1,000 cash prize at San Francisco. "Pard" Bloomer is correct in his claim that printers make a success of most any enterprise which they undertake. There are quite a number of compositors in Canton Washington.

The following named temporary employees have been transferred from Gazette: E. D. McKenna, C. E. Sikken, W. J. C. Greevy, H. T. McConvey, R. J. Mears, J. R. Lehmann, Horace Miller, and W. E. Anderson, Third Division; Eugene Strohmeyer, A. S. Jones, J. K. Bittenbender, J. T. Harris, and J. G. Hickok to the Fourth Division.

The introduction of the Lanston Monotype machine has made necessary the reduction of the Gazette force by about twenty "slugs" and also a number of temporary compositors who were detailed to this division to take the place of those on leave and those in the machine class room. There were no discharges made in consequence of these altered conditions, all of the employes having been assigned to some other division in the G. P. O. A pleasant feature of the otherwise unpleasant breaking up of old associations was the acknowledgment, by all the older men, of the cordial and frank relations that had existed between them and Mr. Hodes. Some of these men have been identified with the work here and in the Specification Room for a great many years. "Charlie" Baker started in in 1868, when the whole force consisted of twenty-five men. Simeon Johnston, our weather prophet, has printed "Spess" in its various forms for about thirty years. Mr. Gibbs has been the backbone of the "Lime Kiln Club" for a great many years, and I fear that important institution will now disintegrate now that he has withdrawn from its councils. Then there's Griswold, O. S. Miller, and A. P. Beatty. W. A. Lavalette has served enough years on "Spess" to be classed as one of the "old reliables." I hope they will all find congenial surroundings in their new quarters.

H. J. REDFIELD.

Personal Mention.

John C. Macksey, chairman of the Times, returned Friday last from a visit to his old home, Norwich, N. Y.

W. G. Rabold is again a member of the Post chapel. Mr. Rabold left Washington about a year ago and located in Cleveland, where he worked on the World, but is now a member of the Post force again.

David Pollock left to-day for the Union Printers' Home, where he goes for recuperation in health. Mr. Pollock has been a member of No. 101 for about eight years, and always took an active interest in its affairs. His friends here hope to hear of his complete recovery to health in the near future.

A. E. Ingalls Dead.

The sudden death of Al. Ingalls in the G. P. O. proof room came as a shock to his many friends. Mr. Ingalls has been in poor health for some time, but rarely complained. He was of a quiet nature, charitable, and a true friend to all his acquaintances, unostentatious in giving aid, and admired for his sterling qualities of head and heart. Mr. Ingalls represented No. 101 at Kansas City in 1888, and until his health failed was an active worker in the union. His remains were sent to Cape Vincent, N. Y., where he had recently spent his vacation, for interment.

Death of J. J. Whittle.

James J. Whittle, an employe of the press room, G. P. O., and a member of Pressmen's Union, No. 1, died on Tuesday of typhoid fever. A sad feature in connection with Mr. Whittle's death was that his little boy was also taken down with typhoid fever and is now in a hospital. Mr. Whittle was a member of Pressmen Council, National Union. The remains were taken to Boston, Mass., for interment.

Kernan's Lyceum Unfair.

Musicians Union, No. 161, are making a vigorous fight against Kernan's Lyceum. The trouble has been aired in the public press, and the result will be looked forward to by all members of organized labor with interest. The committee in charge of the matter in Musicians Union have outlined a plan of campaign that will produce results in a short time. It means the co-operation of every union affiliated in the Central Labor Union, and the trouble will no doubt be adjusted before the season is half over.

Child Labor in Chicago Sweatshops.

In an effort to prevent employment of children in sweatshops ten assistant state factory inspectors invaded the homes in the Ghetto and other poorer districts in Chicago last week. According to reports received, the number of children employed in the Ghetto district alone is more than one thousand.

These children are kept in doors all day, even in the warmest weather, and compelled to work as long as eighteen hours a day on garments that their parents have contracted to make for tailors. Some of them are only nine years of age.

Several of the concerns which are clamoring for the open shop, and which parcel out the work for the children, have been brought into court and fined. They entered the plea that they were ignorant of the fact that the children were to work upon the garments, and that they had made their agreements with the parents. The parents, on the other hand, pleaded that they were within their rights when they asked their children to do the work for them, and that the State had no right to interfere between father and child. These pleas were unavailing, as under the law any place in which work is done becomes a workshop in the legal meaning of the word.

The horrors of such trade as this would soon cease if the people were honest enough to demand the Union Label—the only guarantee that garments are not made in filthy sweatshops by infants who ought to be in school or engaged in healthy play.—Ex.

Punishment of a Strike-Breaker.

The operative millers of Goldbach County, St. Gallen, Switzerland, voted last year to inaugurate a strike, and to assure the unbroken solidarity of all, they had signed a legal voucher of mutual responsibility, by which every one pleged himself not to go back to work until the strike would be declared off officially. One of the contestants, by the name of Gerlacher, violated this mutual agreement, preferring to be a strike breaker, he went back on his comrades and his word. Now the union of operative millers of Rorschach, of which Gerlacher was a member, brought a law suit against him before the circuit court, and three weeks ago this court ruled that the defendant must pay the conventional fine of 100 francs to the union, and apart from that, bear the cost of the legal procedure, amounting to 200 francs.

Child Slavery.

It was not until 1819 that factory work for children under nine was prohibited or that children between nine and sixteen were not allowed to work more than twelve hours a day, and it was not until 1802 that the law required an apprentice to be provided with two suits of clothing, one of which was to be new each year. Notwithstanding this partial protection, when Mrs. Trollope wrote "The Factory Boy" in 1840 it was illustrated by pictures of ragged and emaciated children which would now be regarded only as gross exaggerations of the truth, but which then produced no adverse comment, and were perhaps as influential in reforming the abuses they displayed as was "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in calling attention to the evils of slavery.—Ex.

What Did the Romans Smoke?

At a depth of nine feet underground at the old Roman fort of Aliso, near Haltern, the surface of which was proved to have remained undisturbed since the Roman occupation, fifty-four fragments of various clay pipes were found. Their shape was almost uniform, and they could be divided into three groups, one of which was characterized by clumsy and very rough workmanship. The other groups were of much finer make and decorated with figures and Roman characters. From marks found on all of them it was evident that they had been used for smoking.—London Standard.

Croakers and Knockers.

Founded on broad and humanitarian principles—vast as man, heaven and earth combined—the trade and labor union is compelled to accept as members, men and women of all parties, creeds and nationalities.

Unlike the church, the club, or the lodge, the Union must accept all comers who are knocking at its door, provided they can demonstrate their ability to perform, in an efficient manner, the work claimed by the organization.

The applicant is initiated and welcomed as a brother, and although he may be a veritable scoundrel, a blackmailer and a traitor, he is entitled to just as much respect and protection as the most conscientious and oldest member.

Really in many cases the new made loud-mouthed brotherhood booster is the very worst actor.

He claims that brotherly love is due him from all the members, although from heart to mouth he is running over with hellish hatred to everybody who does not bow down and confess to his cut-throat creed.

Being a thief, which means one who takes that which does not belong to him, including character, he can not help but accuse all honest people of grand larceny. Subsisting on carrion as chief diet, it is the nature of the cowardly beast to encourage murder. Look at this individual and you behold the croaker and the knocker. He comes to the meetings late and irregularly; he is usually full of firey fumes, erratic ideas, and nasty notions; his verdant verbosity flows like a wild and muddy stream until he has succeeded in disturbing the business of the meeting. He attacks the officers and finds fault with the work of the faithful committeemen.

Having relieved his store house of its surplus of "brotherly love," he retires before the meeting is over, to the curbstone, where he delivers an impromptu "oration" on the clique that runs the union.

You can be grateful if your union is not burdened with croakers and knockers. They are the worst pest the trade union movement has to tolerate. San Francisco has a few, but they do not find the climate congenial. Pass them on to the South Sea Islands, where they can croak and knock without annoying decent and honest men.—Organized Labor.

THE TRADES UNIONIST.

OFFICIAL ORGAN CENTRAL LABOR UNION, WASHINGTON BRANCH, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Vol. IX. No. 17. WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1904. Price, 3 Cents.

THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION.

Social Session Held on Monday Evening After the Business Meeting.

The Central Labor Union at its last meeting entertained a large number of business men of the city with a programme which included addresses, amusements, and things to eat and drink. The guests of honor were those who assisted the central body in making its recent Labor Day celebration at Benning a success.

A brief business meeting was held. This was followed by an address to the assembled labor workers by Mrs. Gittenger. She spoke of the provision made by Congress for a series of public lectures to be given in Washington for the benefit of the students and teachers of the public schools. Mrs. Gittenger explained the purpose of the lectures, and asked for the assistance of organized labor in making them a success.

At 8.30 o'clock the business men began to arrive, and until a late hour an enjoyable time was spent.

Mr. John B. Dickman, president of the Central Labor Union, made the welcoming address, which was replied to by Mr. Frank K. Raymond, president of the Business Men's Association. Mr. Raymond said he believed in labor organizations, and in promising them his support he expressed a wish that they might grow better and stronger.

A set of engrossed resolutions were presented to Mr. Milford Spohn, of the Central Labor Union, for his services to the body. He replied in a brief address. Music was rendered by the new Union Musicians' Band and by a mandolin orchestra. Beer, sandwiches, and cigars were served.

Among those present were Major Richard Sylvester, William S. Knox, Frank K. Raymond, Prof. J. T. Crossley, S. J. Steinmetz, Frank Seabring, Jackson Blair, Doctor Brooks, D. J. Walford, and Ward Savage. E. J. Roche was chairman of the committee of arrangements.

'Frisco's New Plan.

The San Francisco Labor Council is putting a new plan into operation that will be watched with considerable interest by organized labor everywhere. Any union desirous of a change in its wage scale must submit the proposed change to the Labor Council at least four weeks previous to the date fixed for the enforcement of such schedule, and the same shall be referred to the executive and arbitration committees of the council for investigation. In the event of a strike or lockout and the union affected makes application for financial assistance, an assessment on all affiliated unions shall be levied. The assessment must be levied according to the earnings of the members. Unions, all of the members of which earn an average of $12 per week or less, shall be asked to contribute 50 per cent less per capita than unions all of whose members earn an average of over $12 per week, and the appeal shall state the exact amount per capita on its membership each union is asked to contribute. No money, however, shall be paid out until a strike or lockout has been in progress two weeks. The union appealing for assistance in a strike indorsed by the Council must agree that the conduct of the controversy shall be placed in the hands of the Executive Committee of the Council and the authorized representatives of the union concerned.—Labor Herald.

Fiber to Displace Glass.

Glass has long been used exclusively for the purpose of making lamp shades, but a Massachusetts manufacturing firm has recently put a shade on the market in which the glass is displaced by fiber, which is said to be effective and cheap. The shade is made from a fiber similar to that used for the lining of incandescent lamp sockets. This is mottled green on the outside and pearl gray on the inside. The fiber is made of the same weight as aluminum and is similar in appearance. It is finished under pressure, which gives it a glossy surface and makes it a good reflector of light. While it is so tough that the edges will not break, it is springy and will not crush out of shape.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

Registering at the Walnut Street House, Cincinnati, some years since, the clerk, reading the scrawl, asked, "Do you know Charlie Sutton?"

"A brother of mine," was the reply.

"Then I want to shake the hand of the brother of the best man in the world."

This sentence was to me an awakening keynote. Why, I asked myself, this extravagant praise, and I turned back through memory's halls for some incident that might serve as a solution for his standing so well with his associates.

When this brother was starting out in the world, a friend of the family suggested that on the following day he would accompany him to a mercantile establishment and "make his talk for him."

"I'd rather go alone," he said. "If I can't talk to him, how will he expect me to talk to people when they come in his store to buy goods?"

Again I recollect that after my brother had been with a house a year he asked for a raise in salary.

"On what ground?" inquired the management."

"I know the run of the place and have made a number of acquaintances—customers—during the year."

"How many acquaintances-customers, as you call them, have you made?" was the next inquiry.

Prompt came the answer, "Three hundred and sixty five."

From the fact that he remained with the house of John Shillito & Co. for nearly a third of a century he must have continued to "make good."

In our little world the opportunity for making acquaintances may be limited; but, then, there is no reason why one might not each day add a "unit" in the form of a new word, thought, or expression to their store of information. Our copy is peculiarly prolific in this direction—none more so than the so-called "Indian," upon which I once printed.

While working in the old First, one of the subordinates came one morning with, "This alley put up Catalogue cases." And they did—all but "Maud." He goes to Mr. Spottswood's desk with a speech, the tenor of which was that, "put on that job, for all the good it would do the office or himself, they might as well lock him up in the safe."

"That will be all right, sir," was his response. Ne'er a smile beneath the iron grey. Two days later a messenger arrived with a huge stack of copy and the announcement: "You are to have this job all to yourself." The title page told me it was an Athabascan Bibliography, in comparison with which the Surgeon-General's Catalogue was a perennial picnic—a world of endless summer; and I was alone—from "Brown" to the "all mark"—severely alone. He had one up his sleeve; he had thrown the harpoon. Evening after evening I studied "Indian" from the top shelf of an F street second-hand book store. It proved a fascinating work, replete with glimpses of the true Americana. Following in rapid succession came the Siouxan and the Algonquin bibliographies.

Transferred to the night force in the early autumn, in the language of Milton Nobles, "The villian still pursued her"—this time the Chinook jorgan, with which every resident of the Far Northwest is more or less familiar. And here is where the irrepressible Woodside issued one of his pleasantries. With Manila paper and colored pencils he managed to construct a fair replica of the copy, and shortly after the assignment of each new man to that division the counterfeit would be found upon his frame.

Three years prior to the nomination of Benjamin Harrison the late Senator Hoar said, "The next nominee of the Republican party comes from the West," and then added, "farther west than Ohio." I never could fathom why he skipped over Ohio, which Commonwealth had two distinguished sons in the glare of the limelight, Sherman and Foraker, and another, McKinley, waiting his cue in the wings. At any rate, the prophecy was fulfilled.

The king laugh maker, Milt Barlow, was a Kentucky product, from Paris, Bourbon County. His father was the inventor of the planetarium, a device showing the movements of the heavenly bodies. Congress granted the elder Barlow a sum of money with which to market the child of his brain. An old negro in Lexington, Ky., "Waxey" by name, engaged in ringing an auction bell, walked with a limp or rather drag of one leg, that Barlow interpolated into his "Old Black Joe" sketch and it is a part and parcel of the act of every old-time negro impersonator to-day.

Seven cities claimed a Homer dead. Another authority states that the positions were reversed; that "Waxey" was the imitator and Barlow the original—the former late in life having joined one of the "Uncle Tom" companies. And now comes the Galveston Tribune, with a lengthy article stating that Milt Barlow was "found" by a Haverly Minstrel organization while he was playing in a dive in that city.

I want the District Commissioners to abolish the park or circle in front of the Gales school, at the intersection of New Jersey and Massachusetts avenues, making a plaza in lieu thereof. The car tracks circling it serve to narrow the streets on three sides, the fire engines from both Massachusetts avenue and Capitol Hill at this point encounter a series of dangerous turns, and with the congestion of traffic from the new terminal station, the comfort if not life of the pedestrian is constantly menaced.

A Put-Up Job.

The following story, taken from the Ashland (Pa.) Courier, is told on an old member of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, who is at present in the field assisting Philadelphia Union, No. 2, in its fight against the Inquirer:

Mr. J. L. Rodier, representing Typographical Union, No. 2, of Philadelphia, is spending many weeks of his time in District 9, U. M. W. of A., working up the union sentiment in behalf of the union miners and also trying to down the Philadelphia Inquirer for refusing to employ union labor. He has made many speeches throughout the district and is a splendid talker. It is due to Vice-President Paul Pulaski to get off about one of the best jokes on Rodier possible.

Under the care of Pulaski, Mr. Rodier made quite a few speeches at Mt. Carmel, the home of Pulaski, and it was here that Pulaski, a foreigner by birth, but an all-around good fellow, put up the job.

A large meeting was held. Rodier got up with all his vim and energy worked up into his proposed speech. For twenty minutes he pumped into them red hot unionism. Then he took a drink of ice water and his reception so far was just as cold as the water. For half an hour more he talked with all his energetic spirit and still no applause—not even a smile. Another drink of ice water, and, urged by Pulaski, he continued his fervid and impassioned speech, and still the crowd looked on and the temperature remained at zero. Like the hero he was he still continued and made one last grand burst of oratory that should have thrilled the soul of the Sphynx. Alas—poor Rodier, and not even a smile yet, and he sat down and took a last gulp of the ice water.

Rodier to Pulaski—"Paul, in the name of goodness, what is the matter?"

Pulaski to Rodier—"Why, Rodier, old boy, there isn't a single man in the whole crowd understands a word of English.

International Labor Treaty.

Under the terms of the treaty entered into between France and Italy each nation agrees to give to the workingmen of the other nation rights under the labor laws equal to those of natives. The workingmen's savings banks of the two countries will each honor the pass books of the other's depositors. Any accident indemnities or pensions which may become due to an Italian laborer while in France will be paid to him just the same when he returns to his native land, or, in the case of death by accident, to his heirs in Italy, Italy assuming the same obligations in regard to French workingmen resident within her borders. The treaty assumes that it is the duty of the government to supplement the workingman's savings so that in case of disability through accident or old age he may have sufficient means to live in decency. It is agreed between the contracting powers that this right shall not be forfeited by a workingman who spends part of his life in a foreign land.

JAMES B. CULLEY.

Secretary of Pittsburg Typographical Union Resigns.

James B. Culley, one of the best known, oldest and most efficient labor union officials, Sunday, October 2, tendered his resignation as Secretary-Treasurer of Pittsburg Typographical Union No. 7. Culley's resignation will take effect immediately after a successor is elected at the next regular monthly meeting. He leaves to accept a place in a commercial printing house in Pittsburg. Culley is just over fifty years old, and has been connected with the printing business for about thirty-five years. He is a native of Louisville, Ky., where he learned his trade, and has spent about twenty years in Pittsburg, ten years of this time as a salaried secretary-treasurer of the local union. For nearly ten years he was employed on the Dispatch. Previous to that he toured the country, and visited about as many cities and towns as the average traveling printer. He worked entirely during the hand-set days, and he was regarded as a first-class all around workman. As secretary-treasurer of the local union he proved one of the best officials in the country. Culley always was a real friend of the traveling printer, and a very large proportion of his small weekly salary was always generously handed out to members in needy circumstances. He is married but has no children, and resides on Mt. Washington.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Bindery Notes.

Wm. T. Johnston is a man who thinks and acts. While eating some terrapin the other night the gold filling in his tooth dropped out. Bill had a pin put on it and now wears the precious metal in his scarf.

Gus Wiegand, the promoter of enterprises, will give you a talk on North Chesapeake Beach. He will picture to you in the air a pretty cottage with a gasoline launch in the water in front of your property. Talk it over with him.

Professor Young, the musical wonder, has the Count beat to death. He is under the direction of "Boston" McManus this season and will give a continuous performance all winter to the Cow Boys. He also promises the Captain plenty of liquid refreshments.

What is the matter with Willie? Nothing, only the real estate fever. Wm. B. Hyde, the long distance calculator, has been very busy of late figuring on city property. Last summer it was suburban. He will also take a trip in the spring and look over some European investments.

Bill Holt was informed at his boarding house that a pretty young lady had called to see him, and she promised to return at six o'clock. Bill rushed home; took a bath; shaved himself; shined his shoes; raised a fog about his supper being served late; put on his best clothes; looked in the glass a number of times and polished up his teeth; lit a cigar, and waited on the front porch for the sweet girl who never returned. In a room on the opposite side of the street sat a merry bunch of bookbinders looking over singing, "Yes, I Waiting Honey, Waiting Here for You."

Teeth Made of Paper.

One of the novel inventions which hail from Germany is artificial teeth made from paper. Many of the dentists are using them and find them to be entirely satisfactory. They have several advantages over the ordinary ones made of porcelain or mineral composition, as they are cheap, do not break or chip, are not sensitive to heat or cold, nor has the moisture of the mouth any effect upon them.

Personal Mention.

Stuart C. Gordon, of the Fourth Division, G. P. O., and brother of Laura B. Gordon, of the Official Gazette, left the city on September 28 for Fort Bayard, New Mexico, on account of failing health. He was accompanied by his wife and brother, Alex. K. Gordon, of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Free Lectures.

At the last session of Congress an appropriation was made for the purpose of giving free lectures to the residents of this city. This work was undertaken by several enterprising men and women of Washington, and if the project meets with favor, no doubt the lentures will be continued in future seasons.

The committee in charge of the lectures have been appointed by the Board of Education, and are all volunteers for the work.

The chairman, Mrs. John Milton Gitterman, 201 Second street northeast, has been doing good work in awakening interest in the people interested, and has appeared before several organizations. The Central Labor Union has appointed a committee to investigate the subject.

Mrs. Getterman, in a letter to this paper says:

To Editors The Trades Unionist:

I beg to inclose herewith a list of the Centres, dates, and speakers for the free lectures to the people, which begin October 11, at the Jefferson School.

The program for Washington has not been printed up to the present time, and I hope therefore that you will surely find room for the list I send you in your next issue so that from the first a great attendance may be looked for. The stereopticon slides will make the lectures entertaining; the desk library of books will make them instructive; the music will render the evening enjoyable, and the lectures themselves, the chief attraction of the evening, are among the very best anywhere. We must all remember that Congress thinks in numbers, and that numbers count. Every man and woman is born into the inheritance of all culture and all knowledge, and all the power which these two bestow, and though many of us are kept out of our heritage, these free lectures to the people (if Congress allows them to live long enough), are destined to give us back something of what has been coming to us through the ages.

Free lectures to the people, with music, to be held at Jefferson School, Sixth street and Virginia avenue, southwest, every Tuesday, at eight o'clock:

October 11.—Dr. H. W. Wiley: Feeding Poisons to Young Men.

October 18.—Henry Oldys: Whistling Imitations of Birds.

October 25.—C. F. Warren: Picturesque Canada.

November 1.—G. M. Hunt: When the Allies Entered Pekin.

November 15.—Ormond Stone: The Sky We See.

November 22.—C. F. Fairman: 100 Miles Upon the Tow-path.

November 29.—H. M. Wilson: India, Its People and Temples.

December 6.—J. F. Hayford: How We Measure the Earth.

December 13.—G. O. Totten: Best Views In Spain.

December 20.—Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts: Jerusalem.

Every Friday, M Street High School, between First street and New Jersey avenue, northwest:

October 14.—Rev. U. G. B. Pierce: A Night In The Nether World.

October 21.—Dr. Max West: Making 1,000,000 Americans In Porto Rico.

October 28.—C. F. Warren: Canada.

November 4.—H. L. Hodgkins: Experiments In Sound.

November 11.—B. H. Warner: In Mexico.

November 18.—George H. Peters: Sun, Moon, and Stars.

November 25.—George Horton: Russia and Japan.

December 2.—Pres. John Gordon: Meaning of the Wars of the United States.

December 9.—John W. Titcomb: Argentina and South American Revolutionist.

December 16.—John Hitz: Switzerland; Its Winter Sports.

Every Friday, at the Zion Baptist Church, F street between Third and Four-and-a-half street, southwest.

October 14.—Dr. D. P. Hickling: Bandaging.

October 21.—Mrs. C. L. Young-Withee: Around the World In Forty Minutes.

October 28.—Pres. J. C. Spencer: Russia and Japan.

Progress of the Union Label.

The growing tendency on the part of manufacturers in various lines to put the union label on union-made goods is a helpful sign to those trades-unionists who have for years past, in season and out of season, urged members of labor unions and their families to demand the label on all purchases.

For some years there seemed to be a disposition on the part of employers to refuse the label on their goods, and in many quarters this sentiment still controls, but the ever-increasing demand has forced many of them to forego any scholastic scruples they may have had, until at present union label goods of all classes and description are offered to the public, freely advertised as such, and meet a ready sale not only to members of trades-unions, their families and friends, but the public has awakened to the fact that, generally speaking, goods bearing the union label are superior to all others.

If the public has at last been aroused to the superior quality of label goods, which are the product of union labor, receiving fair living wages and enjoying reasonably short work days in shops where the sanitary conditions are clean and wholesome, it is a great gain for the nation, as well as for the cause of unionism.

This education of the people has been slow but sure, and we who know that in many instances goods which do not bear the label are manufactured in sweat-shops, prisons and poorly-ventilated, over-crowded disease propagating tenements by the overworked, poorly-paid slaves of grasping employers should welcome this sign of the times, which can be fostered and strengthened by us until in time all goods on the market which have any claim to superority will bear the mark of that union which is engaged in its manufacture.

To your efforts to create a demand for the label this improved condition is due, but the battle is not yet won. Keep agitating the merits of the label Keep demanding it on your purchases. As the demand increases so will the supply, and the time will soon come when goods which do not bear the union stamp will be forced from the market by the better-made union-label products. — Leavenworth Labor Review.

Pioneer Printing.

The first book printed on the continent north of Mexico was published in 1640 at Cambridge, Mass., and was called "The Bay Psalms Book,"

The first printing press set up in the colonies south of Boston was introduced in 1683 into Virginia, and was immediately suppressed by the governor. This action was approved by the king, and he sent positive instructions that no printing press should be allowed in Virginia.

The first printing press established in Pennsyivania was set up in 1685 near Philadelphia, by William Bradford. The first publication was an almanac.

The first newspaper published in America was issued in Boston on September 25, 1690, and was called Public Occurrences. Before the second number appeared, the legislature suppressed its publication.

The first paper mill in America was established the same year by William Bradford near Philadelphia.

William Bradford was appointed printer to the Government of New York in 1693, and set up the first press in that province.

The first newspaper published in America (excepting the single issue in 1690) was issued on April 24, 1704, in Boston, and called the Boston News Letter. It was published weekly, and was printed on a half sheet twelve inches by eight.

The first newspaper published in America, outside of Boston, was issued in Philadelphia in 1719, and called The American Weekly Mercury.

The first newspaper published in the province of New York was issued on October 16, 1725, by William Bradford, in the city of New York, and was called the New York Gazette.—The Journalist.

Political Labor Papers.

There is nothing that weakens the cause of organized labor as distrust engendered in the minds of the workers on the course taken by a labor paper during a political campaign.

The paper may be one of the best exponents of labor that has ever been published, but when it enters the political field and espouses a candidate of either of the two great parties its influence as an educator is weakened.

To be a success the paper must at all times leave the political work in a campaign to the recognized party organs. The readers of a labor paper take their political views from their favorite daily paper and do not expect enlightenment on the question of fitness for office of any candidate before the people from their labor paper.

However, should a candidate by his acts, previous to his nomination, betray an antipathy to all that organized labor stands for, it is expected that the labor press should give such information to its readers as it may possess on the attitude of the candidate, but to take either of the candidates of the two great parties now before the people and assert that organized labor should support one of them is leaving the paper open to suspicion of being subsidized in the interest of the party the candidate represents.

During a Presidental campaign the use of money to aid in carrying the election is well recognized. That shrewd politicians, who have demonstrated that their knowledge of men and conditions in political life is beyond question, should be led into the error of believing that a labor paper can influence its readers politically is a matter of surprise to members of trade unions, who never permit their trade organizations to influence them in their rights as a citizen to vote as they please, except where a candidate has shown undue zeal in fighting the organization. Even in that event unanimity of sentiment does not prevail.

THE eight-hour worker should vote as he works—for the eight-hour work-day.

THE next great step of organized labor is the attainment of the universal eight-hour work-day.

ARE you an eight-hour worker? Do you believe in the eight-hour day? If so, let your money talk.

No doubt the assurances that HAY will be retained in the Cabinet will have considerable influence on the straw vote.

YELL, brothers, yell: Eight hours for work and eight hours for play! We'll work overtime for it! Hurray! hurray!

THAT is still a low state of civilization in which a large mass of wage-earners is composed of women and children.

A PETRIFIED man was dug up in Nebraska the other day coincident with the formation of a Democratic ROOSEVELT club in Wisconsin.

IT has been claimed that Democracy failed to win in 1896 and 1900 on account of too much wind. It remains to be seen whether the PARKER wind-shield will serve the purpose.

THE man who works eight hours a day at good wages is utterly untrue to union obligations if he does not contribute liberally toward securing the eight-hour day for others.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN demonstrates his willingness to work with the rank and file by extending first aid to the wounded as a member of the ambulance corps in the doubtful West.

DON'T be fooled by the assertion that the interests of the skilled mechanic and the unskilled laborer are not identical. In unorganized ignorance lies the greatest menace to organized labor.

UNIONISM has great questions of progress to consider. They involve the perpetuity of civilization itself. It is accordingly a very narrow unionist who wastes his time in pointing out the petty faults of his fellow-unionists.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

The Association of Ex-Delegates of Columbia Union, No. 101, held its regular quarterly meeting last Sunday, at Typographical Temple, President Z. T. Jenkins, Secretary John T. Herbert, Treasurer C. W. Otis, and about a dozen other members present. Though few in numbers, the enthusiasm was numerous. After routine business was dispatched, a motion was made and carried to appoint a committee to draft suitable resolutions in regard to the death of the late ex-Delegate Albert E. Ingalls, though he was not a member of the association. and James Monroe Krieter, Philip S. Steele, and A. F. Bloomer appointed the committee. After discussion of the question how to revive interest in the Association a motion was carried that the subject of abolishing dues for the present be considered at the January meeting. The meeting then adjourned.

John L. Kennedy has formed a partnership with C. T. Havenner, under the name and style of Havenner & Kennedy, in the business of stock and bond brokers, with an office in the Home Life Building, at the corner of Fifteenth and G streets northwest (telephone M. 110), where they are prepared to transact all business of this kind. Those with a disposition to take a few chances in the stock market may as well give their business to Havenner & Kennedy, where they can rely on being properly treated, as to take it anywhere else. I do not know Mr. Havenner, but Mr. Kennedy is a shrewd business man, having rubbed up with the world until he has a pretty good acquaintance with it.

Mr. Terence V. Powderly, formerly General Master Workman of the Knights of Labor and later Commissioner-General of Immigration of the United States, at a recent banquet in this city, was called on for a speech, in the course of which he said: "The steel trust has cornered steel, the oil trust has cornered oil, the flour trust has cornered flour, the sugar trust has cornered sugar, and why, in the name of God, should not the workingman corner the only product he has—labor?" He spoke for probably fifteen minutes, his remarks being warmly applauded at the close.

* * * *

Never since the world began has any great movement looking to the amelioration of the condition of man been stopped by the opposition of its enemies, nor will the present one for the improvement of the condition of the workingman. The grip of the "one-man power" is all the time growing weaker and the circle of the participants in control is continually being widened. It is not two hundred years since the time when the employer of labor practically if not actually owned his laborers, by paying them just enough to keep soul and body together, and even in this day we sometimes hear the term "living wages." The term is sufficiently clear to need no definition. "Living wages" permits no saving for age and illness; no education for the child; none of the comforts and enjoyments of life for the toiler—nothing but sufficient to keep him alive and strong enough to earn more. The irresistible march of labor toward securing a greater portion of the fruits of his labor is sought to be arrested by the machinery of the law, the process of prejudiced and venal courts, the legislation of subsidized legislatures, the use of the armed forces of the States and the nation, by hired slanderers and defamers in the press, by appeals to the people by the use of specious phrases like "the open shop," "man's right to labor," and "the sacredness of contract," but these do not produce more than slight delays. The work of organization and education is going on every minute. Occupations that a year or two ago were thought impossible of organizing now have strong unions; people who but recently regarded trades unions as anarchistic and malevolent are learning the truth and whom to look to for the truth; the farmer, who but a little while ago looked upon the trades unionist as his enemy, now sees in him his friend and fellow victim of the greed of aggregated wealth; the class between the great capitalist and the lowly workman is beginning to see that the labor movement is but the struggle for the right to live, and having been itself made to feel the merciless grip of the "captains of industry," is giving its sympathy and support to those who have the manhood to resist it. With such support the march is ever forward and onward; without it, the movement would still be forward and onward, but slower. With many hindrances and delays, still the workingman is going steadily on until he can reach the goal at which he will find the full measure of reward for his labor instead of receiving less than 25 per cent of it.

* * * *

I wish to add my words of commendation to those which have been given to the able and versatile "Tim Tickle," who writes from the Navy-Yard. He not alone writes legitimate news interestingly, but has suggestions and ideas to offer that can not help being of value to all workers in the field of labor. I wish there were more as willing and able as he. I should be glad to see correspondents from all the different trades engage in the work of education. Most men can write if they make an earnest effort to do so. All that is needed is the will and well-directed effort. It is true that the rewards for literary work are smaller, taken at large, than for most any other kind of labor—the few get all and the many little or nothing—but in this labor we must not look for personal remuneration, but work from love for our kind.

Dr. James Dick Bridger looked into the G. P. O. last Tuesday long enough to say "How are you?" to a few of his friends before starting for his future home, Memphis, Tenn., at which place he has been appointed principal medical examiner for the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of New York, probably the greatest insurance company in the world. He has been in New York for two or three years, practicing medicine at Bellevue Hospital and fitting himself for general practice. In his new position he will have the supervision of all the medical examiners for the company in the district of which Memphis is the headquarters, and that it is a lucrative place needs not be said. Dr. Bridger will be remembered as having been for several years an employe of the G. P. O., most of the time as a copy editor.

That foxy Norwegian, N. E. Ellingsen, who has been for a number of years a compositor and part of the time a proofreader in the G. P. O., was recently appointed to the position of stenographer and typewriter in the Treasury Department, a class of work for which he has been fitting himself for a number of years. Though I am told that he starts in at only $900 a year, he will not long be at that low salary. As I have stated before, printers make the best of clerks and their promotion rapid and regular.

That great and able editor, Col. Charles H. Slack, whom I am proud to call my friend, has favored me with a copy of his paper, the Bristol (Tenn.-Va.) Courier, and with it the Industrial Supplement, a 48-page affair, about 12 by 18 inches in size, splendidly printed, containing views of the city of Bristol and portraits of the distinguished citizens and officials (some of them are in both classes), including himself, which is an evidence of the enterprise of the paper as well as of the city. The Colonel is as picturesque (I would say "lurid" were it not that that means yellow) in his writings as he was in his conversation here, and that he is getting out a "rattling" good paper does not need my say-so. I wish him all the prosperity that such a hustler and all-round good fellow deserves.

Al Fennell, a proofreader on the Times, and Alec Gordon, one of the machinists, and young Mr. McLean, a son of Foreman Richard A. McLean, both of the Evening Star, paid the big office a visit the early part of the week. Mr. Fennell was an employe of the office for several years. They were properly astonished at what they saw.

NAVY YARD ITEMS.

There are busy times in the Yard at present. Several shops are not only working three shifts, but orders have been received that the men must labor on Sunday. This is caused by the construction department being in advance of the ordnance. It is only temporary however, and as soon as the ordnance for the Pennsylvania is completed it will cease.

Mr. P. H. Wilkinson, of E. G. C. Shop, returned to-day. He has been summering at Red Sulphur Springs, W. Va., associating with the "lungers" who visit that resort in their efforts to recuperate from the dreaded white plague. The boys gave the namesake of Patrick Henry the glad hand of welcome and congratulated him on his improved condition.

I feel very grateful to two of your able correspondents for the flattering notices in your last issue. It is very trying for a scribe to so condense his matter to make it readable and inviting. We are all subject to degrees of flattery, some more than others, and I must confess that I have a weakness in that direction. I shall always write as I live in an unassuming manner, stating facts as they appear truthfully, with malice toward none; but can not refrain from a little fun, as my non de plume indicates.

The Machinists Band will give their first grand concert and ball at National Rifles Armory Hall, Friday, October 14. This band, formed under the auspices of Columbia Lodge, has progressed wonderfully under the leadership of Prof. Stanley. This concert should be well patronized by Organized labor, as its roster contains none but Union men. Give the boys a good house and in return they will reciprocate by giving you "your money's worth or money back;" at least, that's what Dave Kaufman says, and Dave acts square.

It would seem that girls are very scarce in the Eastern Section. Two mechanics in the Yard think so at least as they met in a twenty-four foot ring outside the Navy Yard one evening this week to settle their courtship matters. It appears that both of these pugilists are enamored of the same lady, and, as she shows preference for both, the conclusion arrived at by both of these youngsters was that the best man could only be determined by hard knocks. The result is that neither were successful and the lady has accepted a third party. There are too many girls anxious to change their life conditions that young men should resort to such violent exercise for the benefit of a hundred spectators who delight in such an exhibition of brute force.

Capt. Wm. Ryan and John Kendel, of the Erecting Shop, have returned from Boston Yard, where they were detailed to place in position the training and elevating gear on the 8-inch mounts on the Chicago. Captain Ryan, who was a gallant Confederate soldier, informs me that he will ever cherish the kind reception he met with from the boys in blue. The commander of one of the G. A. R. Posts invited him to visit their headquarters and get acquainted with his late enemies. The Captain, being an eloquent orator, captivated the boys, and for an hour they fought over the battles of forty years ago. The result was, as usually happens between man and wife, a fight—a reconciliation, then a love feast. The Captain is anxiously waiting for another assignment to Boston.

Harry Severn, one of the newly appointed subinspectors of ordnance, is acting in a very suspicious manner. Usually he is of a retiring disposition and deeply in love with this city. Recently a change took place and he is often seen at the B. & O. Depot with one of the sweetest girls on Capitol Hill, buying tickets for Baltimore. Dame Rumor has her eye on Sir Harry and as her tongue is ever busy she asserts positively that Harry is building a dove cote in that city, and he takes his little dove over to inspect the cage. Harry is a jolly, happy-go-lucky Union man, whose hand is always open to the tramp machinist, and whose heart is ever steadfast to his best girl. I would like to give her name, but can not until I receive an invite to act as scribe on the occasion.

Commander Ackerman has been assigned to the Ordnance Department in the Yard. He relieves Commander Knapp, who leaves with the best wishes of every employe. The biography of Commander Ackerman almost equals the story of Ishmael Worth, written by Mrs. Southworth many years ago. Being a son of a poor farmer, he toiled in the fields during the day, and burnt the midnight oil educating himself. One day his Congressman announced that as he had a vacancy at Annapolis he would make the appointment by competition. Young Ackerman entered into the examination and was as proud as a boy with his first pair of red top boots when he was informed that he had carried off the honors. The four years of his life at Annapolis was one of self denial and hard study but he was amply rewarded when he again passed at the head of his class. To-day he is one of the brightest stars in Naval circles, and no doubt in coming years will creditably fill the office of Admiral. I was glad to take him by the hand and welcome him back to the Yard after fourteen years absence.

Acting Secretary Darling has issued the following order:

On and after this date, September 29, 1904, employes of Navy Yards and Naval Stations within the continental limits of the United States shall receive their pay during working hours.

For sometime a controversy has existed between the employes of the Navy Yard and the officials in charge relative to the manner of paying off. The midnight force, who labor from 12 midnight to 8 a. m., were compelled to wait until 9 and sometimes 9.30 a. m., for their pay, creating much dissatisfaction, as the workmen were tired and sleepy. A petition was presented to the authorities asking redress, without avail. The Department was asked to relieve the situation, with the same result. As the last resort the President was appealed to and immediately saw the equity and justice, and issued the order as promulgated by Secretary Darling. There is one thing I can not fathom why it is that such trivial matters can not be consummated by the officials having such matters in charge without having to take up the time of the Secretary much less the President.

The Baltimore paper stated that the President well knew that organized labor in the different Yards were antagonistic to him, and that he had issued the order over the Secretary's head as a political move, thus throwing a sop to the working man.

I am astonished that any paper would publish such a statement. Democratic as I am I know enough of the President, and his action in this matter to say that President Roosevelt is too honorable to stoop to such peanut politics. We have always found him willing to give our committees a hearing, and when we prove to him that equity and justice was on our side, he without hesitation granted our request. Without fear of punishment or seeking any reward, I am free to state that no President since the days of Lincoln, gave to the employes in the Navy Yard the benefits we have received under President Roosevelt.

I wish also to state that it is not true that organized labor in the different Yards are antagonistic to his election. There are Roosevelt men and Parker men. The men will go to their homes and vote for their candidate, but all will agree with me that we in the Washington Navy Yard have a friend in Teddy.

Albert E. Ingalls.

The following resolutions in regard to the sudden death of Albert E. Ingalls were passed by the chapel of the Proof Division of the G. P. O. last Thursday:

WHEREAS, the Great Reaper has once more visited this chapel and taken directly from our midst our friend and co-laborer, Albert E. Ingalls, who, during the long years of his association with the members of this and other divisions of the Government Printing Office, had by his uniform kindness of heart and gentleness of disposition and the possession of all the characteristics of a high-minded, honorable, brave American manhood won and retained the respect, esteem, and friendship of all our membership; therefore

Resolved, That while we bow in submission to the Divine decree we can not refrain from giving expression to our sense of loss in his sudden removal from our midst, and shall ever recall him in our memories as one—

"Born in some happy hour
When envy slept and love alone awaked."

Resolved, That in the death of Albert E. Ingalls this chapel and Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, loses a tried, true, and loyal member, and the cause of organized labor a wise, conservative, and consistent adherent.

Resolved, That we hereby extend to the surviving relatives of our departed friend our sincere and heartfelt sympathy in this hour of deep affliction, and to assure them that their grief is shared by the entire membership of this chapel.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the sister of the deceased, and copies be furnished the local and International trade journals.

Respectfully submitted.

George D. Hughes Dead.

After a lingering illness of three years, with locomotor ataxia, George D. Hughes, a former employe of the War Branch and also at one time of the old Third Division, Government Printing Office, died on Tuesday at his home, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Mr. Hughes was taken ill while in this city and went to his parents at Poughkeepsie, where he received all the attention that could be given him in his condition. M. N. Serrano, an intimate friend of Mr. Hughes during his residence in this city, left yesterday to attend the funeral.

Election Notice.

The vote on the propositions submitted to the referendum by the I. T. U. will be taken on Wednesday, October 12. Unattached members desiring to vote on the propositions may deposit their ballots at the office of the Secretary between the hours of 5 and 7 p. m. on the above date by exhibiting the current working card.

Second Division.

J. C. Wilson has returned from leave.

F. E. Chapin has been assigned to the Proof Room again.

Wm. H. Cornish and E. J. Newcombe were unanimously chosen chairman and secretary yesterday.

Courtney Thayer is now on leave, presumably showing the babies the sights of Washington.

C. P. Leonard and A. Force Engel have been transferred to this room from the Spess. The latter is now on leave.

J. Fred Orth was off Tuesday attending the Presbytery at Kensington as a delegate from the Eastern Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Ira M. Ingalls has been transferred to the proof room. A number of former readers in this room are now on the anxious seat.

L. J. Runyan returned to work Monday. While on leave he was busy fixing up his home, which now has all the conveniences of a city house.

Dave Pollock left for the Printers' Home at Colorado Springs last Thursday morning. He has the well wishes of his large circle of friends.

Frank D. King resigned this week to become a temporary letter carrier from the G street station. This kind of work is much healthier than printing.

Samuel E. Gover, Slug 56, of Baltimore, resigned Wednesday to take ad cases on the Times. Last March he resigned to accept a make-up's position on the Herald, of Baltimore.

Mike Molan, of the Treasury Branch, is enjoying a three days transfer to the main office while the former office is undergoing repairs. All of the force are either on leave or transfer.

A. D. Smoot, who came over from the Spess the other day, has a son in this room. Frank P. Lippincott also has a son in this room, F. R., but H. J. Lowe is no relative to A. F. Lowe.

Like the motion of the waves which perpetually toll the bell buoy in the ocean a word now and then from Watts or French keeps the base vibrations of Sam Milburn's voice ringing in our ears.

Bill Fuhrman says there ain't going to be no Bill Force this year, all because Henry Taylor refuses to go on any more. Henry says that day work is good enough for him now, after twenty years on the Bill Force.

The probationary appointees committee who waited on Commissioner Black and the others this week say the Commissioners were favorably disposed to their request, and suggested that eligibles be required to furnish only sworn statements as to their employment in the interim between examinations, and that examinations stand good for five years. All of which seems very satisfactory to all concerned.

Vincent T. Howard has received a copy of the Bristol, Va-Tenn. Courier special edition, and Industrial Supplement. The supplement is about the size of a 5-column paper, and contains 50-pages and cover of finely printed matter on heavy book paper. The ads are displayed well above the average, the cuts are artistically arranged, the matter well edited, and the press work first-class. The book partially resembles the one gotten out by the Star some time ago celebrating their fiftieth anniversary, but this one, to my taste, is far handsomer. Col. J. H. Slack, formerly of the G. P. O., is the editor of the Courier.

S

In spite of its bulges,
There's no one indulges
The thought that this letter
Is any way better
Than others about it,
Although we can't doubt it
Is more noble and grand,
If of German text brand,
For as such it must be
A Dutch S, don't you see?

T

With two letters T set face up in a row,
And care taken that neither out of line drops,
A combine will be formed, quite easy to show,
Which will do in its way what's now done by hops.
Of course this statement you'll doubt, as doubt well you may,
Yet 'tis the truth, as we can prove to the letter,
And to establish the fact we need only say
That the two T's like the hops, maketh beer better.

U

Our only ex-President's fame
In a slight, but certain, sense came
From the free use of this letter, always in feud;
For it is certainly true
That without this letter U
There could be no "innocuous desuetude."

Courting, sparking and spooning are all relative terms,
But as neither, we reckon, are infested by germs,
'Tisn't germs, surely, that bring ailing to letter above,
Which is spooney, we know, because 'tis always in love.

Charles O. Doten is spending fifteen days leave on his farm in Spottsylvania County, Virginia.

A new girl baby was born to Mr. Will W. Frye last Friday, September 30. This makes six of the small Frye—three boys and three girls.

Wishing to speak with Pard Julian recently without keeping him from his work, I asked him: "Pard, are you behind your average?" "If you compare me with Frye, I'm about six behind my average," was the answer.

They are catching us o'nights occasionally. We can't complain, however, as we get less night work than other divisions. It is fair to presume that there will now be considerable extra work, on account of the imminence of the National election and the large contingent that will go home to vote for President.

The day after I wrote the item about George C. Sparks which appeared last week, George himself walked in, anticipating the program marked out for him by several weeks. In spite of weakness—the inevitable result of a long sickness—he has kept at work and is improving every day. George's recovery shows what a strong will, a good doctor, and first-rate nursing will do.

Paul Laurence Dunbar, the noted negro poet, whose work has appeared in the Century and many other leading publications of this country and England, says: "I have never reached an elevated plateau, and I am glad I never did. I believe when an author ceases to climb he ceases also to lift his readers up with him."

The above is of interest, in view of the talk in this paper some time since about the "elevated mental plateau" somebody was said to be occupying.

Since former Chairman Goldstein embarked for New York we have had a large experience with presiding officers of the Chapel, no less than five gentlemen having served in that capacity for greater or less periods of time. On one day in particular, namely, September 19, we had three different Chairmen: LeMerle began the day, but soon deputized Goodkey to act in his stead; then followed the coup d'etat resulting in the election of Mr. Childress. For real excitement—something to stir the blood—the Third is the place!

The Average Book, which was distirbuted last year to the G. P.O. printers by the Berean Sunday School Class of the Ninth Street Christian Church, will be furnished this year by the Timothy Class of the same church. The Bereans have undertaken other work which necessitated their letting this go. The Timothys are a very progressive class of young men from 16 to 25 years of age. Besides other work they are now conducting the Sunday School of the new Southeast Church, the corner stone of which was laid last Sunday. The Average Book will have many new features this year and will be ready for distribution about November 1.

The ladies are with us at last. For a long time this division has been ruled by a queen, who, although a lone woman working with a hundred men, has borne herself with a dignity that commands respect from every one. But since the advent of the machines in the Gazette Division began to break the associations of a score of years or more there have been many transfers to the big building, among whom are several of the gentler sex. So to the Third Division come Alice Guild and Margaret A. Evans, to share with Nellie H. Shipman in that dominion which women ever hold over men. Welcome, ladies! The Third extends to you the right hand of fellowship.

Election day in the Third Division has come and gone. The result came somewhat as a surprise, but the defeated man can feel no chagrin over the fact, for the change of two votes would have made the vote a tie. At the chapel meeting held to nominate candidates for office, Messrs. J. H Childress, Robert P. Piehoff, and Joseph, E. Goodkey (the latter a former chairman of the old Second), were nominated. Elmer Dement was elected Secretary without opposition. Chairman Childress then appointed Messrs. Will W. Frye and T. J. Arrington to act as tellers and the meeting adjourned. During the balloting, which was spirited, the tellers searched for every voter in the room and then corralled a couple who had been detailed to the main proof room. The count showed the following result: Piehoff, 57; Childress, 53; Goodkey, 13. Although not having a majority vote, Mr. Piehoff became chairman in accordance with a vote of the Chapel that the candidate having the greatest number of votes should be elected. It is proper to state that the result of the election meets with Mr. Goodkey's approval.

J. W. BELCHER.

Fourth Division.

The universal eight-hour proposition will, according to interviews, get the unanimous support of this chapel. It ought to have the favorable vote of every printer who is eligible to vote upon it.

Last Friday the chapel re-elected John P. Smith chairman and S. F. McDonough secretary. These gentlemen have been highly efficient officers, and their re-election is an indorsement of their good work.

The Fourth has some clever people, who will be introduced to THE TRADES UNIONIST readers occasionally. For instance, there is "Sunshine Alley," with "Sunny Jim," who get up their "average" with vigor and vim; who start many rumors and declare them off; but who wear the smile that won't come off.

Tim Tickle, Navy Yard correspondent, hits the nail on the head when he says "workingmen have an opportunity every two years to raise their wages at least 10 per cent with their votes." It's much better to use brains and ballots in a constructive way than bullets and blood in a destructive way. Paste this in your hat.

A member of the Fourth Division attended the meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, held at Tpyographical Temple last Friday night. The gentleman in question said that members of the union were conspicuous by their absence, and he did not understand why it was that the women were not given more encouragement to build up their organization. The fault apparently lies in the fact that they have had no permanent meeting time, but as the union hall is vacant on the second, third and fourth Tuesdays, the first Wednesday, every Friday and every Saturday evenings, it seems that the Auxiliary should have no trouble in arranging permanent meetings. Why not give the Auxiliary the use of the hall the first Wednesday night in each month without charge? Gentlemen, encourage the Auxiliary; see that they have good meetings; get your wives, daughters, and sisters to join, and help build it up, and it will become a powerful ally to the union.

"Man is the glory of the Lord,
And Woman is man's glory"—
Said one who spoke the heavenly word
And told a heavenly story.
The glory of His glory, then—
Most Holy while most human—
The crowning light of God and men,
The fairest life, is Woman.

Organized labor has for years sought the enactment of laws prohibiting the employment of children in factories under certain age. Man's allotted life was sometime ago fixed at three score years and ten, but according to present reckoning his years of usefulness end at thirty-five. There is no limit placed on woman, because it is impossible to tell when she arrives at the retiring age. Children are also limited, as to number, and like dogs and cats are considered somewhat in the way. As a nation and people we are coming to be less and less old fashioned.

Labor Notes.

In Great Britain's shipbuilding trades the proportion of out-of-work members of the unions was recently 12.9 per cent; a year ago it was 9 1 per cent.

The first organization of coal miners in this country was in 1861, by some miners who came from England and settled in the Bellevue district of Illinois.

A bill for the establishment of wage boards has been introduced in the English Parliament. The object is to fix the minimum wage to be paid in particular trades.

Union bakers at Cleveland, Ohio, are engaged in a house-to-house canvass, which is being made for the purpose of inducing residents of the city to eat the bread which bears the union label.

From April 10th last the hours of labor of the work people (about 1,350 in number) employed in the national printing works of the French government have been reduced from ten to nine per day.

The Cigarmakers will not hold an International convention this year, as proposed, but it is expected that a proposition to hold one next year will be submitted to the general membership for a referendum vote in the near future.

A referendum vote of the membership of the Bricklayers and Stone Masons' International Union on the question whether or not the organization shall join the American Federation of Labor and the Structural Building Trades Alliance, has been defeated and the organization will join neither body.

The coal miners of Southern Colorado have seceded from the United Mine Workers of America, and have joined the Western Federation of Miners. The dissension was caused by the National Executive Board withdrawing its financial support for continuing the strike in that district last fall, which at the time caused bitter feeling among the miners.

A press report states that a letter inviting the International Union of United Brewery Workmen to affiliate with the American Labor Union was read at the recent annual convention of the Brewery Workers, held at Indianapolis, Ind. A resolution providing that the Brewery Workers would withdraw its membership in the American Federation of Labor, and affiliate with the American Labor Union, was overwhelmingly defeated.

Bookbinders' Vote.

Local No. 4, I. B. of B., has voted on the various propositions submitted to the membership. Two propositions, known as Propositions No. 5 and 6, received the greatest attention.

Proposition No. 6 was defeated, 89 votes being cast in favor of the proposition, and 383 against. This proposition is intended to make a salaried officer of the International president.

Proposition No. 7, to increase the salary of the International secretary and have him take charge of the official Journal—The Bookbinder—was also defeated, the vote being 168 for and 342 against.

Was Shott Shot By Nott or Not?

A London paper professes to have found the following in an American newspaper:

"A duel was fought in Texas recently by Alexander Shott and John S. Nott. Nott was shot and Shott was not. In this case it is better to be Shott than Nott.

"There was a rumor that Nott was shot, and Shott avows that he shot Nott, which proves either that the shot shot at Nott was not shot, or that Nott was shot notwithstanding. Circumstantial evidence is not always good.

"It may be made to appear on trial that the shot Shott shot shot Nott, or as accidents with firearms are frequent, it may be possible that the shot Shott shot shot Shott, when the whole affair would resolve itself into its original elements, and Shott would be shot and Nott would be not.

"We think, however, that the Shott shot shot not Shott but Nott; anyway, it is hard to tell who was shot and who was not."

Blue blood is all right for would-be aristocrats, but the old-fashioned crimson brand is good enough for us.

Must Free Themsives.

The freedom in the industrial world must be gained through the trades unions, and the price of it is the payment of high dues, in this way furnishing the international union with the sinews of war should they be needed.

Many members of local unions who are the hardest kickers against the progressive element and who shirk the payment of dues most are the ones who think nothing of paying ten times the amount of their dues over the bar and at the card table. Such a policy is suicidal, and the time has come when steps must be taken to raise the contributions of the members to the International, and it should be put into effect at once. The troublous times are not far distant; the opponents of unions are busy, and busy in a way that are not talked about much; their effort is to find and attack the unions at their weakest point, and these are the points that we should find out and fortify by all means. One of the weakest points in a trades union—as with any other commercial enterprise—is a weak treasury. The way to strengthen it is to enlarge the contributions going to it. Few, if any, of the members would miss the added contribution that has been asked on previous occasions, and they would have returned to them amounts equal to that which they now received from the small payments they make.—Organized Labor.

How to "Divide Up."

In a suit brought by the Gurney Foundry Company against the Toiler, a labor paper of Toronto, one of the company's witnesses was compelled to admit that they made a profit of $15 to $20 a day from the labor of each molder employed. And the molders received $2 a day. The evidence is valuable as showing that if a molder got all the wealth he produced he would receive from $4,000 to $6,000 a year. No wonder such manufacturers can afford to spend vast sums in fighting organized labor's demands for shorter hours and higher wages.—Saginaw Exponent.

Fatal After Fifty-Six Years.

A Russian who fought with Kossuth in the rebellion of 1848-49 received a bullet wound in the shoulder in the battle of Isaazegh. The bullet could not be extracted, but the wound healed satisfactorily and its presence was never felt until recently. Not long ago the soldier began to suffer pain in the region of the wound and mortification set in. He died from the wound fifty-six years after receiving it.

From Tobacco Workers International Union, asking for assistance of affiliated unions in fight against Trust-made tobacco, and particularly the product of Spencer Bros. Tobacco Co., of Martinsville, Va. Referred to Allied Label League.

From Baltimore Federation of Labor, calling attention to unfair product of Kidwell Bros. Co ,of Baltimore, canned goods packers, and asking that Retail Grocery Clerks and union men generally refuse to handle the product of that firm. Referred to Allied Label League.

From Tobacco Workers International Union, asking for full consideration of the blue label in the purchase of tobacco. Referred to Allied Label League.

From Labor Lyceum, asking indorsement of a circular giving the record of Hon. Richard Bartholdt's action on eight-hour bill as a member of the Labor Committee of House of Representatives, and requesting that copy of indorsement be sent to the St. Louis Trades and Labor Union. Circular indorsed and request complied with.

From Hod Carriers Union, No. 21, thanking the Grievance Committee of the Central Labor Union for aid in settling trouble between that Union and Norcross Bros., contractors. Placed on file.

From Electrical Workers, No. 26, reporting that a fine of $5 would be imposed on any member of that union found patronizing Kernan's or the Lafayette Theater. Placed on file.

From Upholsterers Union, No. 58, reporting that a fine of $5 will be imposed on any of its members found patronizing Kernan's. Placed on file.

From American Federation of Labor, giving in detail the notice of convention arrangements for next convention at San Francisco. A motion to elect a delegate to next convention was defeated.

From Samuel Gompers, president of American Federation of Labor, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 28, 1904.

Mr. C. W. WINSLOW,
Secretary Central Labor Union.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Among other matters receiving the attention of the Executive Council at its meeting held in this city last week, was the complaint made by the United Association of Plumbers, Gas Fitters, Steam Fitters, and Steam Fitters' Helpers, against your Central Labor Union, by reason of your having seated delegates from the Steam Fitters' Local Union, which has refused to comply with the decision of the Boston Convention of the American Federation of Labor to become part of the United Association.

The Executive Council directed that your attention be called to the fact that you are recognizing an antagonistic organization, in violation of the Constitution of the American Federation of Labor.

Under date of June 14, 1904, a circular was sent to the Central Bodies throughout the country, yours included, in which attention was called to the danger which menaces the trade union movement of the country, by aiding and encouraging antagonistic action on the part of Central Bodies toward the laws, principles and policy of the A. F. of L.; and that disintegration was threatened where unity should be the watchword.

The Executive Council expected compliance with the latter, and earnestly requested same. It finds itself confronted with the alternative of now asking the Central Bodies to comply with the decision of the Boston Convention, and that the Constitution of the American Federation of Labor be enforced; that unless the same is enforced by the Central Labor Union on or before November 1, 1904, the charter of the Central Body must be revoked.

Earnestly hoping that there will be no necessity for resorting to such extreme measures, but that your Central Labor Union will recognize the advisability of conforming to the requirements of the Constitution of the American Federation of Labor, and asking you to advise me in regard thereto, I am,

Fraternally yours,
SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

To be considered at next meeting.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Grievance Committee reported progress on certain matters and recommended that Granite Cutters case be referred to Executive Committee for immediate action.

Executive Committee made a partial report on investigation of condition of Allied Council of Building Trades, and a full report would be made at next meeting.

Musicians called attention to Kernan's and Lafayette Theater being on unfair list.

The Referendum Vote.

On the six propositions submitted to the membership of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, all were carried but the second one, calling for an increase of salary of International president and secretary-treasurer.

The total vote cast was 1,524.

Proposition No. 1: For, 1,069; against, 305

Proposition No. 2: For, 425; against, 1,049

Proposition No. 3: For, 1,364; against, 83

Proposition No. 4: For, 1,259; against, 136.

Proposition No. 5: For, 1,314; against, 104.

Proposition No. 6: For, 1,032; against, 443

The sixth proposition, to establish the eight-hour day January 1, 1906, received better support than many of its advocates expected of it, in view of the expression given in years past on a similar proposition. The vote by chapels on the sixth proposition was as follows:

NAVY YARD ITEMS.

I again, through your columns, have to acknowledge the kind consideration shown me by Brother Bloomer and an unknown. It certainly is very flattering to an amateur to receive such commendation from the prince of writers, as "Pard Bloomer" is known to be.

The examination of the apprentices in the different departments have been concluded and the boys are now on the ragged edge of suspense, waiting anxiously for the report of the board, on whose recommendation they will either remain in statu quo or be advanced.

Foreman M. A. Lynch has shaken the dust of Capitol Hill and has moved to the Northwest. We regret to make this announcement, as Mr. Lynch was considered not only a fixture, but one of our best citizens. We hope he will soon weary of his change and return to his first love.

Columbia Lodge, No. 174, I. A. of M., done itself credit at its regular meeting last Monday night when it gave a just recognition to the men, who by their zeal and energy befriended the employees in the Navy Yard. It took the form of an indorsement, in their efforts to again represent their constituents in Congress. The following received an indorsement, forwarded to them by Secretary O'Brien: Senator Burrows, of Michigan; Congressmen Van Duzer, of Nevada; Livernash and Wynn, of California; Hughes and Benny, of New Jersey; Roberts, of Massachusetts; Hearst, of New York; Dayton, of West Virginia, and Mudd, Wachter, and Pearre, of Maryland.

Captain Lentze, a former superintendent of the Gun Factory, was a visitor this week. As soon as his presence became known a rumor started that, as he was detached from the Maine, he had been detailed to release Captain Pendleton as superintendent. The rumor proved unfounded, for two reasons—first, because his rank is now too high to return except as commandant; second, that Captain Pendleton, under his assignment, has one more year to remain. It was very amusing, however, to see the "boozers" making arrangements for swearing off for the next two years, as they well know that under his former administration he was the sworn enemy of all men who preferred the rum shop to sober living.

"And he was just exactly right."

We have in the Navy Yard an exact counterpart of the famous Jim Jeffries as far as size and general appearance. It is very embarrassing to him, as he is so modest as to his size and pugilistic proportions when he is out for his Sunday stroll to have people stare at him and in many instances address him as Mr. Jeffries. Last Sunday, dressed in the top of fashion, with his silk dicer, and his cloth-top patent leather boots, friend Tom started out on his weekly meander, followed closely by his ever faithful daschund, an imported beagle from Boston. After doing Connecticut avenue and other fashionable resorts, he concluded that he would visit the Arsenal to inspect the work done by nonunion labor. No soon had he entered the grounds when some soldier boy started the cry that Jim Jeffries was on dress parade. Hundreds of boys gathered around Tom in their endeavors to grasp the champion's hand, and he only escaped with a good right arm by the bugle blast calling the boys to quarters. On leaving the grounds he espied your humble Tim, on whom he centered all the blessing found in the English language, presuming, of course, that I had tipped the boys. It is regretable that a quiet, inoffensive gentleman out for a Sunday stroll can not pursue the even tenor of his own way without being saluted as Mr. Jeffries, when he is only good-natured, courteous, Mr. Thomas Carroll, of Boston, a worthy brother of No. 174.

TIM TICKLE AT THE SMOKER.

As an invited guest, I attended the smoker given by the Central Labor Union on last Monday evening. I was received at the door by the chairman of the entertainment committee, E. J. Roche, and escorted to the amen corner provided for scribes and speakers.

I was at once placed in a very embarrassing position by being introduced to Detectives McNamara and Flathers as a very close friend of the chairman. Fortunately for me, I have known both sleuths for many years or I would have been a subject for suspicion for the rest of my life. Later Roche introduced me to Major Sylvester as an old friend of Tammany Hall. The Major gave me the glad hand, and with a twinkle in his left optic, he said, "Ed., this is my old friend Tim, who was associated in newspaper work with me when I was a boy." Friend Roche, after apologizing for his mistake, gave us each a pure Havana, imported from Wheeling, and returned to his duties.

Everything went off lovely. Friend Roche was equal to every want; he was everywhere at the same time looking to the amusements of his guests. The right man in the right place for the evening was Ed. Without him it would have been like a lawyer without a client, a physician without a patient.

I met with a pleasant reception from President Dickman, who in my opinion, fills the chair in a positive but just manner.

The evening was spent pleasantly—music galore. Speeches by prominent union men; plenty of Heurich's and other brands of malaria cure; plenty of Cubanolas, clay pipes from the ould sod, with an ample supply of "kill-me-quick" tobacco, etc.

The principal feature of the evening had to be omitted on account of a throat affection. It was a song written by Tim Tickle, entitled "The Full Dinner Pail," and to be sung by the sweet tenor of Tammany Hall, Brother Edward J. Roche For the benefit of others who never heard the remarkable tenor, I print it for their benefit;

Song—THE FULL DINNER PAIL.

Tune: "The Wearing of the Green."

Alphonse, have you heard the song, the latest thing that's out,
'Tis soothing to the workingman and the magnate with his gout.
'Tis the same old song we used to sing as we journeyed together by rail,
The song the politicians sing, "The Full Dinner Pail."

Dear Gaston, you have been entranced, that song was of long ago,
When the miners pockets bulged with cash, and Peabody went broke, you know.
The song that reaches the souls of men, in the workshop or in the home,
Is the song they sing on election day, "Let well enough alone."

CHORUS.

The full dinner pail! The full dinner pail!
It has shrunken awfully small;
As the prices go up and the wage goes down,
Soon I'll have no pail at all.

Alphonse, you are wrong again, I swear by Tim Sullivan's hat,
The song to catch the voters is "Workingmen, stand pat."
Stand pat for Baer and Peabody, the union man's best friend,
Don't listen to the miners cry, but vote for our Congressmen,
Who promise you this and promise you that before election day;
How they will legislate for workingmen and get them a raise in pay.
Did you ever see it happen? If so, I will take off my hat
And say to all my shopmates, "Workingmen, stand pat."

CHORUS.

The full dinner pail, etc.

But would it not be better to vote for men we know,
Who are true to union labor, as through the world they go;
Whose lives and actions speak the "truth," humanity's best friend,
These are the men we want to elect to be our Congressmen.
Then will our pails be full indeed, our wives and sweethearts glad;
Our children will be happy, Emperor Peabody will be mad,
To see the miners cheerful, their pockets filled with cash,
So send word to the Pacific Slope, vote for Livernash.

CHORUS.

The full dinner pail, etc.

The Secretary to the Mayor.

The following clipped from the Atlanta Constitution will be of interest to many in this city:

Announcement was made Wednesday that the secretary to Mayor Woodward next year will be Press Huddleston, now foreman of the composing room of the Atlanta News.

Mr. Huddleston was one of the most active of the supporters of Mr. Woodward, and was with him during all his ward meetings. The announcement will be of interest all over the city, as Mr. Huddleston is one of the best known and most popular young men of Atlanta.

The Cup of Cold Water.

The one whose every act showed love and sympathy and kindness for men said: "And whosoever shall give to drink unto those little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say to you he shall in no wise lose his reward." There is in this world to-day an opportunity for every human being to give the cup of cold water; and there is no waiting for the reward to be bestowed. The moment the cup is extended, that moment the reward is obtained.

A man bowed with grief because of the death of his beloved wife is given the warm handclasp that needs no words to explain what it means. That's the cup of cold water.

A woman, broken-hearted, yet woman-like, strong even in the presence of the greatest sorrow, is the beneficiary of those little neighborly services which, while they have no language, speak volumes in sympathy and love. That's the cup of cold water.

A man struggling against the power of an overwhelming appetite and sinking sometimes even to the gutter, is urged to try again and save himself from social oblivion. That's the cup of cold water.

The sisters of the Good Shepherd, devoting their lives to the rescue of fallen women. That's the cup of cold water.

The man who, thrown from a position through no fault of his own, finds assistance in obtaining means of a livelihood, through the intercession of some busy yet sympathetic neighbor. That's a cup of cold water.

The little garments that are sent to cover the nakedness of some child of the poor. That's the cup of cold water.

The contribution to the empty larder of the destitute, the supply of medicine to the poor and sick. That's the cup cold water.

The visits to the sick and injured. That's the cup of cold water.

The word of cheer to the stupid or thoughtless lad who finds the greatest problem of life to be the mastery of his simple studies. That's the cup of cold water.

The mending of the broken toy provides comfort to the little lad and the repairing of the tattered doll checks the sobs of the little girl; and that's the cup of cold water.

Some one has said. "The best portion of a good man's life is the little, nameless, unremembered acts of kindness and of love." Every tear that falls in sympathy with another's woe, every handclasp that is meant to assuage another's grief, every word that is given to provide encouragement to one who stumbles and falters on the way, every smile and every cheer and every sigh that is the product of our loving kindness contributes to the progress of the world, to the advantage of humanity and to the upbuilding of our own precious selves.

A man will obtain the best in life when he strives for that condition where thoughtlessness gives way to thoughtfulness, where love for one's self is well balanced with love for one's fellows, where men are not too dignified to mingle their tears with the tears of a grief-stricken neighbor, where the word of comfort is ever ready for the benefit of these "little ones," for the relief of the despairing and the help of the disconsolate. Then, whatever creeds and doctrines may say, the bearer of the cup of cold water, writing "finis" to his life's work, may, without fear and without trembling, face the great unknown with: "Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."—Richard L. Metcalf in Omaha World-Herald.

James B. Canfield Dead.

James B. Canfield, a member of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, died at Elkins, W. Va., on October 7. Mr. Canfield left this city some months ago and Secretary Seibold, of Columbia Union, received a letter a few days ago from his widow notifying him of Mr. Canfield's death.

In purchasing goods from advertisers in this paper, do not fail to mention the fact that you saw the advertisement in THE TRADES UNIONIST. It will accord you good treatment at the hand of the salesman, and incidentally help the paper.

HEAVY SENTENCE IMPOSED.

N. G. Meads Gets Twenty Months' Jail Term.

An argument was heard by Judge Swope at Gettysburg, Pa., on September 18, 1904, for a new trial for N. G. Meads, of Red Lion, convicted on the 25th of August for displaying and selling 15,000 cigars to H. H. Hershey, of York Springs, bearing a counterfeit union label.

Judge Swope overruled a motion for a new trial, after which Meads was given a sentence of twenty months in jail, with costs of prosecution.

The judge, in imposing sentence, said he considered it a low offense—a very mean offense. An offense that greatly injures thousands of people, robbing them of their just efforts and reward.

There is much rejoicing on the part of organized labor in general and cigarmakers in particular over the outcome of this case, as it is considered a substantial victory for the Union cause.

According to the officers of the Union, Meads has placed on the market more counterfeit label cigars than any other party that has ever indulged in this illegal traffic. These goods have been sold under various names, the "Crown" and "Park" Cigar Companies especially figuring extensively in the bogus trade. Millions of these cigars have been shipped throughout the country. The Unions determined to break up the sale of counterfeit goods everywhere, and officials of the Union have been instructed to put forth renewed efforts and ferret out all guilty parties and bring them to justice.

The evidence in this case shows they did and will buy cigars in case lots in order to get substantial evidence.

The other cases pending in the courts in this State will be fought to the bitter end.

Trades Union.

The American trade union was born with a sympathetic soul. Her ear is turned to catch the whispering wails of oppression. Her tongue has always denounced the wrong and upheld the right. Her hands have always been lifting men to a higher and better life by shortening their hours of toil, increasing their rate of pay and improving their environments in general. If she has erred it has been on the side of mercy and humanity, for, as an organization, she has always marched forward, only demanding the God-given and constitutional rights of the American workmen, seeking to arouse them to a sense of their rights as citizens of a great republic, and through organization establish their liberty. She has never thrown down the gauntlet to any one, and only stood by demanding the rights of free men under a free flag. If this is un American I pause for some one to show me where and why.—W. D. Mahon.

Colorado Springs Labor News.]

A. J. E. Hubbard, proprietor of the Labor News, Colorado Springs, was a caller at the Home on Monday.

Mrs. W. E. Shields and son Mark, of Denver, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. J E. Hubbard, Sunday and Monday last.

David Pollock, recommended by Columbia (Washington, D. C.) Union, No. 101, and whose application was approved by the admission committee of the Board of Trustees, arrived on Sunday evening and his name was added to the Home's roster. Mr. Pollock was assigned to a room in the annex building.

William F. Reed (accompanied by his wife, Jennie V.) and D. V. Chisholm (in company with Louise E. Gregory), Columbia Union, No. 101; F. L. Diilman, an employe of the Telegraph, affiliated with Colorado Springs Union, No. 82, and accompanied by his wife; and Joseph Gibson, of Columbia Union No. 101, were I. T. U. visitors at the Home recently.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1904.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

This being Sunday and having nothing else to do and nothing startling to write about, I believe I will preach a sermon. I have often wanted to preach a sermon, and, in keeping with my general confidence in my ability to do or learn to do anything that anybody else can do (always excepting to sing and to play the fiddle, in both of which I have failed), I have always believed that I could preach a sermon. Of course, it will not be an orthodox sermon. But how could it be when nobody can define orthodoxy? What was the orthodox belief of fifty years ago is not the orthodox belief of to-day. I believe I am safe in saying that, for I don't think anybody can say what the orthodox belief of to-day is. I am yet a young man—reasonably, not irrationally young—but I can remember when a horribly real, actual, white-hot hell was the burden of every preacher's discourse, especially in the Methodist Church, in which I was brought up. But who believes in a real, tangible, seething lake of fire now-a-days? What has happened to change our faith in that matter? Have we any new testimony on the subject? Nobody can say that we have, for we have only the same Holy Bible on which both the hell and the no-hell beliefs were and are founded, now as then the rule and guide of our faith. Then the change in faith must have been brought about by the application of a superior process of reasoning, there being no new testimony—an improved brand of intelligence that manifests itself in studying out and demonstrating the laws of nature far beyond what our fathers ever dreamed of. Who now believes in original sin as taught not two generations ago—that little children, dying unbaptized, went straight to the then orthodox hell, not for sins they had committed, but because of the sins of their progenitors? Was this change brought about by the aforesaid superior process of reasoning? If so, what further changes may not be brought about by the same improved brand of intelligence? We were taught that in six days God created the heavens and the earth, and that on the seventh He rested from His labors. In the light of the revelations of science, more indisputable than any written words, no matter how sacred, for they furnish tangible proof, who now believes that the world was created in six days about six thousand years ago? We were taught in our youth to believe in the resurrection of the body, but who now believes in it, or, for that matter, particularly desires it?

Has it not come to pass that religious faith has become an indefinite, indeterminate, rather shadowy thing—a matter of generalities, with no decided particularities? The agnostic can, and, if you will give him half a chance, will, formulate more postulates in half an hour than all Christendom can answer in a year, nothing being easier than a recital of the things one does not believe because he does not know. But can anyone tell definitely and intelligently what he does believe by way of giving a reason for the faith that is in him—getting away from generalities, I mean, and going into particulars—a real, definite idea of the plan of salvation and what it amounts to when carried into execution? There is not an intentional word of irreverence in this, but a whole lot of solemnly human "I want to know." When a minister of the gospel departs from the beaten path of the church which authorizes him to teach and advances ideas of his own, he is promptly brought to book, and properly so, for he is hired and paid to teach certain doctrines, and if he does not do it he should be willing to give up his job; and with all the variety of faiths in the world, all derived from different constructions and understanding of the same great source of all faith, he usually has little trouble in finding a church with which he can agree, or come near enough agreeing to accept a situation. But a council of the church is convened, composed of men of the same class of intellect as the reverend brother who had to be disciplined and possibly unfrocked, but possibly ten or fifteen years behind him in thinking, and they revise the creed and announce what it is proper to believe—still derived from the same great source. Of course these changes of faith are not radical—not at one time. But "little by little—line upon line and precept upon precept"—the changes are made until Luther, Calvin, Knox, Wesley, would not know their babies. There are churches whose adherents will stoutly claim that they have never changed in all the ages of their existence; but any student of history knows better, and, not desiring any wrangle, I will let it go at that, only saying that any church whose articles of faith are subject to the revision of human councils is bound to and necessarily does change with the advance of the world in knowledge and understanding.

So far this is not much of a sermon—I doubt if it has any claim whatever to call itself such. Sermons are of at least two classes—those which explain certain passages of the Scriptures and those in which the preacher, out of his superior knowledge, tells you what to do in order to be saved—that is, maps out a course of conduct for you tending that way. As I have no Bible at hand from which to choose a text and am not blest with a memory that suggests any, I will have to talk to you on my idea of the service most acceptable to the great Father of All.

This is a hard, grasping world, in which many are struggling for a much greater portion of wealth than they can possibly use, in securing which many more are deprived of what is necessary to comfortable existence. To those who have less than enough to live on, because of sickness or other disaster that has overtaken them, we can all spare a little of that with which we are blest. That is one form of charity, the greatest of all the virtues. But there are other and larger forms of charity which none of us are too poor to extend to our fellows, in doing which we are rendering the greatest homage to God of which man is capable, in my belief. Understand, I am only stating my own belief, for which no church can discipline me. This charity is that which recognizes the rights of others to do even that which is wrong in our sight without incurring our displeasure or any kind of punishment at our hands, we having never been divinely commissioned to judge our fellowmen, but, on the contrary, cautioned against doing so. I would have this extend into all the minutiæ of life—the recognition of the rights of others to do differently from what we do, principally because we have no taste for doing what they do, without permitting our actions or position regarding them being in the slightest degree altered by what they do—excepting, of course, violations of the law of the land, and even for such cases there are others appointed to deal with the offenders. This is one of the hardest things that a man can be asked to do, for we are all the victims of our own prejudices and so governed by them that they fix our standards of right and wrong. In illustration of this, one of the finest old fellows I know, one who I am sure tries to lead a Christian life in every way, is so prejudiced against a man who disagrees with him politically that it is impossible for him to feel a sincere friendship for such a man. Let this man be all that a man should or could be in every other respect, yet the fact that he is a political opponent "sticks in the craw" of this dear old friend of mine, to the obscuring of all his virtues. □ Such instances, and there are many as pronounced in other ways, go far to weaken my faith in man being a "free agent"—a very necessary dogma of all religious belief, and yet the most untenable of all. It is only to a slight extent that a man is a "free agent." Again I am only expressing my own belief, which you are perfectly free to dissent from without incurring my enmity in the slightest degree. A man is primarily governed in the thoughts of his inmost soul by the teachings of his earliest youth. Change as we will in after life as the result of thought, research, or surroundings, some portion of the faith that he learned at his mother's knee will cling to him. Its unreason may hammer at his brain in the light of subsequent knowledge, but "the scent of the roses will cling to it still." Secondarily, in his life practices he is governed by circumstances, environments, and conditions. Who among us cannot remember some trifling thing that altered the whole course of his life—not once merely, but many times? It is true, at the time we might have done the other thing from what we did, but, unable to see into the future and probably not thinking of it as of any moment at the time, were thrown into a different channel which we never left—perhaps one in which our actions do not meet the approval of the world, perhaps one which gains for us the applause of that aggregation.

My faith in the "free agent" proposition being weakened, I am inclined to doubt that necessary postulate of all Christian and religious doctrine that this life is a constant struggle to gain the joys of heaven and escape the pains of hell. In fact, I do not know any man whom I believe to have led such a life as to make him fit for the heaven the glories and requirements of which I learned in my adolescent years, and I am sure that I do not know a man whom I believe to deserve the everlasting agonies of the hell of which I was taught during the same period. I am inclined to think, in view of the apparent fact that a man is what he is and does what he does because of circumstances beyond the control of the quality of brain with which he has been endowed, that all men live the sort of lives they were intended to live, according to the will of the great Creator, for reasons of His own and for purposes which it is not given us to understand, and also that it is possible that our ideas of what is right and what is wrong are entirely at variance with the laws of Him from whose judgment there is no appeal to prejudice and dogma.

I am aware that such beliefs as mine are religious treason, for their universal adoption would abolish the necessity for ministers of the gospel to show us that every natural impulse is wrong, that we were born in a state of rebellion against our Maker, without our will, and that life is one constant warfare to gain admission to a heaven we as little deserve as we merit the pains of the hell we are thus striving to escape. I do not charge the preachers with making work for themselves by their teachings, as the cobbler confessed to doing in leading the mob in "Julius Cæsar," for I have no doubt of the genuineness of their faith. But I cannot think that they would welcome such a universal understanding as would render their further service unnecessary, any more than I doubt that the "evangelical churches" would be united into one great church were it not for the fact that such a merger would throw a number of bishops and other dignitaries out of jobs.

Now, "one word more," as all good preachers say when they are about half through. Firmly believing that the exhortation to praise God is but a relic and copying of the adulation of the sovereign by his subjects in all ages, I equally believe that the only way in which men can worship the All-Powerful Creator of the world is by being helpful and useful to their fellowmen, His children, and that if there is any sin in the world, distinguishing as such a desire or even a willingness to injure others, it is committed by those who grind the faces of God's poor.

Foreman David J. Roberts received a letter a few days ago from Carlos B. Tomlin saying that while he is gaining a little strength he is not making any encouraging headway. After his severe illness here during the spring it will take several months of the bracing Colorado air to restore him to the favorable condition he was in a year or so ago.

A few days ago I received a copy of the Del Rio Record-News, published at Del Rio, Val Verde County, Texas, the only purpose of which was to inform me of the whereabouts of Billy Moorhead, who is apparently employed on it. And my only excuse for mentioning the fact is that there are some of the "old rounders" hereabouts who knew Moorhead in the old days who will be glad to see any kind of mention of him. He put in many years as a "tourist," then settled down in Boston until the coming of the machines drove him out, when he went to Texas to put in the rest of his days with his brother on a ranch. But the receipt of this paper is notice to me that he has again gone back to his early love.

The linotype apprentices are making a healthy improvement in their work and by the time Congress meets they will be equal to all the emergencies of the Record. But I am more solid than ever in my opinion that the most economical results will be produced by so preparing the copy that they can "fol. lit." A man who is working his fingers as fast as he can and working his brain four or five times as fast as at hand work has little time to study out the necessary niceties of punctuation, capitalization, and the use of figures. Copy can be "edited up to the last comma" much more rapidly than lines can be set and cast, especially with the great probability of making new errors while doing so.

CYCLE.

Respecting A. E. Ingalls.

The following letter has been received by Secretary Seibold from Mr. Charles B. Wood, publisher of the Cape Vincent (N. Y.) Eagle, in whose care the body of our late fellow-craftsman, Mr. Albert E. Ingalls, was shipped, being in response to a letter of sympathy forwarded by the secretary to the relatives and friends of the deceased:

CAPE VINCENT, Oct. 3, 1904.

MR. GEO. SEIBOLD, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of September 29 duly received. Permit me, on behalf of the family, to convey to yourself and members of Typographical Union, No. 101, their sincere thanks for the kindness and consideration manifested toward them. The remains arrived at Cape Vincent at 4.50 p. m. on Friday, September 30. The funeral was held from the home of his sister, Miss Emma Ingalls, at half-past ten o'clock on the morning following. Cape Vincent Lodge, No. 293, F. A. A. M., conducted the last sad services at the grave.

The remains were in good condition, much to the satisfaction of his relatives and many friends.

Besides his sister, Miss Emma Ingalls, he is survived by three other sisters, Mrs. Gertrude Brooks, of Marshall, Mich.; Mrs. Mary Freeman, of Watertown, N. Y., and Mrs. Julia Burnham, of this village, all of whom were present at the funeral.

An acquaintance of over a quarter of a century with the deceased makes it possible for me to concur fully in the high testimonial concerning his character you submit. I always found him the soul of honor, kindness, sympathy, and helpfulness. He did more for others than he did for himself, and did it cheerfully.

Again thanking you and your union for the kind consideration in this matter, I am,

Fraternally yours,

CHARLES B. WOOD.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

Second Division.

J. J. Fenton is on the sick list.

Henry Taylor is now running proof press No. 2.

Thos. J. Galvin is suffering from a broken collar bone.

R. L. Moler has been transferred here from the Sixth Division.

Wm. A. Mitchell has been reinstated and assigned to this division.

C. P. Boss was off a day or so to attend the funeral of a relative.

Nat Watts has been promoted to McLaughlin's No. 1 proof press.

Frank E. (Deacon) Wright has gone to the Record to work on the machines.

Six o'clock every night but Saturday seems to be the caper all over the office now.

J. C. Wilson, F. E. Chapin, Harry Watkins, and J. M. McLaughlin have been sent to the proof room.

The First Division correspondent is missed very much. Is there no other as capable? This is a big division and ought to pe represented.

It is not known whether Alfred Dietz thinks Fuhrman is a publisher or not. However Fuhrman says he is flooded with Al's poetical (?) ebullitions which he will exhibit to any inquiring ones.

C. L. Nace will accompany his wife to Brooklyn, N. Y. on the 24th to spend a week's vacation. Mrs. Nace is a delegate to the convention of the Ladies Auxiliary to the Patriotic Sons of America.

Now that all the type of the office is on the point system and the machines cast the lines to even picas or nonpariels, it would seem desirable to change the cast on document, census, and other odd measures to even ems. Think of 52¾ ems for "doc." or 82¼ for census, and many other such casts. There are also many publications which differ only 3 or 4 or 5 points from some other work. They could be uniform. Machines will doubtless change the Record measure from 42¼ to some even number of ems.

Let us hope the breach between the Central Labor Union and the American Federation of Labor is not as grave as stated by the newspapers. Whatever the merits of the case, the mandate of the American Federation of Labor, which is the head or parent of the Central Labor Union, should be obeyed. Conservative unions represented in the central body will surely insist on their delegates following this course. Locals cutting loose from the main body which gives them strength is like individuals cutting loose from the union and making personal wage contracts. This is what opponents of organized labor are striving for.

"PIKES" (BY MCPIKE)
SOME MORE ALPHABETICAL ABERRATIONS.

W

A difficult question, not easy to handle,
Is this: Why does W resemble a scandal?
And yet here is an answer which fills well the bill:
The letter W's like scandal, it maketh ill will.

X

As we no xtra xertion xpend on this letter,
Which is xacting enough to xploit its intent,
No xplicit xcuse for not xplaining it better
Should from us be xpected to an excessive xtent.

Y

A certain day letter Y represents in each year
Upon which gunpowder's burn'd and "old glories" appear;
And the reason it does—we have no better in store—
Is that each is the fourth of (in) July—nothing more.

Z

A cage full of monkeys and the last letter on list
Make a queer combination that might never be missed;
Yet both are alike in a certain sense, as you'll see,
Because without the letter and "monks" no zoo could there be.

GONE FROM OUR SIGHT HAS DEACON FRANK WRIGHT.

Our worthy friend, Deacon Wright,
Has disappeared from the sight
Of his confreres in the Second—and that's really so;
His familiar stride we shall miss,
Yet surely there's much more than this
To regret, now that he's gone to the Record below;
Still we don't begrudge him his luck,
And when the Wright caper he's struck
On the keyboard machine, the poor typo's new foe,
May his nimble fingers caress,
And at no time make a bad mess
Of his work as those fiendish shuttles rush to and fro.
And now, to conclude, our best wish and hope
(Ere our own self-imposed task we forego)
Is that Deacon Wright's record above
May knock the spots from his record below.

Third Division.

J. C. Morgan, who returned from the Gazette two months ago, was transferred to the Spess Tuesday night.

Allen E. Cowles was transferred to the proof room last week, where, with Louis C. Johnson, he will represent this division for a while.

W. A. Morris has just returned to his frame after fifteen days' leave. For the previous two months Mr. Morris had been holding copy in the main proof room.

Fletcher Bowden, having bought a nice little home in Hyattsville, has moved out there and when he goes home nights now he knows how it feels to be monarch of all he surveys.

C. J. Unger and Cliff D. Scott went fishing Monday, and during their absence T. F. Hall remarked that the alley was "disgustingly quiet." They told Mr. Hall all about it when they got back, however, and he has regained his accustomed cheerfulness.

At the chapel meeting held for the purpose of electing tellers to collect the ballots to be cast on the various propositions submitted to the membership by the I. T. U. Convention, W. A. Kinsolving and W. Russell Branham were elected without opposition.

Several weeks ago I was betrayed into undue rejoicing over the disappearance of truck No. 1, which made more noise than two pigs under a gate. My rejoicing was only temporary, however, as the old truck soon reappeared, and almost daily racks the nerves of the entire force.

Several days ago neat average cards with blanks for the quantity of type set daily were distributed to each one in the division. Conspicuously displayed was the notice: "If you are tired and can't get up your average, take Chase's Livertone." We owe thanks to Mr. Chase for both the card and the advice.

Last week it was my privilege to chronicle the advent of a girl baby in the family of Will W. Frye. This week it is a genuine pleasure to announce that Miss Mabel Frye, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Will W. Frye, will be married October 19 to Mr. Arthur H. Buell, of Herndon, Va. Owing to sickness in the family the wedding will be a quiet one.

The rumor committee is still busy with that night force story. One version is that the night force will begin business on the 24th of this month; another, that the date will be about the middle of November; with the chance in favor of the man who said, after hearing the first two stories, "I don't believe either of 'em know a dam thing about it."

Two weeks ago Mr. H. S. Sutton, in the last "Just Every-Day Life" of that issue, made a statement which has puzzled me ever since. This is the statement:

In a letter to a lady friend in this city, Mrs. E. C. Jones, now in Kansas, announces a late addition to that gentleman's family.

Will Mr. Sutton kindly elucidate.

A circular published by authority of the various railroad companies sets forth the fact that employees of the Government may go to their homes to register or to vote for one fare for the round trip, with the exception of those of New England, who are to pay the regular rates after passing New York. As the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company owns or leases every steam railroad or steamboat line plying between New York and New England, we know whom to blame for a piece of mean discrimination.

Slug 47 went home the other day with a thumb so sore that he couldn't set type. I have had no personal communication with him since, but one of his alleymates says that our missing brother went to a doctor who performed an operation upon the sore thumb, extracting therefrom three or four nonpariel letters and some "type-dust" which had lodged under the nail. "It was rumored," so my informant said, "that a three-em quad had been dug from the thumb." If these things are true Slug 47 certainly deserves our hearty sympathy.

The leading article in The Inland Printer for November will be a general description of one of the most unique institutions in this country or abroad—the Union Printers' Home at Colorado Springs, Colorado. The article, which will be freely illustrated, will give something of the history of the institution and the events leading up to its establishment, its range of usefulness, its plan of management, and the manner in which it is supported. As a very wide and general interest is sustained in regard to this beneficient institution, indications point to heavy advance orders of this issue of The Inland Printer. In my opinion, no printer who wants to keep informed concerning matters of interest to the craft can afford to be without this magazine. As before stated, subscriptions may be placed with E. C. Saltzman, bankman, Third Division.

Fourth Division.

The writer sat upon his stool
And remarked a remark or two
On the subject of voting the eight-hour ticket
And his copy out of the window flew.

The Fourth is now working overtime every day 'till 6 o'clock.

Chairman Smith was somewhat surprised last week when he read THE TRADES UNIONIST concerning the report of the election. It was no doubt an agreeable surprise, however.

Considerable discussion was indulged in on the five propositions submitted to the membership this week, on one of which—the eight-hour day—it is safe to say the vote was unanimous.

The agitation in these items last week concerning the Woman's Auxiliary has already borne results. A committee of Auxiliary ladies called on Secretary Seibold, who informed them that the union had given them its hall to hold regular meetings on the first Monday night in each month. There you are ladies. Now boom the Auxiliary.

A few days ago a collection was taken up to aid the family of a union printer who had fallen a victim of an incurable disease. Never does the union printer refuse to aid a worthy cause, and while he is often criticised for failing to be as religious as some think he should be, his true Christian character shows itself in hundreds of ways that are not advertised in the daily press, not paraded before the public, and not exhibited in the silk-hat brigades on Sunday morning. The Christ like work of the union printer is done in a silent but effective way.

A typographical artist of the Fourth Division broke loose in a new vein Thursday morning. He came to work with a sad look on his face, and as he is usually happy and in a jovial mood, he was asked what was the matter. He said: "Some of us were sitting up with a dead friend the other night and as time went on the silence grew monotonous. Then we discussed the punishment of the hereafter. The dead man was a lifelong friend of mine. A long silence followed, and all the time I was thinking of how pathetic was the moment when my dead friend bade me good-bye and his soul fled to the next world. The monotony was was awful, and to relieve the situation one of the party bantered me to make a pun on the word punished." "Well, what did you do?" said I. "Why," said he, "there-up pun-I-shed tears."

The persistency with which the printers are going after the eight-hour law reminds one of the incident of the milkmaid and the frogs. On one occassion a milkmaid had filled a pail with milk and put it aside on the grass as she began to fill another pail. Two frogs came hopping along, and hopped into the pail of milk. They began to jump up and down to get out. They became tired of jumping, and one frog said to his brother frog, "I am discouraged. I will jump no more. I will sink and drown." "No, said his brother frog; keep jumping, you duffer, and see what turns up." But in a few moments the discouraged frog sank and drowned. The energetic and persistent frog, however, continued to jump, and in a short time the milk turned to butter and he sat on top and jumped out. Persistency and determination wins.

I was amused some time since by an article in a New York paper in which Socialists and Anarchists were lumped together as bed-fellows, and made the common target of denunciation. Now, in truth, the Socialist and the Anarchist sit at opposite ends of the teeter-board of argument. The Socialist is for universal equal law, for the brotherhoods for peace, for a collective working out of the high destiny of the race. The Anarchist is for no law at all, for universal struggle for a selfish individualism. The Anarchist is an Ishmaelite. He kneels at the shrine of Force. He would apply to the whole world the theory of Marat. The true Socialist is one who loves his neighbor as himself. He preaches peace. He would have all men practice the doctrines set forth by that Divine man who, in the agonies of the cross, spake words of charity and forgiveness. The Socialist aims to change the the competive order of civilization by the slow, but powerful forces of argument, of reason, of education and of example. The whole doctrine of Socialism was summed up, nearly nineteen hundred years ago, by one who said: "Do unto others as ye would that they should do to you." That is true Socialism. To many minds it is also true Christianity.

Bindery Notes.

THE TRADES UNIONIST costs but $1 a year.

Benny Sollers thinks he is the champion wrestler since he has conquered "Red Bill."

Jim Kearney must have some attraction in the Bindery lately as he is never seen on the corner at lunch time these days.

John Ahern, of Boston, is becoming quite a favorite with the fair sex—at least one of her. She thinks Jack is a stunner.

Tom Kelly is spending his leave at Reilly's Beach. He occasionly finds time to visit Deitz's, on the avenue, however.

Wilson Clark, who is greatly esteemed by his Baltimore friends, is warned that a little less noise in the train on the morning trip will "do."

The "toot" of the locomotive is sweet music to the ears of "King" Brady and he awaits with impatience for the time when he can take his leave.

The "two Fred's" are still far apart. One "Fred" accuses the other of being a "label" fiend. The accused feels that his pure and virtuous conduct is misconstrued.

Gus Bauer returns from his vacation looking well, despite the fact that his efforts to entertain the visiting Eagles in Baltimore must have taxed his powers in the hospitable line to the utmost.

John Foster, because of his well-known union principles, was unable to visit the show bearing his name that appeared at a down-town theater recently. I bet he don't show this paper at home.

The "bindery boys" seem to be greatly interested in the "Notes," but, the borrowing habit, as applied to newspapers, especially labor papers, is a bad one. The price of the paper is $1 a year. Come to the center.

Treasury Branch.

Bruce Austin returned from twenty days leave last week, which he spent in and about Washington.

Miss Mary E. Mangan returned several days ago from a month's leave spent at the Delaware Water Gap and Mt. Pocono, Pa.

Mrs. Laura V. Boss, of the press room, has been on the sick list for the past five weeks. Her many friends wish her a speedy recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. Theophilus McClure left about a week ago for Chicago, Ill., to visit relatives and friends. They will not return until after the election.

Fred I. Nobles is on thirty days leave. He will spend some time in Chicago and St. Louis, then he will go to his home in Wisconsin, where he will deposit his ballot before he returns.

Miss Lucy Morrison, who has been absent on account of sickness for the past three months or more, returned to work Monday of last week. Everybody was glad to see her, for Miss Morrison is very popular here.

Labor Must Be Free.

But to get the best and most out of labor it must not only be intelligent; it must also be free to rise or sink in the social scale. It must have a voice in making the laws under which it lives. Otherwise those laws will operate to hinder, not to help it to make the best fight of which it is capable for possession of home and foreign markets. Without this voice the laws will become more and more unequal and oppressive.

A labor class deprived of freedom, of a voice in government, can not maintain the advantage which mere intelligence and skill may have gained for it in the struggle for existence. As it loses freedom, a voice in government, it will lose ultimately its skill, its intelligence as an industrial factor, for it will become in effect subject to if not exactly the slave of the capitalistic and labor classes, which are free, which make the laws. And these classes will invariably act on the assumption that the more ignorant such a subject labor class is the less trouble it will cause. In their opinion slave labor is more manageable than free labor, gives rise to simpler social conditions, to problems less complex and difficult to handle.—Atlantic Monthly.

The Trade Union.

Unions are no longer experiments. They rank among the greatest successes of the century. Nothing else, since human history began, ever brought as large a share of prosperity to the home of the workingman. Nothing else ever succeeded so well in compelling the ruling few to consider the interests of the masses. Therefore the man who is out of the union to-day is fit for the scrap heap. No matter what his personal virtues may be, he is, socially speaking, only a piece of human junk. He is not only loafing when there is a great work to be done, but obstructing that work by his stupidity. When a man says he is in sympathy with organized labor and has no objection to labor organizing, and then roundly condemns every object sought by labor organizations, there is only one of two conclusions with respect to him. He has either got an ax to grind and wants organized labor to turn the stone, or else he does not know what he is saying.—Metal Polishers Journal.

Last Wishes Complied With.

From San Francisco Examiner, Oct. 3.]

While the last words of a prayer mingled with the pattering of the waves against the sides of the drifting boat, the ashes of George B. Bayliss, a veteran of the civil war, and one of the best known printers in San Francisco, were scattered upon the waters of the bay yesterday afternoon. For a moment they lay upon the surface and were covered by an armful of fragrant blossoms cast by one who had been a lifelong friend of the dead man.

As the sturdy boatmen pulled away from the spot a sea-gull, attracted by the color of the roses, swooped downward, then, as if awed by what it saw, flew screaming toward the Golden Gate.

When George B. Bayliss visited this city a year ago from the Soldiers' Home at Yountville, he said that he was going to die. He talked with "boys" of No. 21 of the Typographical Union, of which he was almost a charter member, and told them how he wished to be buried.

"It's almost '30' for me," he said. "And when I'm gone I want you to cremate my body, then take the ashes and scatter them on the waters of the bay."

When Bayless died, September 14th, his friends did not forget his wish. His body was burned. Yesterday two of those who had been his companions, J. E. Grossman and J. P. Olwell, took the ferry to Tiburon. They carried with them an urn. In it were the ashes of their friend. At Tiburon a boat was procured and the coxswain ordered to steer well out into the bay. When a certain point was reached oars were shipped and heads were bared. Then, in the stillness of the Sabbath afternoon, Grossman offered up a prayer and consigned the ashes to the waters. As they fell Olwell cast the flowers to cover them.

George Bayless had his wish fulfilled.

Short ladies should avoid much trimming on their skirts, says a fashion writer. Yes, and so should long ladies if their husbands are short.

Feeney to the Front.

From Evening Star, Oct. 7, 1904.]

When the President issued his order a few days ago closing the executive departments from 9 to 1 o'clock to day, he failed to include the Government Printing Office, which is not connected with any department. J. L. Feeney, former President of the Bookbinders' Union, representing the employees of the printing office, called on Secretary Loeb this morning and presented the following statement for the information of the President:

"In your order closing the executive departments from 9 a. m to 1 p. m. today as a mark of respect to the memory of our late Postmaster-General Henry C. Payne, you did not include in that order the Government Printing Office, which is more closely connected with the Post Office Department than any other department in this city. The employees of the Government Printing Office join with you in mourning the loss of our Postmaster General, and as most every division in the office is more or less employed on post-office work, we feel that we should have the same privilege as other employees of the Government to pay our respects to the honored dead by ceasing work during the funeral services in this city. We kindly request from you an order closing the Government Printing Office during the funeral services of our deceased Postmaster-General, and I can assure you if our request is granted it will be deeply appreciated by every employee in the office."

Mr. Feeney explained to Secretary Loeb that the Government Printing Office has no cabinet officer to look after its interests and that it not only desired to honor the memory of Mr. Payne, but to be put on exactly the same footing as the other departments of the Government. It felt somewhat lonesome to be so often left out of orders closing departments. Secretary Loeb was invited to become a godfather for the printing office. This he did in an effectual way, and secured from the President an order closing the printing office from 10.30 o'clock this morning to 12.30 to-day. This was satisfactory to the printing office, which desired the same treatment as other departments.

THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION

Action on the Ultimatum of President Gompers Deferred.

AUDITING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Plumbers Credentials Rejected—Several Unions Take Action on Kernan and Lafayette Theater Cases—Grogan Case Under Consideration—Press Committee Appointed by the Chair.

The regular weekly meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8 p. m. on Monday evening, President Dickman in the chair.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

The Grievance Committee reported progress.

CREDENTIALS.

Slate and Tile Roofers, No. 12: P. H. Loftus, George M. Huddleston, John Fanning, Thos. McConaty, and John C. Huddleston.

Electrical Workers, No. 26: R. Augusterfer, vice Collinson.

Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, No. 5: George Price and George W. Nyman, vice George Scott and S. Sutherland.

The credentials were received and delegates seated.

Credentials were presented from Journeymen Plumbers Union, No. 5, with names of five members of that organization. The Credentials Committee reported that the delegates-elect from Plumbers Union refused to affiliate with the Council of Allied Building Trades and the credentials were placed on file and delegates-elect were not accepted.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Steam Engineers, No. 77, introducing William Bowman and C. N Phillips as representatives of that Union to present a matter under consideration. Placed on file.

From Electrical Workers, No. 26, indorsing action of Central Labor Union in Kernan Theater and Woodward & Lothrop cases, and stating that a fine would be imposed on any of its members patronizing either of the establishments named. Placed on file.

From Bricklayers Union, No. 1, indorsing action of Central Labor Union in Kernan Theatre case and placing a fine of $5 on any of its members patronizing that resort. Placed on file.

From Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, stating that the action of the Central Labor Union was indorsed in declaring Kernan's Theater and the Lafayette Theater unfair, and placing a fine of $5 on any of its members found patronizing those theaters. Placed on file.

From Cigarmakers Union, No. 110, stating that they indorse action of Central Labor Union in placing Kernan's Theater on the unfair list and placing a fine of $5 on any member of that union patronizing that theater.

From Columbia Lodge of Machinists stating that action of Central Labor Union in declaring Kernan's Theater unfair was indorsed by the Lodge and the theater manager notified. Placed on file.

From Retail Clerks Union stating that the Newark Shoe Co. is the only shoe store it the city having an International contract with the Clerks Union, Placed on file.

From H. J. Laubach, late secretary-treasurer of Local Union, No. 87, Leather Workers on Horse Goods, protesting against proposed taking off of unfair list of Conrad Becker and S. D. Houck simply because the Union has been disrupted on account of the action of Mr. Becker in organizing opposition to the Union. Placed on file.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Bakers and Confectioners submitted a contract, which was indorsed.

Brewery Workmen reported that a fine of $5 had been imposed on any member found patronizing Kernan's Theater. They also asked if Contract Committee had a report on Capital Brewing Co.

Carpet Workers stated that a special committee had visited Peter Grogan Co., and requested that a committee of five be appointed to assist Carpet Workers to unionize the Grogan establishment.

Carriage and Wagon Workers stated that they had indorsed the boycott on Kernan's Theater and had placed a fine of $5 on any member found patronizing that resort.

Sheet Metal Workers called attention to fact that the Arlington Brewery Co., had not replied to communications forwarded to them by this body. Laid over to next meeting.

Journeymen Tailors asked if Retail Clerks Union had a right to issue a Union store card in stores where non-union tailors were employed. The chair directed Tailors to call attention of Retail Clerks Union to the matter.

Under new business the communication of President Gompers, of A. F. of L., respecting unseating of Steam Fitters was taken up, and on motion the whole matter was laid over to await a reply from President Gompers to a communication to be sent to President Gompers by Executive Committee relative to the case.

Attention being called to an article in the Post on Tuesday of last week purporting to be a report of proceedings of last meeting, a press committee was appointed.

The Auditing Committee made a report on excursion of 1904, and was accepted as progress.

NAVY-YARD ITEMS.

Brother Isaac B. Curran, of Columbia Lodge, has returned to work after an absence of several months on sick leave. He visited not only all the health resorts of the Pacific coast, but also those in Mexico, seeking health restoration. He returns to us not only pleased with his trip but in the best of health.

Parson Richard Emmons and bride, have gone to Jersey on their bridal tour. It will be remembered that I wrote of the wedding some weeks ago, but owing to pressure of work his services could not be spared. Now he is at leisure to go and enjoy himself with his bride and the Jersey mosquitoes. It is needless to say that this young buck of seventy-five will enjoy his bridal trip.

It is not often that a man makes a mistake and then takes pleasure in rectifying it, but this happens to me. In my last letter I stated that Foreman M. A. Lynch had moved from Capitol Hill to the Northwest section. I am pleased to state that I was misinformed. It was a near neighbor with a similar name. Foreman Lynch says he is so much in love with the garden spot of Washington that it would take a Charles County ox team to pull him away from Capitol Hill.

It is with sadness I chronicle the death of Mr. Augustus A. Warfield, of the Tool Division. Mr. Warfield was at his post last Monday in excellent health. After partaking of the evening meal he went to his desk to do some writing. But in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye he passed over the beyond, with a stroke of apoplexy. Peculiar in many traits, yet withal he was a man of many sterling qualities, an example that many young men in the Yard might emulate. He was my friend. I mourn his loss.

Some weeks ago I mentioned the accident that befell the aged machinist, Mr. Wm. A. Watson. It was thought at the time that the accident was not serious. Later blood poison developed, and on October 13, just as the sun sank to rest, our shopmate passed into endless sleep. What is death? Who can answer? That it separates the spirit from the flesh all admit. What of the spirit? I have an undying conviction that it survives. I know not how, nor where, but I do know that I have never thought upon death without a strong conviction grew upon me that my soul could not enter oblivion. It must survive. It must somewhere exist and adapt itself to its new condition and surroundings. It must be happiness; it can not be misery.

Oh, that it were possible
For one short hour to see
The souls we loved, that they might tell us
What and where they be.

May his example animate us all and inspire us to such a performance of our duties here that when over the cold and inanimate form of each one the words of tender friendship are spoken it may be truly said, "He fell a soldier at his post, serving his country and his God."

COLUMBIA LODGE SOCIAL.

Columbia Lodge, No. 174, I. A. of M., Wednesday evening last gave its annual smoker at its rendezvous, Naval Lodge Hall. The committee, headed by Brother Tucker, were equal to the occasion, supplying the guests with all the delicacies of the season. The musical program was under the supervision of Professor Stanley, the leader of the Machinist Band.

Professor Tommy Crowther, the celebrated baritone, sang a love song entiled "Asthore," and for an encore, "The Ship That Never Returned." Professor Crowther, who is an expert interpreter, not only of vocal but instrumental music, has a voice of great depth and volume, and no doubt will soon be in demand by those who appreciate music of a high character.

The principal speakers of the evening were Brothers Conlon, Robinson, and Holder, of the Grand Lodge, and Mr. John Dickman, president of the Central Labor Union. I was much impressed with Mr. Dickman's remarks, as they were plain spoken and of the sledge-hammer variety.

"How much better," said President Dickman, "would it have been if Andrew Carnegie had given his millions, wrung from labor, to establish homes for the aged and decrepid workmen who had given their lives of toil to enrich not only Carnegie, but those of his kind, than endowing and building monuments of marble, closed at all hours when workingmen are at leisure."

I wish I had space to give his address verbatim, but being limited, I will only state that such men as he, with his plain talk and sensible logic, creates a good impression wherever he goes.

The smoker came to an end at 11 p. m., and all left feeling comfortable within themselves that every one had an enjoyable evening, thanks to the Entertainment Committee.

TIM TICKLE'S SERMON.

Recently I was asked by a minister, "Why do you write fun, when there are so many serious questions at issue." The only answer I can give is this: That the Creator at my birth gave me a "Sunny Jim" disposition, with no pessimistic environments.

After reading Parson Bloomer's excellent sermon in your last issue, and to please my most serious brother, who never smiled but once in his life and that was when he announced to his congregation that the Lord, through the Bishop, had called him to another church at an increase of salary, I think that the Lord must be very good to preachers, as I never heard of him calling one to a church when the salary was less than he was receiving.

But to my text. I will start on Mental House Cleaning, and dedicate it to my ministerial brother, and ask him to begin by throwing out cracked ideas and old rags of superstition that match nothing. Cast behind old memories that will never fit you again. Scrub up new conceptions. Polish your latest recognition. Root out silliness and deceit. Cart out indecision, which is junk. Sweep the cobwebs out of your brain. Take down the unnatural pictures hanging over the walls of your mind. Have for frescoes no hieroglyphics of the past. Open the windows of your brain, and let the sweet fresh air of understanding sweep through your being.

Who does not love a tranquil heart, a sweet-tempered balanced life? It does not matter whether it rains or shines, or what misfortunes come to those possessing these blessings, for they are always sweet, serene, and calm. That exquisite poise of character which we call serenity is the last lesson of culture. It is the flowering of life, the fruitage of the soul. It is as precious as wisdom; more to be desired than gold. How contemptible mere money wealth looks in comparison with a serene life, a life that dwells in the ocean of truth, beneath the waves, beyond the reach of tempests, in the eternal calm.

How many people we know in labor organizations who sour their lives, who ruin all that is sweet and beautiful by explosive tempers; who destroy their poise of character by bad blood. In fact, it is a question whether the great majority of people do not ruin their lives and mar their happiness by lack of self-control and sunshine in their souls.

BE KIND TO EACH OTHER.

Be kind to each other, the night's coming on
When friend and when brother perchance may be gone;
Then midst our dejection how sweet to have earned
The blest recollection of kindness returned,
When day hath departed and memory keeps
Her watch broken-hearted where all she loved sleeps.

Let falsehood assail not, nor envy disprove,
Let trifles prevail not against those we love,
Nor change with to-morrow, should fortune take wing,
But the greater the sorrow, the closer yet cling.
Be kind to each other, the night's coming on
Where friend and where brother perchance may be gone.

I will say to my minister brother that he and I worship our God, only in a different manner. His God is afar off; mine is ever present. He approaches his God with fear and trembling; I approach mine with a heart filled with love, because my God is love. He gets as close to earth as his body will permit and pours out his unworthiness. I stand erect in the image of my Creator and call him my Father. He only seeks Heaven after death. My Heaven is on earth. He reasons that only the anointed will be saved. My religion teaches me that all or none will be saved, because I worship a Great God of Love. A God that loves "all" his children without one exception.

I do not ask for any crown,
But that which all may win
Nor seek to conquer any world
Except the one within.

Let me but state to my pious brother who seeks seriousness in sunshine, that if he would scatter blessings broadcast, give without wish for return, do good for the joy of it, bring a smile to wan faces, hope into dull eyes, sunshine into dark corners, and so touch men's lives that they shall feel the passing of some benign influence, the presence of something divine, here are aims for him.

Oh the joy of a big, happy heart and a kindly nature; the power to draw the best of men, to infuse into them a new life and courage, and that our God is love one another as we love God. If he will do this he will never have cause again to rebuke me for having sunshine in my heart.

I will conclude my first sermon by saying to him and his long-faced serious kind:

Laugh and the world laughs with you,
Weep and you weep alone;
For this sad old earth must borrow its mirth,
It has trouble enongh of its own.

Be glad and your friends are many,
Be sad and you lose them all;
There are none to decline your nectared wine
But alone you must drink life's gall.

COLUMBIA UNION MEETING

Kernan's and Lafayette Square Theater Placed on Unfair List.

REVISION OF LAWS TAKEN UP

Local Committee on Text-Books to be Appointed—Memorial Service to be Held December 4—Committee on Revision of Laws Makes Its Report—Four Deaths Since Last Meeting.

A well-attended meeting of Columbia Typographical Union was held last Sunday afternoon, the attendance of many present being evidently on account of the long expected report of the Committee on Codification and Revision of the Laws.

President Berg called the meeting to order promptly at 2.30 p. m., but subsequently turned the gavel over to Vice-President Love, the president being ill with neuralgia.

The reading of minutes of previous meeting were dispensed with.

The Secretary read the traveling cards received since last meeting, which were accepted.

The Nominations Committee, reporting favorably on the applications of James R. Darlington, Fred Welker, James McDaniel, and Guy B. Furtner for apprentice membership, and M. Allan Nalls for full membership, the candidates elect were duly elected.

Further time was asked in cases of A. Gowen, Thomas Fealy and Harry Kendrick, which was granted.

The candidates present were then obligated.

At this point in the proceedings President Berg relinquished the chair to Vice-President Love.

Bills for printing amounting to $46 25 were approved and ordered paid.

An appeal for aid from the Textile Workers of Fall River, Mass., was read, and on motion the chairman in the various chapels were requested to secure subscriptions for that purpose where they could be secured.

A report from the Central Labor Union relative to Kernan's Theater and Lafayette Square Theater being on the unfair list, and requesting action by this Union, on motion the Grievance Committee were requested to retire and bring in a report on Kernan's and Lafayette Square Theater matter. The committee subsequently reported favorably on the proposition, and a fine of $5 will be imposed on any member of Columbia Union found patronizing either of the theaters named.

On request of I. T. U. Label Committee on Text-Books, a local committee to aid in the work of the committee will be created.

The Secretary reporting that James B. Canfield, a deceased member, was one month in arrears at time of death, on motion Mr. Canfield was placed in good standing to permit of payment of death benefit to his widow.

Mr. Gompers, from Memorial Committee, reported that Sunday, December 4, had been selected as the day for the memorial exercises out of respect for deceased members of the Union, and that the committee were making preparations for carrying out its work.

Mr. Dickman, reporting for delegates from the Central Labor Union, denied the reports current in the daily press of a possible disintegration of the Central Labor Union, and assured the Union that the present controversy in the central body would be carefully and conservatively handled like similar questions in the past. He also explained the status of the Steam Fitters question as it bears on its relations with the Central Labor Union and the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. F. C. Roberts asked for a report from the Secret Committee having the subject matter of machines in the Government Printing Office in hand. A satisfactory reason being given for the report being withheld at this time, Mr. Roberts did not press his request.

President Berg reported for the officers of the Union that a call was made on the Civil Service Commission, in response to action by the Union, relative to certain details in examination of applicants now on temporary roll of the Government Printing Office, and that Commissioner Black had promised that the request would receive due consideration.

The President announced four deaths since last meeting.

The Secretary announced the result of the recent referendum vote, and also announced the transfer of N. E. Ellingsen from active to passive roll.

The report of the Committee on Revision and Codification of the Constitution and By-Laws being taken up, Article I was adopted and Article II, section 1, was likewise adopted, but sections 2 and 3, of Article II went over for further consideration. Sections 4, 5, and 6 were adopted.

Article III was adopted.

Mr. Kreiter moved to strike out all after the word "doorkeeper" in section 1, Article IV, being the obligation to candidates for office. Lost.

A motion to require fee to be paid by the Union where notary public is employed was adopted.

The Union then adjourned to November 13, for further consideration of report.

Prejudice Unfairer than Boycott.

There is an old saying to the effect that too much of a good thing is worse than too little of it. If this is not true it can not be denied that "extremes are dangerous." Understanding this, capitalists have always tried to make the public believe that every non-union man is on organized labor's unfair list, and thus build up an enmity between union men and non-union men for the benefit of capital, and the capitalist program has been helped along materially by howling individual labor newspapers misrepresenting organized labor and its real object. As a matter of fact, no union, except those controlled by foxy capitalists, has ever declared war against all non-union men. But the foxy capitalists, controlling most of the molds of public sentiment, have worked up a prejudice against organized labor so strong that now the politicians are catering for the non-union instead of the union vote. A candidate for public office now is queered if it gets out that he is tied up with organized labor.

But a better day for union labor will come when the rank and file, both union and non-union, do their own thinking.—Exchange.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

I glean some items of interest, especially in view of the fact that we have a number of former Pacific Coasters among us, from a bunch of Labor Clarions that a friend kindly sent me.

The Clarion, by the way is a mighty prosperous-looking paper of 16 pages, three wide columns to the page, and is the outgrowth of the Pacific Printer of some years ago. Then it was confined to typographical matters, but now it is a general labor paper. Here are the items:

Miles L. Farland surprised his friends by quietly entering the married state a few weeks ago in San Rafael. His wife is the daughter of David Lubin, of Weinstock, Lubin & Co. Congratulations are in order, and the printing fraternity wishes Mr. and Mrs. Farland long life and happiness.

(An explanatory note says: "David Lubin is one of the wealthiest merchants on the Pacific Coast. Farland is an ex-president of No. 21, always at the meetings, and is such a good fellow that the pleasure at his success is unanimous." I congratulate Mr. Farland on his success.)

The remains of George B. Bayless were cremated on September 16, at the crematory at the Odd Fellows' Cemetery. The decedent willed all the surplus money over the funeral expenses back into the union treasury.

Among the arrivals given is the name of B. G. Ferguson, to which the note is given: "Ferg has been sampling Portland, Seattle, and other North Pacific ports for the past three months."

W. J. White returned from the meeting of the trustees of the Union Printers' Home on September 21. He afterwards visited Denver. Mr. White agrees with all who have visited Colorado Springs that we have a splendid home for our aged and invalid members—an institution that is a credit to the wearers of the I. T. U. button.

(Again an explanation: "Elected two years ago; is White's first meeting with the committee.")

George P. Vance, foreman at Murdock's, is away on a vacation in Humboldt County. H. Herbert Steele is looking after Mr. Vance's desk temporarily.

Vice-President William R. Love in the president's chair last Sunday, on account of President John R. Berg's severe attack of neuralgia, was an agreeable surprise, for he took hold of matters like an experienced hand and presided with all the ability of a Joseph G. Cannon or a James M. Lynch—I don't know of any greater to compare him with. "Why a surprise?" Oh, because we haven't been in the habit of expecting much of our vice-presidents.

* * * *

The committee having the revision of the constitution, by-laws and scale of prices in charge have my sincere sympathy, for twice in my life I have served on similar committees. After working like hired men for four or five weeks, trying to get together on some kind of a report, when they bring forward their work for inspection it is the custom to treat them as though they were a pack of horse thieves, agreed on some damnable scheme for getting away with all the good that the union has ever accomplished. It is usually the practice to attack them on the methods upon which they have proceeded, by way of generality, and to revile every suggestion they make, by way of particularity. They huddle together like scared sheep, endeavoring to escape the justifiable wrath of everybody not on the committee, and in apologetic manner explain the reasons for the changes they recommend, cowering under the wrathful gaze of the outraged union. Oh, yes; it's a nice job, I don't think. I'd like to have the appointing of a committee on revision once. I think I could square up a lot of old scores at one fell swoop.

* * * *

It was with mingled trepidation and joy that the news was received in this city that Shelby Smith has announced himself for Parker and Davis, for it is remembered that he was a hot Donnelly man when Lynch was elected the President of the I. T. U. the first time and an equally ardent supporter of Charlie Hawkes against Lynch last spring, not to mention hoodoos he placed on other candidates, national and typographical, in years past by announcing that he was "for 'em." As one weeping Democrat put it to me, "Damn it, I thought we had a show this year; but Shelby has been on dead ones regularly for the last fourteen years." And he is so infernally honest that I'll bet he didn't get a cussed cent for it.

* * * *

It is with a good deal of pleasure that I learn that W. I. Reed, of the Record room, has entered the classes of the Corcoran Art School for a course in drawing. He undoubtedly has great natural talent for cartoon work, and it is a class of work for which in these days there is great demand. There is but one cartoonist in Washington who is worthy of the name, and there is all kinds of room for more, not to mention the thousands of opportunities all over the country. Mr. Reed has done some very clever work without having had a day's instruction.

I am glad I said the nice things I did about "Tim Tickle" a couple of weeks ago. Did you notice what he said about me last week? If I haven't any Bible, I remember what that good book says about casting your bread upon the waters. But really, "Tim," I do like your stuff.

It is pretty nearly time to start the excitement about next year's delegates to Toronto. I'd like to nominate my friend and side partner, Judge Charles H. Ennis, though I am a little afraid he has queered himself as chairman of the Laws Committee by reason of this revision business. But if that can be forgotten I believe that he would make a splendid delegate, and a man should be permitted to live a matter down whose life has been blameless otherwise. I think I can state that I am for Ennis.

* * * *

It did me proud to see the overwhelming majority in favor of the assessment for the purpose of making the struggle for the universal eight-hour day, for the members of this union have been very conservative—to put it mildly—in the past in voting money out of their own pockets when it went to the referendum. It shows an appreciation of the blessings we have enjoyed in that way for so many years and exhibits a true Christian disposition to help others to the same blissful condition. But I was disappointed in regard to the proposition to raise the salaries of the International President and Secretary-Treasurer to a sum more nearly commensurate with their superb ability. Their compensation should not be measured by what men are able to command as journeymen by our scales of prices, but by the service they render and the order of ability necessary to render such service, as well as the expense they are necessarily put to by reason of their positions. But I am not complaining. To carry the assessment for the eight-hour day by a majority of nearly two and a half to one is glory enough for one day. Greater liberality toward our I. T. U. officers will come later on, if it has not already been demonstrated by the other unions that their liberality is greater than ours of which I have no information at present.

It is with sincere grief that I observe that Brother McPike has come to the end of the alphabet and that we are to have no more explanations of the solemn significations of the letters. But I have hopes, which I will put in the form of a suggestion. Let him take up the figures and give us further literary treats, and by way of elucidation of my meaning I will give an example:

Take figure 1—its power is great,
For I discover it can create—
Now this results from deepest thought—
Properly placed, makes ten of naught.

The papers have been filled with accounts of the street railroad accident by which Edward R. Sprague, a compositor in the First Division, lost his life and Messrs. Goodkey, Thomson, Lawson, and others were hurt. It is probably one of those accidents which, not being foreseen, could not be prevented, but that does not bring life back into the mangled body of poor Sprague nor heal the wounds of those injured. That the greed of the companies in providing insufficient accommodations for the traffic at that hour of the day is to blame for the extent of the disaster no one can doubt, but such things will always exist as long as railroads are permitted to be managed solely with regard to the dividends they are to earn, and with no thought for the public other than what can be wrung out of it. The spirit that refuses its employes permission to become members of a labor union is the same spirit that will not permit human life to stand in the way of dollars. Of course the company and the officials are very sorry the disaster occurred, but they are not sorry enough to take such precautions that another will not occur if it involves the expenditure of money.

W. J. White, George A. Tracy, T. D. McKenna, George H. Knell and Phil Johnson, says the San Francisco Labor Clarion, have been appointed a committee to provide for the entertainment of the printers attending the A. F. of L. convention in that city as delegates or visitors. Mr. Tracy is well known in this city; White is one of the Home trustees; McKenna was a delegate to the St. Louis I. T. U. convention, and Johnson is an ex-delegate. It looks as though San Francisco Union will do the right thing by the visiting printers, as she always does on all other occasions.

While the announcement of the death of Thaddeus S. Slentz was made in last week's TRADES UNIONIST, the circumstances were not then known. Mr. Slentz, who had been an inmate of the Hampton (Va.) Soldiers' Home for about ten years, had arisen at 1 o'clock in the morning and gone to the bath room to take a bath. While in the tub he was stricken with paralysis, according to the physicians, and was drowned. The hot-water spigot being open and running until he was found, about 5 o'clock in the morning, his body was parboiled, with the exception of his face. Mr. Slentz was an employe of the Government Printing Office for over twenty-five years. By the way, I hear that Col. A. W. Tebbetts is no longer at Hampton, having been transferred to Johnson City, Tenn., some months ago.

The October number of the Typographical Journal, with the full report of the proceedings of the International body at St. Louis is a most creditable work. It contains so much of interest that even though it may require time by installments to read it such time will nevertheless be well spent. The record shows that delegates from here did their full "jooty," as usual.

The referendum vote for the eight-hour workday by No. 101 revealed the wholesome fact that the majority are unselfish, and that is glory enough for one day; but the vote of the G. P. Mr. Bloomer wields a versatile pen and is always sure of an audience, no matter what his theme for discussion may be. His "Sermon" in last issue of THE TRADES UNIONIST received very generous attention. Ivans ("Judge") Davis, of Specifications, has just returned from his farm in Old Virginia, where he turned to good account the greater portion of his thirty days' leave by giving personal attention to the gathering and husbanding of crops, the most bountiful of the series of his most prosperous years. He reports that the yield of potatoes and apples was exceptional, both as to quality and quantity. In the goodness of his heart rather than from any thought of pecuniary gain Mr. Davis is now offering to fill a few orders for potatoes (selects) at eighty cents per barrel, delivered, and apples of choice brands at one dollar, an amount barely sufficient to cover cost of packing and transportation. Billy Howlin, of the ring-alley, is authorized agent.

Disasters such as occurred on the suburban road at Eckington last Monday morning may be expected just as long as inadequate car service is tolerated by the public, or so long as corporative interests are able to dictate and enforce their "public-be-damned" policies. It is admitted that the company has in this instance been unusually fleet footed and liberal in ferreting out and settling with those who were slightly injured or whose clothing was torn or soiled; but the causes which led to the disaster, at the cost of one life and endangering scores of others, may be traced directly to that criminal parsimony which contemplates the least possible public convenience and safety and the lowest possible wage for employes that a good showing may be made in stock reports.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

First Division.

E. T. Stephenson has been transferred to the Treasury Division.

W. McFarlane is holding down Press No. 2, with W. J. Delano, assisting.

Among recent advancements to the Proof Room we note R. M. Hugdal.

R. A. Johnson is on the sick list. C. D. Johnson has returned from his leave.

Geo. A. Tuttle has the "run of the bank" this week, vice Gunn gone West.

Assistant Foreman Spottswood has returned from his annual leave, apparently much improved.

Dr. Starr, a retired physician of Charleston, S. C., and father of R. C. Starr, died recently.

With a "clean bill of health" C. F. Purdy has returned to work after a four weeks' quarantine.

Thos. J. Daily, imposer, has been summoned to his home in Illinois by the death of his mother.

Gee whiz, what did you think of Rev. Bloomer's sermon? Didn't think Pard was much on preaching. That's where we lose.

Messrs. Auracher, Heidingsfeld, Latham, McEvoy, Nachman, Pratt and Steele were among those who went over to New York to register.

Were you ever present at one of the knockers "busy moments" during lunch hour? Come in. The "knocks" are loud and sometimes funny.

When a death occurs in the Printing Office among the men, the first question invariably is, did he belong to the National Union? Or was he insured?

It will be a source of gratification to the many friends of D. J. Hegarty (36) to learn that he is rapidly recovering from a very sore foot, and will soon report for duty.

Frank M. Thompson is executing all kinds of good printing on Press No. 1, during C. J. Alexander's absence. Of course, Wm. Hutchison is the invaluable assistant.

We regret to announce that owing to continued ill-health, Geo. H. Ball, upon the advice of his physician, has been obliged to return to his far away Northern home in Maine. May he speedily be restored and return.

As good a laborer as ever signed the pay-roll has been transfered to the Sixth Division. We mean M. Cronin. We are glad to note the merited advancement. Its a good guess that our recent imposer, C. S. Gunn is correspondingly well pleased.

Are you a subscriber to THE TRADES UNIONIST? Why not? It only costs 10 cents per month. Hand your name to our affable and efficient clerk, F. H. Berger, and notice how promptly he will serve you. Give the paper a trial, and our word for it, you will never regret it.

Thaddeus Slentz, for many years an employe of the G. P. O., and occupying various positions of trust, died recently at the Soldiers Home at Hampton, Va., of paralysis. His remains were taken to Gettysburg, Pa., for interment. The deceased was a veteran of the Civil War. He was in his 67th year.

Among those going on their annual leave beginning October 20, are E. P. Bennett, Chas. W. Henry, Jas. B. Knapp, J. J. Sullivan, H. S. Gunn, F. M. Wernke, J. M. Weaver, R. A. Johnson, Jacob Persinger, F. W. Kern, E. J. Elwood, and G. W. Shaffer. Messrs. Viles and Ball have been granted leave without pay.

Geo. F. Montgomery, George H. Sehorn, and Will H. Chase, of this division, residents of Riverdale, Md., passengers on the ill-fated car, sustained injuries and have been incapacitated to work. "Monty" and the late E. R. Sprague were alley mates ever since the occupancy of the new building, one year ago on the 28th of September.

DEATH OF E. R. SPRAGUE.

This division was startled on Monday morning upon the receipt of the intelligence of the horrible railroad accident on the City and Suburban car line at T and Fourth streets northeast.

Messrs. Sehorn and Montgomery, passengers on the ill-fated car, brought the first information. Sorrow was evidenced on every hand when it was learned that Edward R. Sprague had died a few hours later at the Homeopathic Hospital.

The deceased received a probationary appointment through the Civil Service Commission, and was assigned to the First Division (then located in the old building) in the fall of 1902.

Mr. Sprague was appointed from Kansas, and was acquainted with Foreman Roberts. The deceased was a good printer, applied himself closely, and was universally liked by all with whom he came in contact. He was insured in the National Union for $2000, joining Nonpareil Council within a few weeks after his arrival. We have been told that he also carried some old line insurance. He was an Odd Fellow, but never affiliated with the local organization.

We understand that he was endeavoring to pay for a home in Kansas. His fellow workmen, fearing that his family might be in need, raised a handsome sum.

The deceased was one of the most robust men in this division, numbering more than 250 persons. He was in his thirty-eighth year, and leaves a widow, two daughters and a son, whose ages range from seven to eleven.

The sincere sympathy, not only of his division, but of the thousands of men and women in this great work shop, are extended to the bereaved widow and fatherless children.

Second Division.

P. J. McAuliffe is on leave.

Stephen T. Walton is spending his leave in Illinois.

Wm. C. Beddow is in Yankton, S. Dak., on his leave.

W. C. Glenn, W. E. Holt and J. B. Swinburne go on leave to-day.

Arthur Jacobs and S. W. Taylor were transfered to the Treasury Branch last week.

Chas. S. Dennison "Jerry" was reinstated this week and assigned to the Second Division.

Henry Taylor has made a change in the "Location of Galleys" chart by hand printing from type the letters and numbers which indicate where the galleys are.

Just as we are glad to welcome one apron man, Mr. McGraw, on his recovery from typhoid fever, we are sorry to learn that the other, Pat O'Brien, is now sick of the complaint. It is hoped he will soon recover.

It would seem from the vote of this union that "Sadie Maguire's" idea prevails in regard to increasing the salary of the International President and Secretary. Substantially he says, let them do something besides their routine duty worthy of reward, like Mitchell and others.

J. H. Swerdfiger has returned from a month's visit to Chicago and St. Louis. Mr. Swerdfiger does not believe in eating meats. Fruits and cereals are his diet. He says he feels fine because he abstained from eating but one meal a day while away. Mr. Swerdfiger says he lived on wheat alone for one whole year.

The vote of this Union for the eight-hour day was gratifying. While it is unfortunate that so many allowed assessment to prevent their support, yet 70 per cent were willing to help their fellow-workmen get what they themselves are now enjoying by reason of the support of these same fellow-printers.

The other day W. M. Stuart resurrected an old Columbia Union, No. 101, working card, dated March 21, 1874. It was for the quarter ending June 20, 1874. The dues then were 75 cents per quarter, says Mr. Stuart, and that the Union was better off than now. The present never seems like the "good old days" which are never to return.

The startling street car accident Monday morning which proved fatal to E. R. Sprague makes us feel how uncertain is this life. After a day of rest and starting out refreshed, for another week's work with high hopes and spirits, to have life snapped out so suddenly makes one think about the future state. His wife and children thus suddenly bereft of a loving husband and father have the sincere sympathy of his fellow-workmen.

FOR RENT—Furnished room at 11½ I street Northeast.

Third Division.

Burr G. Williams started last Saturday for his home near St. Louis, where he will remain until after election.

Allen E. Cowles is now in the main proof room, not as a copy-holder, as I stated last week, but as a proofreader.

E. G. Nalle will start Friday night for New York City, where he will register, returning in time to go to work Monday morning.

Mr. George L. Sherman, assistant foreman of this division, will start for his home in Elk City, Kan., on Saturday night. He will remain until after election.

I am very glad to see that but 21 votes in a total of 108 were cast against the eight-hour proposition in the Third Division. All honor to the 87 who voted in its favor.

Speaking of alley 6, it is remarkable for the location of a man who divides Roosevelt "Roo-" and of another man who speaks of the Democratic nominees as "Parker and Bridget."

Wellington F. Simons starts for his home in Watertown, N. Y., where he will register. As New York is in the "doubtful" column, "Si" will have his fare paid both ways. Such luck!

The result of the vote on the eight-hour proposition in this city last Wednesday was a gratifying surprise in view of predictions freely made that it would be defeated. If other cities have done as well, the International Typographical Union will present a solid front in 1906.

Slug-man Davis and Rule-man Le Merle were both away from their work last Saturday. On the previous day Mr. Davis had procured fifteen galleys of slugs in the "Y," and this little job, which, with the care of the rule cases, fell to Italic-man Kinsolving, kept the latter functionary on a continuous "hike" until the return of the absentees.

By reason of the fact that copies of the "Report of the Committee on Revision and Codification of Laws" were not distributed to the members of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, until last Saturday, nobody, except the committee and possibly a few others was prepared to vote intelligently upon the laws as submitted, and consideration of them had to be postponed.

Slug 47, who was referred to in this column last week purely in a spirit of fun, did not enjoy reading what was said about him. He and all others should not take too seriously the little squibs which appear now and then, as I have no desire to injure any man's feelings. Slug 47 is entitled to an apology and the same is hereby tendered. Let's shake and call it square.

W. B. Johnson started last week for Quitman, Ga., where he will remain until after election. In order to "relieve the suspense" of alley 6 as to his whereabouts, Mr. Johnson sent them a postal on which was a photograph of a cotton field, in which the sender was disclosed standing between two colored ladies of generous proportions. Mr. Johnson is surely in the "black belt."

E. C. Saltzman, bankman, who has been boarding the past two months with Messenger John F. Warner, will join his wife next week at St. Louis, starting Saturday night for that city. When the train stops at Jerusalem on the Pike the band will strike up "Meet Me at St. Louis, Louie." Mr. Saltzman will wind up a season of joyous reunions aud sight seeing by voting for President and will be telling us all about it shortly afterward. His friends wish him bon voyage.

Chairman Robert P. Piehoff had a sudden and unexpected hemorrhage of the lungs last Friday noon. After recovering sufficiently he went home and is now confined to the house. Mr. Piehoff commenced his duties as chairman on the first of this month, after having served one term as secretary, to which office he was elected shortly after being transferred to this division from the night force. He has our hearty sympathy in his illness, and our hopes for his speedy recovery.

A former compositor in this division, but now a proofreader, in the main proof room, namely, Allen E. Cowles, will start Saturday night for Madison, Wis., where he will get acquainted with his wife after a separation of two months. Mr. Cowles would have started a week sooner, but the partner of his joys and sorrows was in quarantine with an attack of scarlet fever, from which she has now happily recovered. Our friend will of course stay over until after election, and will incidentally do what he can to straighten out the political tangle up there.

Little Jimmie Mears, the eight-year old son of Robert J. Mears, died of croup at three o'clock Thursday morning. Mr. Mears will bury his little boy in Milton, Delaware, for which place he will start early this morning. A voluntary subscription was taken up by the chapel, and the proceeds devoted to the purchase of a floral piece expressive of our sympathy for the stricken family. At a special chapel meeting held Wednesday noon, the following resolutions were unanimously passed:

WHEREAS, the grim monitor, Death, has visited the home of our friend and fellow-workman, Robert J. Mears, and has plucked from that home one of its precious jewels in the taking away of little Jimmie; therefore be it

Resolved, That this Chapel extend to the grief-stricken parents its condolence and sympathy in this sad hour of affliction; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family, and also published in THE TRADES UNIONIST.

IS IT RIGHT?

They starve by scores when the looms are still
And the spindles rest in the broken webs;
And childish wailings the night hours fill
As the tiny life-tide slowly ebbs.
The mother hugs to her barren breast
The dying babe through the awful night;
While the father, worn by his useless quest,
Stands helpless, hopeless—but is it right?

The music rings through the palace halls
And Newport homes are a gorgeous blaze;
And laughter flows when the gold god calls
To the Smart Set choir for its songs of praise.
The diamonds flash on the bosoms fair,
While the revel lasts through the joyous night;
And the ruby wine takes the golden glare
Of festal scene—but is it right?

The children stand in a ragged line
Through the chilly hours at the soup house door;
Their faces light and their starved eyes shine
At the soup and the crust as they plead for more.
And the mother starves that the crust she gets
May keep her babe from the famine's blight;
While the father's tear through the long day wets
His sunken cheeks—but is it right?

The Newport dogs on their blankets lie
And doze well fed as their glad hours creep;
While the untouched food on the plates near by
The servants throw on the compost heap.
And dainty hands pat the shaggy hair
Of the well loved dogs in the palace bright,
And the lucky beasts and the owners fair
Go on their way—but is it right?

The children starve when the looms are still,
But laughter rings through the Newport halls.
A mother's wailings the night hours fill,
But the music swells at the Newport balls.
The infants wait at the soup house door,
But the Newport dogs blink their delight.
For the dogs are fat and the children poor,
And day goes on—but is it right?

After Many Years.

Maj. J. R. McKelvey, a well known and popular employe of the Government Printing Office, met an old friend in a singular manner last week.

The Major was taking a short walk along G street when he was accosted by an elderly gentleman and asked where the Government Printing Office was. The Major gave the desired information, and as he was going in that direction, although being on leave, he entered into conversation with the stranger, and discovered that they worked together in Marysville, Cal., in 1857, and had not met since then. The card he gave the Major bore the name of Chas. D. Woodman, Weaverville, Cal. It is needless to say Mr. Woodman and the Major "set a few rows" during the day and evening of Mr. Woodman's stay in this city.

Mr. Woodman had been East to see the Fair at St. Louis and came to the Far East to see Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston.

Bloomer's Sermon.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

I have read my friend Bloomer's sermon, and if he will continue preaching I shall be glad to be one of the congregation. Especially as he preaches in print, and I do not have to trust to a sense that is, more than ever, always below par. There is a sincerity in Bloomer that speaks in every sentence, and if the members of labor organizations were composed exclusively of men of his stamp, what a power they would be. However, to get back to the sermon. My friend has had the experience that doubtless many of us have had. The more we try to think out the great problem that has puzzled man ever since he became sufficiently "civilized" to ponder over such matters, the less we have left to hold on to. Inquiry suggests doubt, doubt begets rejection of much that was a comfort and a solace, and many a "Lord, help my unbelief," is breathed by those who find it much easier to lose the simple faith of childhood than to acquire in its place that which shall give comfort and peace.

I did not, like Bloomer, intend to preach a sermon when I started this letter. But the subject is so vast, so unfathomable, that I may as well pursue it a little while in my own fashion. The more we reason, the longer we speculate. The wisest are as much at sea as the least profound. But one and all appreciate the glory of a belief that, in the last moment of William McKinley's earthly life, could speak, "Thy will be done." I think the conclusion my friend arrives at, that the best religion is to live worthily, is the True Religion. Consistently carried out, seven days in the week, each day is a day when the will of God is done. Whether he was God or man, no grander teacher ever instructed men and women than He of Nazereth. The empty forms of religion did not appeal to Him. The loud professions in the market place received but rebuke from Him, and His plain condemnation of humbugs of every sort ensured him speedily the all but unanimous criticism of "good society." The church proposed by Bloomer has a wide sphere of usefulness before it. It will be given the right hand of fellowship by not a single religious organization that now so persistently preaches the gospel of the Open Shop as against the Trades Unions who tyrannically insist on their members receiving a wage that will enable them to "look respectable" when going to church.

No, the new faith is not likely to overwhelm the creeds and doctrines that have attracted mankind into a hundred corrals, each surmounted by its own little band. I am afraid it will be lonesome for the preacher—this new church. And yet the doctrine is what Jesus preached. It is the brotherhood of of man. It recognizes, in one form or other, the Fatherhood of God. And what is religion, if it is anything, but the humble endeavor, on the part of every man and woman who believes in the spirit of what we know as Christianity, to live worthily, to live to be of some use to the world around us? I guess that is as far as I will go in reflecting on Brother Bloomer's sermon. The hereafter is so dim, so misty, so altogether unfathomable, that one becomes dizzy in its contemplation. And if any one tells us that he or she knows more about it than Bloomer and I, we know that's an assertion, and in no sense a fact. We do know that to live right, to deal justly, to act mercifully as we have opportunity, is what our conscience approves, and if we do all this as we journey through life, I feel very sure that all will be well with us when overcome with the sleep that knows no waking.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

Fore Gwener, Medi 23, ganwyd merch fechan i Mr. a Mrs. Edwin C. Jones, yn nghartref chwaer Mrs. Jones, Mrs. H. W. Hughes, Dry Creek. Fore dranoeth derbyniasom bellebyr o Manila oddiwrth ein cyfaill Edwin C. Jones yn ein hysbysu gyntaf am y ferch ieuanc. Er nad oes ond prin dair milldir a haner rhyngom a'r fan y ganwyd y fechan, yr oedd y newydd wedi teithio llawn ugain mil o filldiroedd cyn ein cyraedd. Mae y fam a'r fechan yn dod yn mlaen yn rhagorol.

Bydd yn ddrwg gan luaws cyfellion Edwin C. Jones ddeall iddo fod yn bur wael yn ddiweddar. Aeth ef a nifer o'i gyfoedion i gydginiawa ar y pedwerydd o Goryphenaf diweddaf, a bwytasant gucumerau, a bu yr oll yn bur wael am amser wedi hyny, ond deallwn en bod yn gwella. Mae Mr. Jones yn Acting Public Printer yn argraffdy y llywodraeth er's tro, ac amryw ganoedd o ddynion dan ei ofal. Efe anfonodd y llywdraeth allan gyntaf i sefydlu yr argraffdy, ac i sicrhau adeiladau i'r amcan, ac y mae wedi derbyn codiad yn ei gyflog droion er pan y mae yno. Caffed adferiad a llwydded eto.

The above (translated from the Welsh language for the benefit of my benighted brother who persists in wandering in the shadow of the valley) recites that the pastor of a little church in Kansas was apprized of the birth of a daughter in the Jones family by a message from Mr. Jones which had journeyed across the Pacific. After complimentary referring to Mr. Jones as Acting Public Printer in the Philippines, the article narrates that that gentleman, with others, had been suffering with serious indisposition, brought about by partaking of a diet of cucumbers.

When I see Assistant Hezlet toy a lengthy tabular statement a little bird sings "Fly far!" At the last fair given by the printers at Typographical Temple, together with Treasurer Otis, I had charge of the prizes distributed each evening, the duties of my end of the line being that of a "barker" on the door, to give a numbered coupon in exchange for each ticket of admission. In order to prepare for the drawing, no "numbers" were issued after 9 o'clock. Among the late arrivals one evening was a young typo, resplendent in evening dress, accompanied by two elaborately toileted "daughters of the gods." While the ladies were arranging their wraps their escort took me aside.

"See what a hit, Maud, I'd make with the ladies if you would make it so they would win a prize? Now fix it for me," he pleaded.

"Take this one. You can't lose," I retorted, as I slipped him a "dummy," in turn supplying the ladies.

As he ascended the stairs he was telling the divinities he had just fixed it so the ladies would draw a turkey on their coupons. Later in the evening he stood tugging at my coat sleeve.

"Do you know," he said, "we stood there and listened to them call out the prizes and the tickets we held did not come within two thousand of the lucky ones." The assistant's table and the next "take" occupy the same relative positions.

My Sunday afternoon stroll of the past week took in that vast mud heap on B street from Ninth to Eleventh, being rapidly transformed into the nation's show building. Few structures in the city will exceed it in floor space, and it will be a home when completed for a goodly portion of the Government's exhibit at St. Louis.

As soon as the grades and street lines are more accurately defined, at a point 500 feet southwest of the new terminal station, the Southern Hotel Company, incorporated under the laws of Virginia, will erect another commodious structure. I say "another," for the reason that this company now own and operate, I am told, the Ebbitt, the Willard, and the Raleigh.

H. S. SUTTON.

Record Division.

By the writing of this letter I do not wish to be regarded as a reguiar correspondent for this division. When I was transferred from the First Division to this room it was my determination at that time to keep out of print. But I have been asked repeatedly by various friends about the work the machines are doing, etc., so I feel this letter will best serve the purpose of an answer. As I said, my object will be to tell something of the machines. And what will it be? It's a pretty hard thing to do after all.

MACHINES.

The task of installing thirty-five double-decked linotypes has been a trying one indeed, and I feel pretty certain that most any one of the seventy operators will bear me out in the statement that the majority of the little troubles so far experienced have been the result of thoughtlessness on the part of the operator. Not intended thoughtlessness, but that which comes from over-anxiety to measure a large string.

As a sample of the strain under which some men are laboring, one day a distributor stopped. After the operator had proceeded as far as he could he discovered the stoppage.

"Number blank!" shouted the man, as he sank back into his chair with an air of disgust.

"Well, what is it?" asked the machinist.

"Oh, that awful thing has stopped again," he replied.

"Why, this machine hardly ever stops," said the machinist.

"Oh yes it does," said the disgusted man, "it stopped twice yesterday."

When it is known that the work of straightening out a distributor requires less than one minute one may readily see the strain under which the man was laboring.

Every day brings forth an increase in the efficiency of the force. At the beginning, even the older operators such as Weeks, Powers, Connor, Mattox, Scannell and others were handicapped by the change from the old machines necessary to the assemblying of letters from a double-decked machine, while the learners were confronted with obstacles never before thrown in the path of beginners, this being so because of the many little things to remember in assembling letters from a double-decked two-letter machine. In more than one instance the older operators have shown a speed bordering on 5,000 ems long primer per hour, while the newer operators are hitting the pike at all sorts of gaits.

The plant is at present under the control of the Mergenthaler people with Machinist W. A. Geary in charge. Mr. Geary has been with the Mergenthaler people many years. He is one of the finest machinists it was ever my pleasure to meet. When we consider the task he has had before him it is a wonder he has displayed the patience he has. He is an exceptionally hard worker; a man of few words, and interested equally in the success of both operator and machine.

The operators have had the benefit of much expert information. In fact too much for their own good. Expert O'Sullivan handed it out in a lavish manner. O'Sullivan's chief fault was in trying to teach the machine from the foundation to distributor in one lesson. He has departed, however, and Expert Banner is now among us. Being more conservative, I predict better results. But the expert after my own heart, however, is the one who told "Bill" Mattox to walk around the room once or twice when he got nervous. When "Bill's" nerve fails him its time we all took a trot around some thing or other.

Before the installation of the machines there was a general opinion that they could not "squirt." This was not only a mistaken but a foolish idea. It lead several operators to act in a reckless manner, put their mold disk in the wrong place, etc. The machines will "squirt." They will "squirt" backward, forward and sideways, but they will not "squirt" unless forced to do so by some act of carelessness. Several have made this discovery to their sorrow, but experience is a great teacher, and they will know better next time.

It may be necessary to organize a hospital corp to render first aid to the injured. Cuts and burns have been numerous. Charles Gardner received a "squirt" in the hand. Charles Radley got a bad cut in the finger; likewise E. E. Connor. Radley received his while learning, while Connor being an old operator, should have known better.

Machinist Claude Pendarvis, for several years with the Times, has joined the force. The elegant condition of the Times machines is the best recommendation we can give Pendarvis.

Saturday night the machines were called upon for the first time to do an overtime stunt. Charley Slentz will tell you whether they can keep the bank man busy or not.

Sometimes I think if Charley Dietrich had known as much about a keyboard as he does now when he organized the typewriters, nothing less than $4 per day would have been the scale for those pretty keyboard artists.

Foreman John R. Berg has gone to Nebraska for thirty days. Its pretty certain that his mind is at ease as to the ability of his force to get the Record out on time this winter. Assistant Will Dow, who has recently returned from Missouri, is in charge.

I wonder if straws really do tell which way the wind blows. Now I don't want to call these foremen straws, but I often see Foreman Bowen and Foreman E. A. M. Lawson casting wistful eyes at the Mergs., while Foreman Dave Roberts spends considerable time studying that piece of mechanism that goes gigity-gig—the Lanston.

I have been more or less amused at the efforts of the correspondents to throw bouquets at "Tim Tickle." The object sought seems to have been to tickle Tim. This tickling business is all right. But it reminds me that a few years ago I was coming in from the fair grounds at Terre Haute, Ind., on a crowded street car. A green country youth stood in the center of the car partly supporting his "steady." The car came to a sudden stop and all became quiet. Just then this fair country maid from the banks of the Wabash bleated out: "Now, stop your ticklin', John, or durned if I don't go to pinchin'." My friend James Monroe Krieter tickled my friend Bloomer so hard that the latter couldn't stand it any longer and "pinched" us all with a sermon last week.

The Street-Car Accident.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

The street-car murder that occurred this week is enough to cause union printers and workingmen of organized labor generally to think a few things on what caused the murder of Mr. Sprague and the serious injury of a number of others, and what to do to prevent such occurrences on street-car lines. The cause of this street-car murder lies in the fact that a money-grabbing corporation pratically claims ownership to the streets of Washington; that in running its cars for the purpose of money-making it runs them under a system that means anything but saftey for the people who travel on them. The company, to save money in purchasing cars, operates less than half enough cars to transport the people who live some distance out. There were seventy-five people on the ill-fated car, whereas thirty is the maximum number that can be seated and all that should be allowed on a car. By ramming seventy five people into a car another car and a half are saved, and the directors of the company are made richer thereby.

Then to still further increase their legalized stealings, they issue rules which compel the motorman to run at breakneck speed in order to make the trip in the required time, and to save himself from being discharged if he doesn't do it. This rapid speed business of course saves more cars being run which would be required if the cars went a little slower. All of which coins dollars for the directors of the company. Their skin-flint policy and the lack of sufficient cars causes the rolling stock to wear out rapidly, and I am told that by authority. I do not question that the car that killed Sprague and wounded so many was a defective car that was badly in need of repairs; that only a few weeks ago a motorman who was ordered to take it out, but knowing its condition, refused to do so, was discharged, the motorman in question stating that the car was out of order and unmanageable, and that he wouldn't risk his life on it. Not only do we see such dangerous methods pursued, but to add to it, incompetent men are hired at cheap wages to attempt to manage the cars, and attempts too often result in destruction and disaster as they did Monday. The object of this street-railway corporation, as with nearly all other street-railway corporations, is to make money and make it rapidly, even if they do kill a few people now and then.

Is not the distribution of dividends twice a year among the members of the street-car corporation worth more to them than the lives of a few people who are killed by the company's negligence? Most assuredly.

Street-railway companies care nothing for the people except to get all the money they can from them. They assume that because they use the streets they own the town, and that it is sarcastic audacity if objection should be made to their high-handed methods. The use of the streets, the most valuable franchise that is created by the people, they get for little or nothing, and in return they give the people the most miserable service that can be given on a cheap plan.

Statistical data taken from records of street railways in various cities in the United States will corroborate these statements.

Such is the manner in which street-car lines are run under the private ownership of men whose God is the almighty dollar, and to whom the murder of Sprague can be charged.

Having shown the cause of the street-car catastrophe, I want to point out the remedy. It is a notorious fact that corporations that own and operate institutions used by the public rob the public for all they're worth. Instead of allowing a corporation to own and run the street-car lines of Washington for profit, why not have the city own and operate the car lines for public convenience?

You know how the car lines are now operated under corporation ownership.

Under public ownership, by which the cars would be operated not for profit, but for public convenience, as the Government Printing Office is run, the street cars of Washington would be safe to travel on; there would be three cars to every one now operated; when all the seats were occupied in a car no more would be allowed to get on, but no more would want to get on, because there would be enough cars to provide seats for all; capable and competent motormen and conductors would man the cars under an eight-hour day system at good wages; the track and cars would be kept in good condition, and a three-cent fare would prevail. And under public ownership of the street-car lines of Washington one would never hear of such a fatality as that of Monday. How can we get public ownership of Washington's street railways? By agitation, organization, and united action. Let this public ownership agitation start in the labor unions—in the Typographical Union, if you please—and let it spread until every man, woman, and child in Washington will demand a city street car system. The streets belong to the people, and when a street-car corporation takes their streets and then charges the people exhorbitant prices for riding on their own streets, it is equivalent to a highway robber holding you up by force and taking your watch, and then charging you to tell you what time it is.

Public ownership is the only remedy, and when the street-car lines are publicly owned there will be no more printers or other people killed, as was Sprague on Monday morning.

Vol. IX. No. 20. WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1904. Price, 3 Cents.

THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION

Unions Taking Action on Kernan and Lafayette Theater Cases.

AFTER NON-UNION COOPERAGE

Mill Workers Question Settled—Executive Committee Will Report at Next Meeting on Investigation of Building Trades Section—Organization Committee at Work.

The regular weekly meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8.10 p. m. Monday evening, President Dickman in the chair.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

The Grievance Committee reported progress.

CREDENTIALS.

Local No. 102, Sheet Metal Workers: H. Klinger, vice D. C. Childress.

Washington Branch, Stone Cutters: G. W. Furlong, George Brahler, and T. Jottoli.

Steam Engineers, No. 77: C. B. Falbush, J. W. King, D. P. McCracken, F. A. Marden, and R. A. King.

Columbia Lodge of Machinists, No. 174: Frederick Brennan, vice W. R. Adams, resigned.

Barbers' Union, No. 239: George Young, vice Antony Ficco.

Carpenters, No. 1103: H. C. Johnson, F. Gardiner, B. Johnson, vice Muckenhaupt, Kolb, and Bladen.

Washington Branch, Granite Cutters: William Silver, N. W. Scholz, Wm. H. Tobin, George F. Smith, and J. J. Crowley.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The following organizations have taken action indorsing the stand taken by the central body regarding Kernan's Lyceum, and placing a fine on any of its members patronizing that theater:

Pattern Makers Association.

Engineers Union, No. 99

Retail Clerks Union, No. 262.

Bakery Wagon Drivers Union, No. 33.

The Bakery Wagon Drivers also indorsed action relative to Woodward & Lothrop, and placed a fine of $5 on any member patronizing that establishment.

Bills amounting to $11 were read and ordered paid.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Brewery Workers requested information relative to violation of contract by National Capital Brewery and Arlington Brewery. Contract Committee will make report later.

Musicians requested that Retail Liquor Dealers Association be notified of conditions prevailing at Kernan's Theater. Request granted.

Granite Cutters stated that at their last meeting that the action of the Central Labor Union relative to Kernan's Theater was indorsed and a fine of $5 placed on any of its members frequenting that resort.

Sheet Metal Workers stated that the controversy between that union and Arlington Brewery had been adjusted.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Organization Committee reported that the case of Mill Workers Helpers had been taken up and the parties at issue had agreed to adjust matters between themselves.

On motion, the Organization Committee was instructed to inquire why the Commercial Telegraphers Union and Stenographers and Office Employes Union are not affiliated with the Central Labor Union.

The Executive Committee reported progress of investigation of standing of Council of Allied Building Trades, and stated that a final report would be made at next meeting.

Brewery Workers called up case of National Capital Brewing Co. on failure of Contract Committee to report, and the secretary was directed to communicate with the National Capital Brewing Co. and call their attention to use of nonunion cooperage in violation of contract, and request that they discontinue the use of the same.

The secretary was instructed to communicate with Merchant Bakers Association and inquire if certain printed matter was printed in a Union establishment.

Adjourned.

NEVER MIND.

What if some people slight you—
Never mind.
What if some people wrong you—
Still keep kind.
What if some ill judge you—
Unto yourself be true
By doing unto them as you
Would have them do.

What if some snub you
For the clothes you wear.
What if some slight you because
You lack a stylish air.
What does it really matter
Do not hold a spite
Cheerily tread life's pathway
Leading unto right.

Ever greet people kindly
With a smile,
We are only here for a little while.
Oftimes a smile has brightened
The heavy load
Of some wayfaring brother on life's dreary road.

What if some do have more money
Than have you;
What if some can do that
Which you can not do.
You can try to do your very best
Day by day
To make some brother better for your passing this way.

Gunner H. A. Nevins has been transferred from the Navy-Yard to the Naval Proving Ground.

S. A. Middaugh has been appointed assistant ship draftsman, Bureau Construction and Repair.

D. Cox, first class structural draftsman, Yards and Docks, has tendered his resignation to take effect November 1.

Wm. C. Hay and H. W. Brougher, sub-inspectors of ordnance, have been detailed to Midvale Steel Co., Nicetown, Pa.

John M. Davis and A. H. Kersting, subinspectors of ordnance, have been ordered to Bethlehem Steel Co., Bethlehem, Pa., for duty.

Lieut. Commander E. A. Anderson has been ordered to New York Navy Yard for special duty in connection with the battery of the Chattanooga.

Wm. T. Fisher, Ordnance Department, has been ordered to proceed to Boston Navy-Yard to install experimental 12 inch gun sights on the Missouri.

Commander M. L. Wood and Lieut. Commander J. D. McDonald have been ordered to Naval Powder Factory, Indian Head, for instructions in powder manufacture and ordnance work.

Harry Severn, subinspector of ordnance, has left for Brooklyn Yard, where he has been detailed for ordnance inspection. The smart set on Capitol Hill are now singing, "In the City of Sighs and Tears."

Civil Engineers F. O. Maxon and A. J. Menocal have reported to the commandant for duty as members of the examining board to examine candidates and pass upon the qualifications of those applicants who seek appointment as architectural and structural draftsmen, at Guantanamo, Cuba. Lieut. J. W. Graeme, of the Yard, will be the third member of the board.

RETROSPECTIVE.

Circumstances teach me that I am growing old. Not that I am subject to the ills and aches incidental to old age, but in other degrees. Silver threads now outrun the gold, and friends of my youth are now classed as grandfathers. This fact was indelibly impressed on my mind one evening last week.

I was passing along the avenue just at the time when the stores were closing and the tired employes were hustling home after a busy day.

Passing the Man's Store, the greatest outfitting emporium in the city, thought I would drop in and have a chat with my old friend, Dave Kaufman, simply to talk of the beneficial results of advertising in "The Only Labor Paper in Washington."

I wonder if there is in this city a fashionable dressed man who does not know of Dave and the Man's Store?

I doubt it. While we were discussing advertisements and other matters, we both fell into a reminiscent mood.

"It seems to me, Dave, that it was only yesterday I attended your wedding, and yet I know the years fly swiftly by."

"That may be true," he remarked, "allow me to introduce my eldest daughter," and I turned to behold a beautiful rosebud of sweet eighteen, just blooming into womanhood, a perfect picture of her lovely mother, as she stood at the altar twenty years ago a bride.

While we were discussing matters, a figure stopped in the alcove outside the store. It was a man dressed in the height of fashion, of magnificent form, with shoulders like Hercules. A large well-formed head, covered with such a hat as the President wears.

At first glance I thought it was the President out for a stroll. A second glance, however, convinced me that it was my old comrade, "Col. Bill Lang," ex-mayor of Pipetown, now of the Bindery, G. P. O.

What resident of East Washington of a quarter of a century ago does not remember Bill as the greatest amateur minstrel in the city, a perfect master of the "bones."

After admiring himself in the reflector for a few moments, he passed on to join the Salvation Army, who were holding services at a nearby corner, while we resumed our conversation relative to advertising, by union stores, in the only union paper in town—THE TRADES UNIONIST.

A THOUGHT FOR WORKINGMEN.

Workingmen sell labor and buy goods. It is to their interest to have labor dear and goods cheap. How can a tariff on goods protect labor? It can not and does not. Workingmen can never be protected by any tariff on goods while labor is left on the free list, and immigrants can flood this country with cheap labor as they are now doing.

Labor on the free list means the cheapest possible labor in our protected mills. Tariff-taxed goods means the highest possible prices for manufactured goods. This sort of protection works beautifully for the manufacturers, but very poorly for the employes. It is in fact a swindle on the American workingmen, for it compels him to pay American prices for goods while selling his labor practically at European wages. If day or week wages are higher here it is because our mechanics do more work and better work, and not because of tariff taxes upon goods.

The humbug of the tariff, so far as labor is concerned, was well expressed by Hon. M. D. Kelley, a protectionist leader in Congress in 1872, when he said, "Yes, men are on the free list. They cost us nothing; not even the freight. I am in favor of promoting free trade in workingmen, and that is the only free trade I am interested in."

A tariff on goods, by barring out foreign goods, makes it easier for our manufactures to form trusts and advance prices. Prices are now from 35 to 40 per cent higher than in 1897, when the Dingley bill became law. Trusts and monopolies now control the prices of everything. And it is a glaring but stubborn fact that most of the trusts have been formed since 1897.

The Dingley bill did not put a duty on labor to keep out foreigners and to protect American wages. It left labor on the free list and 3,000 immigrants a a day, or nearly 1,000,000 a year, are landed in this country to compete with American workingmen and keep wages down.

When workingmen strike for higher wages or shorter hours their places are often filled by these foreigners, all looking for work at European prices.

If the workers now on strike in the cotton mills, steel mills, etc., lose it will be because there is plenty of idle labor, and it is easy for employers to obtain labor at low wages. In fact, the employers would not permit strikes to take place were it not for the fact that the great influx of foreign labor were available.

Think of this, Union men, when you cast your ballot. Will you protect yourself and family or will you protect the manufacturer who protects only himself, by employing foreign labor because it is cheaper than American? Before you cast your vote, insist on your Congressman giving a direct answer to this question: Will you, if elected, favor a revision of the tariff, placing a tax on all immigration, thus protecting the wage-worker in the same proportion as the Dingley bill protects the manufacturers? If you do this and vote accordingly, you will be not only protecting yourself in the present, but the coming generation, on whose shoulders the burdens will be heavier than on your own, as every day teaches us that the trusts are growing bolder and more avaricious. Will you do it, brother?

Specification Notes.

As this chapel has not had a regular correspondent since the transfer of J. Ligon King to the Patent Office in July last, and a great many things happen in and around the Spess that are of interest to all the chapels and which ought to be chronicled, your humble servant, the writer, takes the burden of correspondent upon himself. To prove that our capabilities are equal to the qualifications necessary for such duties we hereby submit a specimen of our poetry.

As for preaching a lay-sermon, we will postpone that to some future time.

THE SPESS COMP.

With serious look upon his face
And determination in his mind,
He nervously hurries to his place
And upon his "average" begins to grind.

From morn till night and all day long,
This nervous jerky man
Rushes onward through the throng
To "get up" all he can.

To do his work in O. K. style
And set the average, you will find
That his look and manner is wild
When the wheels begin to grind.

A collection was taken recently to buy a poor lady a ton of coal.

Mrs. Irma D. Palmer has been permanently put on the roll of copyholders.

Otto W. Harke was sick with malaria nearly all of last week, but is back at work again.

Walter H. Mules and Wm. T. Huber come over from Baltimore on the early train each morning.

Wm. B. Myers left last week for a month's vacation at his home in St. Louis and incidentally to vote.

Fishermen Read and Jaques have been off intermittently the past few weeks. They have not given out a fish story worthy of printing recently. They report the season a poor one for good catches.

Alfred Thomson, who was crippled in the Berwyn street car accident, returned to work on last Monday. He was almost unable to hobble about. It is said that he compromised his damage case for $100.

The delegation of our force that vote in New York have gone home to register. Among those are Andy Parker, to register and at once return; Samuel Gompers and family, to register and remain until after the election; H. Densmore, to register.

The daughter of our fellow-workman, S. M. Bell, who was the most seriously injured of any of the women in the ill-fated street car accident, at Fourth and T streets recently, is doing very well. Her wounds were dressed at the Emergency Hospital and she was later removed to her married sister's house on Seventeenth street.

The specification of E. W. Edmondson, of this force, was set up here recently. The apparatus patented was a copy-holder, serial No. 772,793, issued October 18, 1904. Mr. Edmondson has sold several of them to compositors on this force. The device is a good one and is especially adapted to prevent "outs" by keeping only one line of copy in view at a time. We wish the patentee a fortune from his device.

Miss Julia M. Burke and H. D. Young, of the head alley, are beginning to learn to operate the Merg. and work one-half of each day upon the machines. It is said that the Merganthaler will later be installed to do all of the specification work, including the heads, and this is the beginning of apprentices for that work. We do not speak officially, but it is said that linotypes will be put on in this division the first of the year.

News came to us last week of the death of Gus Laing, at his home in Washington, on October 24, a former member of this force. His death was not expected as he had been very poorly for some time. Last spring he was compelled to give up his work in this division on account of failing health. Gus was a kind, generous and charitable companion and all who knew him numbered him as their friend. He had been connected with this division for several years. His ailment was Bright's disease, and he was in the fifty-second year of his age. His funeral occurred from his residence on Sunday afternoon, and his body was laid away at Glenwood Cemetery. Our sympathies are extended to his sorrowing family. The chapel sent a beautiful floral offering. One by one our companions and fellow laborers are passing to that Great Beyond.

Jim Brooke, of the Spess, had the misfortune to be struck in the left optic by a rapidly-twirled baseball during the summer while witnessing the game, at a point in the rear of the pitcher, after which he was assisted to the hospital for treatment. Some of Jim's friends, who were not present, got together and hatched up a suspicion that the injured member did not take on a clouded aspect for reasons assigned. If the doubt continues to grow as now seems probable, and Jim's veracity together with eye witnesses is further brought into question it may be necessary to secure a certificate from the Red Cross and the corps of physicians who attended him. It was a fine job with finis mark and blue label attachment, and should have been dismissed in as few words as might be employed by a coroner when the evidence is so overpowering and one sided as not to admit of a doubt.

Six-Cent Bread.

EDITORS TRADES UNIONIST:

An old reader of your paper would like to deliver himself from a grouch he holds against the writers in the daily press who rail against the Master Bakers' Association for advancing the price of bread to six cents a pound.

If these same busy writers in the daily press would confine themselves to reforms in the municipality without adverting to causes that are governed by economic demands we would all fare better.

There is not even an echo of the recent distressing car accident in the daily papers, in which one life was lost and many others imperilled on account of the niggardly policy of the syndicate controlling the road in keeping rolling stock on the road that should either be condemned or put in repair. We heard one loud kick from the Twinkler, and it occasioned surprise at the time, but it was due mainly to the attempt of employes of the road refusing to permit that paper's photographer from getting a snap shot of the car for illustration in the paper.

There are many reforms needed in curbing the corporations who own the franchises in the city, for lines of transportation, that the able writers of the daily press can turn their guns on and leave the six-cent loaf for the people to settle in their own way.

If the master bakers were anything but good business men and giving a good article of consumption it might be different, but the writer challenges comparison with other municipalities as far as good, palatable bread is concerned. The bakers say, and it is true, that they give a good article of bread, as the people here want it, and the wail against the necessary increase in price has been put up by the daily press for a chance to touch a popular chord.

When we consider that the master bakers are paying the scale laid down by Bakers' Union, No. 118, we find one potent reason why we should stand for any advance, as the usual course to pursue in reducing cost is to meet the greatest item—labor. In this case the Master Bakers' Association have acted wisely, as the advance in flour made it necessary to advance the price of bread.

The maudlin sympathy dished up by writers in the daily press for the poor, who perforce must eat less bread or pay the price, is for effect. The man or woman is to be pitied whose resources are such that a penny a day will put them into dire poverty and make the baker correspondingly opulent.

Let us remember that conditions and time makes changes and we must govern ourselves accordingly.

Mrs. Annie R. Jewett returned to work Saturday from several weeks leave.

Miss. Gertie Stern is on leave. She will spend the time taking in the sights at the World's Fair.

Benedict Kirsch is the proud father of a little daughter, who made her appearance at his home last week.

S. W. Taylor, Arthur Jacobs, E. D. McKenna, and Samuel B. Ragland were transferred here from the main office last week.

Mr. and Mrs. M. G. Molan are sojourning for a month in Minnesota. T. F. McKeon is imposing during Mike's absence.

H. J. Gaylor, wife, and son are visiting for three weeks in Albany, N. Y. W. Brice Coston is filling his place behind the presses.

Miss Augusta W. Russell returned to work Monday after an absence of two weeks in St. Louis visiting the World's Fair. She reports a splendid time.

Ira Taylor and wife are spending a month at his old home in Washington, N. J., with relatives and friends. Bruce Austin is now presiding at the copy desk.

W. H. Dickson, until a short time ago a laborer here, has been promoted to the position of a watchman at the Post Office Department, with a salary of $720 per annum.

A. B. Proctor, David Eccles, and E. T. Stephenson, former employes of this division, returned last week from the main office much to the delight of their many friends.

The Treasury Department has about completed the improvements in this room. The result is that we now have one of the neatest looking composing rooms in Washington.

The International Bookbinder.

The proposition submitted to the membership of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders to have the International Secretary conduct the official journal was carried. In effect this means that James L. Feeney, the present owner and editor, is to accept the conditions laid down by the late convention and dispose of his publication to the International for the amount stipulated in the proposition—$500.

The credit for the present condition of the International Bookbinder is due to the hard work and untiring zeal of Mr. Feeney in the face of many difficulties, and at this period in its career, when it was reaching the point where he was to reap the reward of his labors, he is compelled to relinquish the property he created.

The November issue will be the last one Mr. Feeney will issue, and it is presumed the office of publication will be removed to either Brooklyn, N. Y., or Chicago, Ill.

THE short work-day develops good citizenship.

PANAMA evidently doesn't realize that she is a toy republic.

TRUTH crushed to earth knows that the campaign is heating up.

BEWARE of the so-called reformer who is always shouting "Stop thief!"

MAN wants but little here below nor wants that little long—especially the work-day.

TO JUDGE from the music in the air, the political bandwagons have lungs as well as tongues.

IT is a question whether Candidate DAVIS will admit he is old as he feels the morning after election.

SHOULD HENRY G. DAVIS happen to be elected Vice-President we will admit that he is young enough to be called HANK.

IF the mental development of the workingman is a bad thing for society, then the work-day should be made longer.

IT doesn't necessarily follow that the man has been drinking wood alcohol who is pursued in his sleep by wooden Indians.

THE Russian Government is said to be honeycombed with graft, which may account for the fact that the best KUROPATKIN can do is to steal a march on the Japs now and then.

DON'T be misled by the politician who tries to create the impression that a millennium will follow the application of his principles. Civilization does not progress by leaps and bounds. As TENNYSON puts it, "Science moves but slowly, slowly, creeping on from point to point."

UNIONISM at its best has both a practical and an ideal aim, and these in the course of time should be blended into one. In the perfect union egoism and altruism go hand in hand. The good unionist seeks in the first place to improve his material condition—by making his work-day shorter—by striving for higher wages. In the second place he seeks to advance the interests of others, knowing that he thereby makes his own advancement easier. In a word, unionism promotes the welfare of the individual and of society at large through the practical application of what has been called "enlightened selfishness."

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

So many pleasant things have been said to me by word of mouth and by word of pen about my late "sermon" that I think I had better rest under my laurels and never attempt another. Now, that sounds like pure egotism, and I guess it is. But every man is an egotist, without exception. It is a God-planted attribute of the human mind. Is there a man in the world who would trade existences—body, mind, thought, memory, everything—with any other man, be he whom he may? No. Why? Because of his egotism. Not that he necessarily thinks that he is the "finest thing that ever came down the pike," but because it is he; because whatever there is of it is his. I recently heard a man say that he believed in life everlasting, but that he did not believe that the mind is a part of the immortal part of man—that the mind perished with the body, but the soul lived forever. Who would want such a future existence? It would not be a future existence for him who led the mortal life. Annihilation would be no different. This life would bear the same relation to the one to come that the soil bears to the rose which grows out of it—while furnishing the occasion for it, yet not a part of it nor participating in it. The ego would be lost; it would not be my soul if it had not my memory.

Yes, every man is an egotist. (Some prefer "egoist," but they are "it" all the same.) Having a raging toothache, you meet a friend, and, in answer to his question why your face is swelled, you mention the fact. After expressing conventional sympathy nine times out of ten he will proceed to narrate his troubles of the same character, or boastingly tell you he never had a toothache in his life—the idea being that his own ego is the most important thing in the world; being so to him, it must be to everyone else.

My friend Donath was particularly kind in his expressions, which fell upon my egotism like the precious ointment that ran down upon the beard—even Aaron's beard. But one, a fine but misguided little fellow, who said I am an infidel, and have no right to publish my religious views anyhow, but should stick to trades union subjects—he gave utterance to the only unfavorable criticisms of my "sermon" which came to my ears. He means well, but unfortunately his religion is his cross; he is composed of the same stuff as those who burned at the stake those who disagreed with them in former times; his God is a vengeful one, not a God of love; heaven would be no heaven to him if the greater number of people did not go to hell; there is no middle ground for him—a few are good, but most are hell-bound; to him the blessed Saviour is no Saviour except for those who are already saved in his estimation.

Now, my religion, which defines all sin as ignorance, contemplates the salvation of just such fellow-egotists as my little friend when he shall have learned the A B C of true Christianity—that charity which makes allowance for differences of opinion, evolved by different processes of reasoning, the diversified work of brains of different horsepower. It is not enough to say that a man can not be ignorant because you have been unable to enlighten him or because the same lines of argument which enlightened you have failed to perform that office for him. The fact that every man is able to justify himself in whatever he may do is the strongest argument imaginable against the doctrine of "free agency" so far as it involves moral responsibility. Do you know of anything that you have ever done that you are not willing to forgive yourself for? If you are a perfect egotist, you are able to say "I never did anything that I could condemn in another." If you are only an ordinary egotist, you will say, "I guess I've never done anything that my critics would not have done under the same circumstances, and probably not half as bad as they have done under other circumstances." There are but the two classes—perfect egotists and ordinary egotists. Of course we occasionally hear a man admit "I have been an awful sinner," but that is only in the abstract; he does not particularize. If you try to assist him in his repentance by reminding him of concrete instances—how he swindled a poor widow, or worked off a spavined horse in a trade, or any other particularizations—you will find that he doesn't want to repent by catalogue, but en bloc. He had forgiven himself the items and only repented the sum total.

But there is no limit to the lengths to which egotism will go. The true egotist will boast as valorously of the evil things which he has done, and as joyously, as of the good, if thereby he can keep the center of the stage. I was at a temperance meeting once where the redeemed were relating their experiences, and each speaker outlied his predecessor in telling how much he had drank, till finally one old fellow broke up the meeting by relating how he drank what I figured up to be over four quarts of whisky one day, and when he went home in the evening his wife said to him, "Well, did you come home sober one Christmas in your life?"

All egotists are not loud and boisterous in manifesting themselves. There is a variety whose capital is modesty of mien, as who should say, "If you will only notice, I am not always parading my exploits; you never hear me blowing about myself." His egotism is as great, but more crafty; that is all. He knows everything better than he knows himself, and you could not make such a pen picture of him in a hundred years that he would recognize himself. But he is a perfectly harmless egotist, and succeeds in deceiving all but us experts as to his being one at all. All egotism is harmless, for that matter; in fact, I think is really benevolent. It is like the life blood—it may be diseased, but still it is necessary to existence.

The gradations are perfectly regular. First comes self preservation, "the first law of nature." If we did not have that instinct we would become careless—much more careless—and the unnecessary loss of life would be frightful. Every man can remember many instances where by that instinct his life has been saved. Next comes selfishness—this particular existence was given to me along with the instinct to preserve it; therefore I feel like going a little further and seeing that it "gets all the best of it." Next follows egotism—this particular existence being given me, with the instinct to preserve it and the disposition to see that it "gets all the best of it," I am bound to have the highest respect for it and to impress others with its lovable and entirely desirable character.

These three characteristics of human life are the earliest developed in the species. The little child cries from fear, grabs everything in sight, and then "does cute things" to attract attention to itself. Being thus God-given—coming direct and at the same time from the source from which we come, which all admit is from God—the attributes of self-preservation, selfishness, and egotism, as found in every man, are only to be despised by those who have none of them; and I have never seen such a man, nor a man who did not have all three.

But I said I would write no more sermons, and I will not.

The death of poor "Gus" Laing, after languishing many months in a bed of suffering, comes as a relief, though at the last it is always sad to part, no matter how long it has been known to be inevitable. Mr. Laing has been among and of us for about a quarter of a century, coming from New Jersey somewhere about 1880, most of which time he was employed on Specifications—all of it except one session on the Record, I think. His was a disposition to make friends and never enemies, being entirely lovable and full of kindness. I never heard anyone say one harsh word of Gus Laing.

Robert K. Youngblood, who was a proofreader here during both of Mr. Benedict's administrations, and who has been press reviser at the State office at Albany for six or seven years, spent several days in the city last week, with his bride, returning from their wedding tour, which included a visit to the St. Louis Exposition and to relatives in the South. "Yb" is stouter than when here last, and perhaps a little grayer, but has the general appearance of a man to whom the world is kind. All his friends cordially congratulated him on this latest and best step of his life.

Mr. Jackson H. Ralston, who has worked from a compositor's situation in the Government Printing Office to international fame as a lawyer, said in an article which he wrote for one of our Yearbooks, entitled "Printers in the Professions:"

> The young practitioner leaving the case may be surprised to find little of his early business coming from those who knew him as a workman. To them, for a long time to come, he must remain a printer, and they, failing to realize that he has become a professional man, will carry their business affairs to some one whom they have known in a professional way. His former associates will visit him freely only after others have tested his skill.

While this is undoubtedly true as to lawyers, it is less so, if at all as to doctors. Every day I see G. P. O. men and associations going down town for legal advice when we have graduated and legally licensed lawyers in the office who would undoubtedly render as efficient service, and all because of the feeling which Mr. Ralston describes in the quotation given above. True, they are "sundowners;" but they must ever remain so unless sufficient business and encouragement are given them to enable them to devote their entire time to the law. One explanation of the fact that the same discrimination is not shown against our medical professional men lies in some instances, I am afraid, in the hope and expectation of being able to secure easier terms of payment from printer doctors, if any payment whatever is contemplated, while nobody could hope to beat even a printer lawyer out of just fee. This reminds me of a story I was told about one of our supposedly squarest "square men." A suggestion regarding money matters on another affair having been made to him, he said, "You needn't talk to me about money; my wife has been sick for three months and Dr. —— gets all my money," naming a printer doctor. Some one was mean enough to reproach the doctor for thus impoverishing a former fellow-workman. "True I have been attending Mrs. —— for several months, but I have the first cent of ——'s money to see yet," was the reply. I am so proud of those of our craft who have the energy to carve out positions for themselves in professional life that I would like to see all our legal and medical business taken to our printer doctors and lawyers and paid for as honestly and promptly as we would expect to pay outsiders—more so, if there is to be any difference—for our business is worth nothing to them if it does not carry the just rewards for their services.

No one can take greater pleasure than I in announcing that the fountains from whence flows the milk of human kindness are not all dried up. After the lamented death of Edward R. Sprague, as a result of the recent street car accident, a gentleman who had taken charge of the widow's affairs called on House & Herrmann in regard to the portion of a bill yet unpaid. The balance was $29.19. "Say to Mrs. Sprague that the bill is canceled and she does not owe us a cent," said the head of the firm. In purchasing burial clothes for the deceased the facts of the case were mentioned, when the manager of The Old Reliable clothing house said, "In view of the circumstances, I will cut the bill in half." The world has regard for the victims of disaster, no matter how we cynically rail at it.

One day last week I received a copy of the Jackson County Journal, published at Black River Falls, Wis., by Merlin Hull. It will be remembered that Mr. Hull was employed for several years in the G. P. O., part of the time in the Proof Room, and, like Mr. Hull, his paper is sterling Republican. He was one of the interested members of the old debating society that flourished four or five years ago or less, and Merlin could always be relied on for a strong speech. He was a graduate of one of the city law schools and an able young man. His friends will be glad to learn of his whereabouts and that his paper has an air of prosperity.

The Railroad Freight and Baggageman, the official journal of the Brotherhood of the Railroad Freight and Baggagemen of America, in addition to publishing the resolutions unanimously adopted at the convention of that organization on September 15, 1904, indorsing William S. Waudby for Commissioner of Labor, in its October number has the following editorial appeal on the same subject:

LET US PUT OUR SHOULDER TO THE WHEEL.

There comes a time in the four years that mark a Presidential term that seems to indicate that he who toils for his daily bread and has a vote is quite popular. Speeches are fired at him, flattering appellations bestowed, and a solicitude expressed in his material well-being that is very pleasant indeed. In this year of grace that period has approached. From now on until the frost is on the pumpkin, the workingman will have friends galore.

It is well. Labor is modest. Labor is confiding.

It is not often that it lifts its voice for the favors that political leaders have it in their power to bestow.

But to-day we have a request to make to the national administration—and those political captains of hundreds who have influence at the seat of government have it in their power to give us signal proof that their professions of their friendship are more than "words, idle words."

The office known as the Commissioner of Labor of the United States is about to be vacated by its present occupant after a service of many years, other duties having been thrust upon him.

It is important to organized labor that his successor shall be one thoroughly conversant with the machinery that can be of so much service to the wage-workers of the land.

A selection has been made by the toilers for the place.

What they want of the national administration is that labor's choice be appointed. The man chosen by labor all over this land to attain the position of Commissioner of Labor is William S. Waudby, of Rochester, N. Y.

Thousands of indorsements have been filed in his behalf. Thousands more are constantly arriving, and it becomes us to keep up the good work in his behalf, for by helping Waudby we help the cause of American labor.

Will you pass resolutions stating your demand for his appointment? Will you appoint a strong committee to bring that indorsement home to every local politician in accord with the power whom your influences can reach? And will you do it at once?

Edgar Wicker, of the Fifth Division, was called home to Raleigh, N. C., late last week, by news that his father, Robert Wicker, is at the point of death. The elder Wicker worked on the Record in 1875-76. He formerly published a labor paper and was a well-known writer in the Typographical Journal.

Women's Auxiliary, No. 13.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

The Women's Auxiliary to Columbia Union, No. 101, is making an effort to get its members out to the meetings, now that the summer season is ended. The lodge room in the Temple has been set aside for our use for the first Monday evening in each month. Regular meetings will be held at that time.

It has been decided to have some little entertainment or social function after the business has been transacted. A committee composed of Miss Daphne Thompson, Miss Helen McCormick, and Miss Rose Dorman was appointed to arrange for the entertainment for Monday evening, November 7. Every member of the Auxiliary is urged to attend this meeting. We hope the members of Columbia Union will aid the Auxiliary by inducing their eligible relatives—wives, mothers, unmarried daughters and sisters—to join forces with us and help the cause along. Women members of the Union are also invited to join.

We have the largest Auxiliary in the United States, and we want to be able to say that we have the very best one, too, in all respects.

I. T. U. Referendum Vote.

From private advices received from I. T. U. headquarters it is learned that the sixth proposition, known as the eight-hour day proposition, was carried in the subordinate unions by a vote proportionately six to one in favor of it.

Chicago was the last of the large unions to vote and that union cast 1,471 votes in favor of the sixth proposition and 225 against it.

As before stated, the second proposition is defeated by a large majority, being for increase of salary to International officers, while all other propositions were carried in the affirmative.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

First Division.

Harry Nesbit has a bad pair of hands.

C. C. Barton, Luke Woodward's assistant, reported for duty on Monday.

H. S. Gunn and wife have been enjoying the World's Fair at St. Louis during the present week.

Judge Underwood, of the "Why," has returned from his leave well-pleased with his trip.

George Cox, a former employe of the far-famed old Document Room, visits this division frequently.

'Tis unanimous. We are all rejoiced to see our smiling apron man. He looks well. We mean McGraw.

Geo. A. Tuttle left on Saturday for his Wisconsin home to exercise the prerogative of an American citizen.

Who was that bright young man that went to the Bindery and Folding Room in search of the book stretcher? Hush.

Chas. Danenhower, of the "East End" of the room, has recovered from his recent sickness and is back at the "boiler."

How are you betting? Not on the election—we must not talk election—we mean when will Foreman Young's force be made up and off?

Two more good compositors detailed to the Sixth Division, to be instructed in first lessons on the keyboard—Messrs. McCord and Jones.

We make haste to extend congratulations to Mr. Wilson N. Darden, who was married while leave-taking at his far-away sunny Southern home.

After a brief residence in this city, W. F. P. White has removed to his former home—Baltimore. Just retains his citizenship in "Maryland, My Maryland."

Among those who went to New York to register Friday and Saturday were Messrs. Purdy, Clark, Nelson, Wadams, Williams, O'Neill, Lawlor, McCormick, and Montgomery.

In the list of "leaves" for the week beginning October 27 are Foreman A. W. Bowen and Messrs. Fowler, Maloy, Ashley, Barringer, Follett, Coleman, Sherman, and Plummer.

Did I hear you say that Simon Pocher lost his "floor" job? Don't you believe it. That report was circulated by slug 103. The "wet" end might have slipped up, but what of it?

Frank Lloyd, the rule man, has been working on the "Y." P. M. McCallum has played a long engagement in Wm. Leavitt's section. S. M. Langford fills orders for rule during Lloyd's detail.

Vice-President Love (95) of Columbia Union is busy these days with his new suburban home. Were you glad to see him last week? Johnnie Burnside says he was. I believe it. There were others.

Only one of our three fishermen claimed luck at Saturday's outing. Messrs. H. W. Gray, J. B. Dickman, and F. H. Berger. The youngest and last named, captured all the honors, and fish, too, except one.

Jake Covert left on Saturday for his "Middle West" home—Indiana, classed as "doubtful." Incidentally his son, Hon. Chas. G. Covert, is the mayor of the city of Evansville, among the principal cities in the Hoosier State.

Funeral services over the remains of our late friend, E. R. Sprague, were held at his residence on Friday morning. On Saturday the corpse was shipped to his western home for interment, being accompanied by the widow's brother.

Everybody knows Whitey—that is, if you don't you should cultivate his acquaintance. He has been selected to "run the bank" vice Messrs. Gunn and Tuttle gone West. W. F. P. White belongs in Division 1, N. F., "Charlie" Ross, chief engineer.

"None die and few resign." Not applicable to this division, a death last week and a resignation this. One of the best known men, not only in the G. P. O., but in the District has "pulled off" a resignation, Capt. J. S. Robinson, formerly of West Virginia, and more recently of the Guards.

W. F. Crump has been transferred to the frame lately held by E. R. Sprague. "Shorty" succeeds to slug 51, C. G. Perry, from the long alley at the "supply" end to 53, and J. A. Gibbs to the "old boys" alley in the "supply end." But this is an ever-changing world, and the printers, generally play a full hand.

Brother, is this your copy of THE TRADES UNIONIST, or have you borrowed your neighbors? It is a good clean readable paper and why not subscribe for it and take home. Hand Clerk Berger your name and the price when he calls for it. We will endeavor to make this column worth the price of admission.

We shall endeavor to report items, news and otherwise, as they come under R. W's. observations, weekly, and avoid any disparaging remarks. If you have any sure-enough items keep them in your vest pocket. They will be harmless. Remember "there's a chiel amang ye taking notes, and faith he prent them."

Do you patronize the G. P. O. library? It is a grand success, and is liberally patronized. There are several thousand books on its shelves, and, all things considered, it will compare most favorably with any library in either of the departments. No trouble to obtain a permit—only requires the asking. If you have no inclination to read, take out a book for the ladies of the household. Messrs. Elder and Dorsey, the capable officials, will be much pleased to wait upon you.

It has been related to us by a gentleman who is conversant with all the facts that there is one business house in this city that is deserving of the patronage of this great institution wherein we toil. But to the story: It appears that our late friend, E. R. Sprague, purchased a bill of goods from the well-known firm of House & Herrmann, corner of Seventh and I streets northwest. On the day of his death, Monday, October 17, he was to make the last payment, about $20. A friend of the family called at the store and made inquiry relative thereto. He was politely informed that since the terrible taking away of the husband and father the balance due on the bill had been canceled and a receipted bill in full sent to the sorrowing widow. Such acts of generosity, so rare as this, deserve more than a passing notice, and it is a source of much gratification that the Capital City of the Nation can lay claim to such a generous firm. Let the employes of this great workshop bear this act of benevolence in mind.

BENEVOLENCE.

It is an emphatic truism that there are more great generous employes in the Government Printing Office than any other department. Did you ever live over a fortnight without going down on a subscription paper?

There are scores of men and women who never refuse to respond to the call for assistance whether deserving or otherwise. Of this we are reminded by the noble, generous response of contributions from all the divisions which have been showered in the lap of Mrs. Sprague. A kind note, expressive of her heartily appreciated thanks, has been received. Are you not proud that you belong to such a generous army of contributors?

Then, too, would you believe it, our unbounded generosity has almost a national reputation. We heard the other day that a G. P. O. printer received a letter from a lady in a Western State whose husband, at some time or other had worked "down town," but never in the big printery, beseeching him to have a paper "passed around," as they were in reduced circumstances. So, there you go. Nothing like having a record, and that is the goal we are all striving for.

Second Division.

Eight men from this room are now practicing on the machine keyboards, four in the forenoon and four in the afternoon.

Dick Kendall, who has been running an engine on the B. & O. all summer, has been reinstated and assigned to this division.

This division, as well as many others, will be very much depleted after next Saturday, owing to the departure of the voters for their homes.

A number of cane-bottom revolving-seat, high-back stools sat near the elevator shaft several days. We had hopes of days of ease lolling back in those comfortable seats; but no, they had been delivered to the wrong floor.

Alleged sermons are becoming the thing, it seems, in THE TRADES UNIONIST these days. "Maud S." promises one for the near future. So far they seem to be principally tirades against churches, which the writers evidently have not attended enough to know what is done in them, as one says they set up a man of straw and get busy knocking him down.

One of the most entertaining correspondents of THE TRADES UNIONIST seems to have become a little ruffled last week over the deserved compliments well-nigh unanimously paid to "Tim Tickle" by the other correspondents. Any man who excels in an undertaking will be "tickled" by the public. What is renown but universal esteem of ones ability. Talent is always recognized, but appreciation comes earlier to some.

Mr. Thos. L. Jones left Wednesday night for an extended trip. His wife accompanies him. While away he will visit the World's Fair and his old home, Rockport, Ind. Mr. Jones is a prominent vocalist of this city, besides being engaged in one of the finest of church choirs. He is the head of the National Quartet, one of the finest in the city. Printers are familiar with Mr. Jones' ability in getting up entertainments for the printers' union and various orders.

Third Division.

Scotty shot two ducks last Monday. At least, Scotty said he did.

The number of checker players in this division is increasing every day. It is a poor day when half a dozen boards are not in use during the lunch period.

Two men in this division have comical ways of sneezing. Between the WOOH-HUH! of one and the WAH-HOO! of the other we are kept in a snicker.

Quite a number of the force who are accredited to near-by States have got excused at various times lately for three days in order to register in the "old home town."

The Lanston key-boards are being rapidly installed in the Fifth Division, and from present appearances it won't be very long before they will be in successful operation.

T. A. McAloon started Saturday night for Topeka, Kans. On the same train were Assistant Foreman George L. Sherman, Bankman E. C. Saltzman, and Proofreader Allen E. Cowles.

A couple of weeks since I asked Brother Sutton a question in good United States and he answered it in Welsh. I think I can say without reservation that the Welsh language is "dreadful stuff."

Charles O. Doten is back from his Virginia farm. He informs me that he was obliged to leave Mrs. Doten behind on account of a consumptive tendency which the doctor thinks can be counteracted by plenty of fresh mountain air.

Not the least of the substitutes is Elmer Dement, to whom, as secretary of the chapel, falls the position of acting chairman in the absence of Chairman Piehoff. Mr. Dement is active and conscientious in the performance of his new duties.

Brother W. F. Simons got back from Watertown, N. Y., last Monday morning and was detailed for linotype keyboard practice. He spends the mornings playing the piano and in the afternoons he prints in the good old-fashioned way.

Mr. C. W. Goodman, of the Indian School at Phenix, Ariz., and formerly connected with the Indian School at Chilocco, Okla., where, in conjunction with Charles S. Davis, slug man, he established what is now the best newspaper printed at any of the various Indian Schools, called recently at the house of Mr. Davis, who was once a member of the faculty of the Chilocco School.

Esopus, N. Y., where Judge Parker lives, reminds me of a story by Sylvanus Cobb, jr., entitled "The Maid of Esopus," which was printed in the New York Ledger during the Civil War. The name of the Democratic National chairman brings to mind John Hay's poem, "The Mystery of Gilgal," which begins thus:

Tom Taggart stood behind his bar,
The time was fall, the skies was far;
The neighbors round the counter drawed,
And ca'mly drinked and jawed.

The latest information obtainable is to the effect that Chairman Robert P. Piehoff is slightly better than he was last week. His devoted wife gives him every care. When one considers that Mr. and Mrs. Piehoff have five children it is possible to appreciate the extent of the responsibility which now lies upon the active head of the house. The chairman has a host of friends, and outside of business hours the stream of callers to inquire about him is almost constant.

Having read the "Navy Yard Items" by Tim Tickle with considerable interest, and having become impressed with the idea that Mr. Tickle is a first-class exponent of union ideas and principles, I was somewhaa rudely shocked upon reading his account of the Central Labor Union smoker to see that they had "plenty of Cubanolas." Surely Tim Tickle is mistaken in the brand of cigar smoked on the occassion alluded to. The head censor of Washington Unionism would not knowingly furnish its guests—much less smoke itself—a "scab" cigar, for that, in plain terms, ss what the Cubanola cigar is. I feel sure that Tim has used the term "Cubanolas" in a Pickwickian sense, and that he had no idea that it was the name of a non-union cigar.

Will E. Sault now presides at the copy-box; A. M. LeMerle is on one of the proof-presses; H. W. Kitzmiller has charge of the bank; Edward J. Wood runs the circus where rings are so numerous that everybody may see the show; T. J. Arrington takes care of the rule cases in the absence of W. A. Kinsolving, who was appointed to take A. M. LeMerle's place when he went on the press, the latter having been appointed substitute for W. N. Goldstein until he should return from New York. All of which proves that in any emergency which may rob the division of any of its functionaries, good men may always be found to take their places. By the same token, there is a lot of good printers in the G. P. O. who only need an opportunity to show their capabilities.

A corporation is now being organized under District laws to be known as the Chase Drug Company, for the purpose of further introducing several valuable remedies, the property of Fred B. Chase, a compositor in the Third Division. The officers are well known in the G. P. O., and are as follows: President, A. W. Bowen, foreman First Division; Vice-President, W. J. White, compositor in Specification Division; Secretary-Treasurer, Dan. C. Vaughan, copy preparer, main proof room; Fred C. Chase, general manager. The office and laboratory of the company is at 604 Fifth street northwest, where Mr. Chase, who is a graduate in pharmacy, prepares the medicines. It is understood that several hundred shares have already been sold at $5 per share, which price will be shortly increased. Those who have tried Mr. Chase's remedies pronounce them excellent.

Pard Julian got back to work a few days ago, but with his shoulder still very sore from the street-car accident. Joseph E. Goodkey has not made his appearance since the morning of the accident, eleven days ago, when he appeared with his clothing torn and spotted with mud, blood, and oil, his head covered with plasters, his arm bandaged, and walking with a pronounced limp. Foreman Lawson was rather spry when he arrived between ten and eleven on the same morning, but he did not come to work the following day and it is fair to presume that he was severely jarred and bruised. I hope that these three gentlemen will be able to exact just and ample indemnity from the railroad people, who should be made to pay heavily for the privilege of using old and worn-out rolling stock in reckless and wanton disregard of the lives of passengers.

Columbia's Opportunities.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

Columbia Typographical Union occupies a unique and commanding position in the world of printing and Trades Unionism. Hardly anywhere else can be found a labor organization whose members are so well paid and so steadily employed. Few organizations can boast of a membership gathered from so many sections, not only of our own country, but from all parts of the world. As a consequence the Union in Washington can and does derive great benefit from the previous experience of its members. The best ideas and working plans from everywhere are here concentrated. It needs only a little arousing of interest to bring them forward.

One of the most widely recognized axioms of existence is that there must either be progression or retrogression. Maintaining a stationary position relative to others is a virtual impossibility. If an individual does not actually fall behind, but merely "stands pat," the others are sure to go ahead and the dilatory one will soon be in the wake of progress. This being so, it behooves our organization to move a little more rapidly if it is not to be reckoned among the slower ones.

A few years ago Columbia Union set a splendid example to other organizations in successfully accomplishing the task of getting a building of its own. The present Typographical Temple is a visible and substantial monument to the wisdom and good sense of the Union. It demonstrates that the membership can do really great and substantial things when once an object is determined upon.

An opportunity for further active and forward movement is found in adopting the new Constitution and By-Laws. The committee having the matter in charge has done a great deal of work thereon. Many vital changes are proposed in the organic law of the Union, some of which are wise, and others which may not meet with the approval of the membership. One feature, however, has been ignored almost entirely. In considering benefits nothing additional has been proposed other than making a slight gradation in the death benefits to be paid and lengthening the term of membership to entitle the unfortunate member's beneficiaries to realize. What many would like to see is sick and out-of-work benefits made a part of our Union's business. The proposition might be put in this way:

"Sick benefits.—Members who have been in good standing for six months preceding date of disability shall be paid $15 per week for a period not exceeding twenty-six weeks in a yea when prevented from working by illness, provided such illness is not the result of drunkenness or other unbecoming conduct. No benefit shall be paid for less than one week, and the first money shall be paid only at the beginning of the second week's disability. Quarantined persons shall be paid sick benefits. In all cases a physician's certificate shall be necessary to secure sick benefits."

"Out-of-work benefit.—Members who have been in good standing for six months, if out of employment and not in receipt of income from any source, shall be paid $5 a week for a period of three weeks, the first payment to be made after three weeks' continuous idleness. During the time of payment of this benefit the member shall report daily at the Secretary's office between the hours of 9 a. m. and 1 p. m. After the benefit has been paid for three weeks the member shall not be entitled to any further benefit until another three weeks of idleness shall have intervened. A refusal to accept work at any time during these periods shall forfeit all claim to out-of-work benefit."

Regarding the first proposal there is much to be urged. At present our system of relief to unfortunate members is humiliating. The Relief Committee is made up of good, honest, careful men. They do their work conscientiously and honorably, following out the understood policy of the organization. Of them and their work only good can be said. But it is inadequate to the needs of our Union. It is primitive, unbusiness-like. As matters stand now a member must become an object of charity if he takes any money from the Union Relief Committee. That, to any self-respecting man, is humiliating. Our system works this way:

Say one of those good-natured, pleasant fellows, who spends all the money he earns on booze, or the races, and invests all he can borrow in the same way, meets with an unfortunate sickness. He has no money, and no one to take care of him. Naturally, the Relief Committee cannot allow him to suffer, no matter how undeserving. He is sure to be helped. Contrast this case with another. Here is a sober industrious member, who has paid dues for years and never received a cent directly from the organization. He has a little home, a family, and furniture, along with a few debts he is paying off gradually. He falls sick and remains so for some time. What happens? Does such a man apply for relief, and would he get it if he did? In the first place he would scorn to make himself an object of charity, and in the second place I believe the committee would consider him too well fixed to deserve relief. He would be compelled to borrow, perhaps to sacrifice his home and other belongings because he can not conform to the policy of the Union. His very providence proves a detriment to him. A spell of sickness will set him back a year or more financially. Does he deserve that sort of treatment?

It will be urged, however, that the latter-mentioned unfortunate should be a member of one or more Relief Associations. It must be admitted that these associations are good in themselves, and are a great benefit to their members. However, they are outside of the Union, and while made up almost entirely of Union members, the Relief Associations draw upon the strength of the Union rather than increase it. Orchids are among the most beautiful and precious flowers, but they are parasites. Growing upon the trunk or branch of a tree, they sink their roots through the bark and draw their sustenance from the very life sap of the tree. How different is it when a vigorous branch of a superior variety of the same tree is grafted onto the trunk! In a short time the wound heals and a healthful, beautiful, and productive tree is the result. It is the same with the Relief Associations and the Union. Many are so fascinated with the good work done by these outside affairs that they fail to see where strength is drawn from the Union. Some have more loyalty and more love for the Relief Associations than for the Union. This being the case it would seem the part of wisdom to graft the branch of relief onto the trunks of Unionism and let the two wax strong together. Then all the members would be protected. Every unfortunate could accept relief without the slightest feeling of humiliation.

It would require more dues of course. Inasmuch as the members pay all the way from 25 cents to $1 00 a month in subscriptions and some 50 cents to $1.00 every two weeks to Relief Associations, the increase need not be felt. It would only transfer the payment, concentrate the flow of money into a well-defined channel, do away with our charity feature, and abolish the subscription lists.

As for the out-of-work feature, the amount suggested is so small that it could easily be paid. It would keep the unfortunate alive, at any rate, in an honorable manner. With a membership so steadily employed as here there would be very few calls upon this benefit. However, those few would be urgent and deserving, because the conditions imposed would make them so.

Both the benefits mentioned are in practical operation in many Unions. Several international organizations have adopted them. When such is the case conditions are much better. Washington should not wait for that, but establish these features locally. Ultimately the I. T. U. will come to the scratch, and then Columbia Union will be in line without the least friction.

Do the members want these things? With the object of ascertaining opinion on the subject this letter has been written. Undoubtedly THE TRADES UNIONIST will be willing to permit a reasonable discussion. Whatever may be the result the members should take an interest in these matters and act in such a way as to make the Union stronger and more helpful to every one bearing a card.

THE TRADES UNIONIST.

OFFICIAL ORGAN CENTRAL LABOR UNION, WASHINGTON BRANCH, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Vol. IX. No. 21. WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1904. Price, 3 Cents.

THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION

Executive Committee Reports on the Building Trades Section.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW VIOLATION

Nonunion Cooperage Still Used in this City—Unions Acting on Kernan Case—Special Committee on Proebstle Charges Discharged by Request.

The regular weekly meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8.10 p. m. Monday evening, President Dickman in the chair.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

Bills amounting to $24 were read and ordered paid.

The Grievance Committee reported progress on Stationary Fireman case.

CREDENTIALS.

Carriage and Wagon Workers Union, No. 72: Frank Willcocks, vice John W. Baker.

Steam and Hot Water Fitters and Helpers, No. 28: Edward Dewdney, vice John Boyd.

Interior Marble and Slate Cutters, No. 5: Application for reinstatement referred to Organization Committee.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Local No. 407, referring to a bill sent for per capita, claiming that they are not represented in the central body. Referred to Organization Committee.

From John Slocum, general president of International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers, asking for assistance in extending that organization. Referred to Organization Committee.

From Brewery Workmen, No. 181, stating that nonunion cooperage is still being used by the National Capital Brewing Co. Referred to special committee.

From Trades Union Herald, Petaluma, Cal., asking for subscription support, stating that a determined effort is being made to crush that paper by the Parry Association. Placed on file.

From John G. Schmidt, respecting bills due on Labor Day outing, and asking for appropriation of $21.50 to pay same.

From Butte Central Labor Council, inclosing circular detailing fight for existence of Steam Engineers Union, No. 83, by locals affiliated with Western Federation of Miners. Referred to Legislative Committee.

The following Unions have taken action on the Kernan Lyceum Theater:

Brewery Workers Union, No. 118.

Iron Molders Union, No. 215.

Beer Drivers and Stablemen, No. 238.

CALL OF UNIONS.

On motion, Delegate Dickman moved the appointment of a committee to meet Kernan, relative to his being on unfair list. Agreed to.

Electrical Workers called attention to an organization of stenographers and office employes. The delegate was informed that the Organization Committee had the matter in hand.

Musicians called attention to Kernan's Theater being on unfair list.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Legislative Committee reported on violation of eight-hour law, and asked for an appropriation to cover incidental expenses. Request granted.

Special Committee on Proebstle case reported that they were unable to secure any evidence in regard to the matter, and asked to be discharged. Request granted.

The Executive Committee reported on its findings regarding the Building Trades Section, which was ordered printed and sent to all affiliated Unions in Central Labor Union.

A resolution was introduced relative to violation of eight-hour law in this city on Government work. Referred to Legislative Committee.

The Woman's Auxiliary.

An important meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary will be held on Monday evening, November 7, at 7.30 o'clock, in the lodge room, Typographical Temple, Nominations for local officers for the coming year will be made. This is also "dues" night. Every member is urged to be present.

NAVY-YARD ITEMS.

W. J. Walsh, first-class general helper, has been re rated and promoted to electric craneman.

The labor board have been instructed to call in a hundred machinists and helpers, owing to the urgent pressure of work.

Gunners J. H. Lohman, T. B. Watson and W. Zeitler have reported for examinations to advance grade of chief gunmen.

Rear Admiral Higginson, commandant, is at Brooklyn Navy Yard under order, from the Navy Department for special work.

Chief Machinist John Milstead, U. S. S. Sylph, has received orders transferring him to the Wabash, Boston Yard, for recruiting duty.

H. E. Walls, Ordnance Department, has been ordered to League Island Yard for temporary duty in connection with fitting a smoke-ejecting apparatus to the turret guns of the Alabama.

G. H. Griffith, Ordnance Department, has received orders temporarily transferring him to the Norfolk Yard in connection with star gauging and taking impression of the bore of the guns of the Arkansas.

J. W. Abell and J. W. Booze, Ordnance Department, have been re-rated from helpers to metal cartridge case makers. This will probably meet with the disapproval of Columbia Lodge, changing helpers to mechanics.

Brother Belcher's criticism of the "Cubanolas" is received in the same spirit in which it was used—Pichwickian of course. Now, brother, don't lecture me or I will endeavor to draw inspiration from the poets—perchance preach you another sermon. Just this time I will say:

DON'T.

Don't get discouraged when you hear
What people say about you;
Don't get the blues and shed a tear
Because they chance to doubt you.

Don't go around with troubled brow
O'er looking all life's beauty;
The ones that scold will suffer more
Than you, so do your duty.

Don't fret and fume and wish them ill
If their lives hold little pleasure;
Send back a message of good will
'Twill sure to heap your measure.

So it really doesn't matter much
If we make mistakes in the game;
If we keep on, act on the square,
We'll get there just the same.

A SEA FIGHT WITH GLOVES.

A jolly lot of tars, a hundred civilians, many of them ladies, witnessed a set-to between "Spike" McLan and Teddy Jones, on board the cruiser Raleigh recently, for the championship of the Navy. The prize was a pair of kid gloves offered by one of the ladies, with a kiss thrown into the winner.

The two lads stepped to the front with mitts on. The time keeper stood on the bridge holding a Waterbury clock in his grasp. The referee sat on a 6 inch gun, while the band struck up a hornpipe.

"Spike" opened up at long range and landed on Teddy's hull with a solid shot, drawing the enemy's fire over his spanker. He moved around until his prow was amidships of "Spike" and then banged him above the commissary department with a torpedo.

He followed up under a full head of steam by running "Spike" well forward on his port load line. "Spike" put up his screens to repel boarders, but was forced to reverse his engines. He shook his maintop and opening all his air shafts took a birdseye view of the situation.

Teddy saw the enemy was being worsted. He sailed in again with all his forward guns elevated and well trained.

It was then "Spike" showed his mastery in maneuvers. He lay to while Teddy came on under full steam, intending apparently to raise his magazine amidships. "Spike" drew off to the right, while he worked his helm so that the bow could be swung around at the right moment. Just as Teddy opened with a raking fire which threatened to send "Spike's" maintop by the board that wily sailor ported his helm hard, swung his bow almost over the enemy's quarter, and, having a clear way, raked him fore and aft with his bow chasers.

Teddy reeled and staggered to starboard. He could not weather the storm because his steering gear had been severely damaged. He was groggy in the binnacles.

"Spike" gave vent to a shriek from the siren. He looped the loop and came around on the enemy's port side. Teddy fell back shivering in every timber. Remorseless "Spike" drew in his chasers and primed them. Then he let go. Not until his maintop had gone by the board, his foretop deck had been demolished, and his bow had leaked and twisted, did Teddy lie down in his breeches. His comrades cheered him as he fell with his face to the enemy, while "Spike" stepped forward to receive the prize.

WHICH ONE WAS THE GENTLEMAN.

Politeness, in its high and true sense, is something more than a mere social accomplishment. It rises toward the dignity of a Christian virtue. It is the outward manifestation of the indwelling spirit of a genial humanity and widespread emotion of brotherhood. We usually associate the idea with the polished forms of elegant life, but its genuine disposition and conduct, too, may exist quite independent of them.

I was a passenger in a street car some days ago. Fashionable-looking specimens of the "upper ten" occupied various seats, each busy reading the paper or periodicals. The car stopped and three young misses, fashionably dressed, entered. Immediately all eyes were focused on the young girls, and each youngster vied with the other in offering them a seat. At the next corner another lady entered. She was poorly clad, but in that wan face the lines of the perfect lady was plainly marked. Evidently she was a toiler in one of our stores, who, after a busy day, was hurrying home to her loved ones. One glance was sufficient. All eyes and thoughts were intently drawn to the papers, while the frail form of the shop girl clung to the strap to support herself. Standing with my back to the motorman I could easily discern the movements of all the passengers. I observed one man more closely than the others. He was sitting in the corner next to the door. The paper which he had been reading was lying in his lap; his head was bowed; apparently he was asleep. It was easily seen that he was a workingman, who probably was tired and exhausted. A lurch of the car awoke him. He was on his feet in a moment.

"Madame, take my seat, please."

"No, thanks," she replied, "you look more tired than I."

"It is true, Madame, I am tired; my work is laborious, but I am never too tired to forget my manners in the presence of a lady."

One glance at the man was sufficient to recognize one of my shopmates, and I am proud that I have such a one as the plain unassuming "Joe Keefe," who is known from the Navy Yard to Georgetown as not only a philanthropist but a Chesterfield in all that goes to make up a true gentleman.

I fully understood his meaning when he said that he was exhausted, as I well knew the laborious task allotted to him in the great Naval Gun Factory of "Uncle Sam." But under that rough exterior there was a warm heart, full of love to God and man, as he saw that sad-eyed sister gazing vainly about her. To see was to act.

But what of the others. They looked up with cold icy faces at their sister—for she was their sister in humanity, and is before God; perhaps infinitely higher in true worth than them all.

Which was the gentleman—the mechanic or the fop.

Dickens beautifully describes the situation when he wrote:

The timely hand stretched forth to aid
A sister in her need—
A kindly word in grief's dark hour
That proves a friend indeed.
The plea for mercy softly breathed
When justice threatens high,
The sorrow of a contrite heart—
These things can never die.

Brother Gunn seems amused at the bouquets your correspondents are throwing at your humble servant. I accept it in the same spirit in which it was sent. I merely wish to say to him and all the writers and readers of THE TRADES UNIONIST that I am willing to accept the bouquets. I would a thousand times sooner accept a tiny rosebud while living from a sincere friend than all the flowers that ever bloomed placed upon my grave. If you think a man worthy—

JUST TELL HIM SO.

There's much to do the whole way through
And little use complaining;
For the darkest night will change to light
And the blackest cloud quit raining.
If worth you find in weak mankind,
'Twill do all good to know
That some one thought they nobly wrought
And frankly told him so.

Enough will remain of bitter pain
With all the aid you lend,
Some will be sad and others glad
On down to the journey's end.
As in the throng you pass along—
With rapid strides or slow,
If virtue you see in bond or free
Just stop and tell them so.

If on the road you see a load
Some pilgrim downward pressing,
A willing hand, to help him stand,
Will bring you back a blessing.
So in the fight 'twixt wrong and right,
That's waging here below.
Should praise be said, don't wait till dead
Before you tell them so.

TIM TICKLE.

"PIKELETS" (BY MCPIKE).

BROTHER BLOOMER'S BITTER BEREAVEMENT.

No one would believe, because it staggers belief,
That dear Brother Bloomer would so soon come to grief;
Yet that's what he's come to, for he says so himself,
And B. B. wouldn't lie for either pity or pelf;
Much less would he lie 'bout a bereavement so keen
As the one he encountered October thirteen,
When McPike reached the end of his glit'ring array
Of alphabetical rot in a "rale" A-Z way;
And yet 'tis comfort to know, despite his great grief,
That Bloomer'll bloom till his busy pen finds relief
In a complete dearth of words, since nothing else will Knock the talk out of Bloomer, lest 'tis a real kill;
But kill him we won't, for he's quite too good to spare
Though not good enough with the bright angels to share
In the glories beyond, there sweet cymbals to strike,
Which same are reserved for better folks, like McPike.

An old joker in the Second was informed by his Irish wife a few days ago that a certain mutual friend had just returned from the South; that the trip had done him a great deal of good, and that he wasn't feeling a bit well this morning. Bull-y for the Emerald Islander.

Brother Patch is to be congratulated on the fact that he has got far and away from the actual need for wearing his name in a conspicuous place on his trouserloons.

A certain comp. in the Second applied to a fellow craftsman t'other day for a few 10 point cap T's, and was cordially informed that the party of the second part would procure him a glass of water, if he needed it, but at that particular moment he didn't have any T on tap. And the party of the first part returned to his frame in high dudgeon.

NO PATCH ON OUR PATCH.

Many people we've met are quite prone to believe
That they are the real thing, with an ace up its sleeve;
In fact they conceive, in their vain pomp and their pride,
That they are the goods, all wool, and full a yard wide;
Yet we have in the Second a good, solid Patch,
Not a full web, all wool, nor of texture to match,
But all the same our Patch can hoe his own row
With any "full webber," as the days come and go,
And not a toad in the puddle, swell though it may
With pride and conceit, can knock the props any day,
In the matter of "get there," from under our Patch,
Who abides in "ring alley," "ringed" errors to catch.

"IS IT RIGHT?"—NO, BUT THE AUTHOR IS.

The only Mr. Maupin with whom we're "acquent"
Is the one in "ring alley" who plods right along,
Though still others there are—with that we're content—
Who bear the same name in this city's great throng;
Yet the Maupin to whom we now raise our hat
Has Will as a prefix, and wears it with grace,
And is likewise a poet who always "stands pat"
On conceptions and language ne'er out of place,
As witness his poem in these columns last week,
Which to our mind is a gem, rare, pure and bright,
And as such it's well-deserved praises we speak
When we claim and proclaim the poem is all right.

Columbia's Opportunities.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

Now that the typesetting machines are installed, a question of great moment is the fixing of a standard of competency for operators. This is a matter which has been handled very clumsily or entirely let alone in America. The I. T. U. has persistently kept hands off so far as anything definite is concerned. Until the Washington convention acted in the matter all "dead lines" were prohibited in theory and on paper, but were actually in force in nearly every city in the country. Since that time it is the foreman of each office who is the sole judge as to whether an operator is competent or not. As a result there is endless variety and confusion. No two foremen agree on a standard. Some demand great speed without much regard to quality of product; a number desire speed and excellence, while a very few require excellence without much regard to speed. Conditions for doing work also vary with each office; systems of measurement and allowances are as diverse as possible. What is needed is a universal standard, fixed by a competent authority, after careful investigation.

Germany and England have handled this matter wisely and scientifically. There the unions have long had a standard established. For each make of machine a certain amount of product for each size of type is decreed to be a day's work, and no more can be demanded by the employer. The result is that when an operator attains the necessary degree of proficiency he knows he can obtain a position and hold it anywhere. In America the situation is far different. Having visited a number of cities and also having been privileged to talk with machine men from other places it has been possible to learn something about the vagaries of regulations governing machine work. In Binghamton, N. Y., an operator who can set 2,600 ems per hour, minion, is competent (conditions not known); in Boston and New York newspaper offices no dead line is fixed, but operators set display heads in addition to machine matter; in Cincinnati the rate is 3,000 ems per hour, with some hand composition; in Chattanooga, Tenn., the rate is 5,000 to 6,000 ems minion, or nonpareil, per hour, all machine work straight; in Washington it is 4,000 to 5,000 or more ems per hour, straight work on the machine, measured by clock; in Denver the mininum is 5,000 ems per hour, and a bonus for a certain surplus. These are a few instances showing dissimilarity of requirements. All these mentioned work under the time system.

In towns where piece-work prevails there is generally no limit either way, so long as an operator can set enough type to make his employment profitable, but anyone falling below 4,000 ems per hour is generally not considered worth having around. This means at newspaper work on type not larger than minion and all apply to linotype work.

How does this have any bearing on Columbia Union? In many ways. Here, probably will be afforded the opportunity to make the very best observations as to capacity of two makes of machines. It would be wise to have a committee look into the matter, spend time making tests with the various sizes of type in order to learn how much of each size can be reasonably produced by an ordinary operator. When ascertained this should be adopted for the Union and adherence thereto enforced. The standard should be fixed after conference with employers, so that they may know just what is to be expected in the way of product. Then the committee should also formulate a set of rules under which the results prescribed are to be attained.

In gathering information the committee should be guided in great measure by the operators, and not by what employers have to say. These latter gentlemen are crafty and shrewd. It is their business to get all they can for their money, so they will naturally use their efforts to secure a high standard of speed. They have much more information on the subject than we have. All who have worked on the machines know that in a majority of offices close records are kept of all work done. It may well be supposed this is not merely for keeping track of the individuals, but for comparison with similar records from other cities as well. For instance a Los Angeles newspaper proprietor visited Denver, where the product is in the neighborhood of 50,000 ems nonpareil or agate for each machine each day, of eight hours. On his return to the California City he expressed the opinion that the Los Angeles operators were a set of shirkers and robbers because they produce only 35,000 to 38,000 ems in the same length of time that the Denver boys do the larger amount.

Also in this connection must be considered the various devices resorted to by foxy employers to get the most product they can. In a town up North when machines were installed a few years ago the manager made this proposition: To the man making the best showing each month $5 extra will be paid, and to the next best $2.50. The boys swallowed the bait and hook. They worked for that $5 and struck a lively gait. Meanwhile the manager patted himself on the back. When he had paid out $100 he announced gravely that he could not afford to continue his liberal (?) policy. The boys were then doing 40,000 ems a night and they have had to continue at that clip.

In only one place of importance has a standard been set by arbitration, and that was a mere dictum. Last year, it may be remembered, the Minneapolis people had their scale arbitrated. It was put on the time basis and the arbitrators said ability to set 4,000 ems per hour would be the standard of competency. This was handed out with a lower scale. Then the boys did a little figuring on their side, and the result was they gave 4,000 ems and no more. Of course the employers howled, but they couldn't get a change until they adopted piece work again.

The adoption of a standard will be a protection to all parties. It is right and proper that there should be a definite amount of product furnished the employer for the money he pays. This amount should be fair. It should be such as an operator of ordinary ability can furnish. On the other hand, the operator would be protected, because the employer should not be allowed to demand more for his money than he is entitled to. If such is permitted the result is that no one has any certainty of employment. The slower men will be driven out, and the competition for jobs will be fierce between swifts. As for the foreman, it will remove from his life one of the most unpleasant features. With the standard fixed he can know exactly what to expect. If the employer wants a certain amount of product the foreman can figure it out nicely on the standard basis. The presiding genius of the composing room will be in a firm position. If told by the employer he must get faster men on the machines, the foreman can reply that so long as the operators supply the standard amount he can not make a change, and if greater product is desired it will mean more machines, or working the plant longer hours. That will be selling labor's product on a purely business basis, as it should be.

If Columbia Union, after careful investigation, fixes such a standard, it will become a model for the whole United States. For that reason the preliminary work thereon should be undertaken at an early date. It will require a good, practical committee and the expenditure of some time and money to make the necessary investigation, but the results will amply justify all cost. Strict regulation of conditions was very necessary in hand composition. With the change to machine work the demand for similar rules is just as urgent.

Of Interest to Building Trades.

The plan of organization outlined by the Executive Committee of the Central Labor Union is to be presented to the structural building trades for consideration. A meeting will be called at an early date at which all the trades connected in the building line will be invited to send delegates irrespective of present affiliation.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

There is no more dangerous discussion to inaugurate than one touching religion, for, though there are many who give little thought to the subject, those who do take an interest in religion usually take a very deep interest and have very pronounced views. The propagation of different religions has caused many of the most bloody wars of which we have record, and I doubt if a nation has ever changed its religion except as a result of subjugation by the sword. We have greater religious toleration in this country, probably, than any other, but for all that religious faiths are not untrammeled. The Jew, the Mohammedan, the Adventists and Seventh-Day Baptists are compelled to "keep" a day they do not regard as holy. True, they are not prevented from observing as the Sabbath the day of their religion, but that does not absolve them from also observing the Christian Sabbath so far as the business affairs of life are concerned, compelling them to lose a day out of respect for other men's religion. This is probably necessary in the present scheme of making people good by law, and if each were permitted to "violate" a Sabbath he did not believe in it is possible that some evil men would profess a religion merely for mercenary purposes, in order to do business when other pious people of other beliefs were closed up. So we must make all people recognize our Christian Sabbath, whether they believe in it or not, or go the length of making Sabbath observance a matter of conscience, as we do many other things regarded by some as more or less sinful. Some years ago strong efforts were made by many good people to do away with much Sunday work that they were sure need not be done on that day, but nothing of importance came of it. I had the honor to suggest a measure that I thought would be very helpful—a law requiring that all work done on Sunday should be paid for at twice the rates paid for work done on week days—and though the proposition seemed to meet with very little enthusiasm, I still believe it would have been the most effective means for the abolition of unnecessary Sunday work.

It is not my intention in these little heart-to-heart talks to combat any man's religion, for I feel the greatest toleration for all. If I have any well-defined purpose, which it is reasonable to doubt, it is to suggest that religion should have some loftier purpose than the selfish one of saving our own souls. Right here some good brother will butt in and say, "Yes; the saving of other souls." But I can not help feeling that he who converts a man to his religion takes upon himself the responsibility of that other man's salvation, or would do so if salvation depended upon believing in some particular state of things, and what will be done to him if he has converted a man from the true faith to a false one? Of course the propagator believes his is the true faith, but does he know it—can he prove it except by the test that admits of no further appeal if the verdict goes against him? I would have a man's religion of some use for the earthly welfare of those less fortunately situated. I know it is the custom of good people to despise these earthly tabernacles we are given to inhabit, said to have been created in the image of God and worthy of respect for that if for no other reason. "One thing at a time," is a very good rule, and the comfort we can confer on the bodies of the distressed, though costing us more, I believe to be of infinitely more practical use than spiritual consolation. Not at all objecting to the latter, the former fits the recipient for the latter, for no hungry man's Godly thankfulness ever extended deeper than his vocal organs.

The soul is an intangible thing, for the existence of which we have only our faith. I firmly believe in its existence, I will say for the benefit of whom it may concern. The body is a real, substantial entity, and if it suffers from want it is within the power of other bodies, guided by properly disposed minds, to relieve that suffering by contributing a portion of their substance. The suffering soul—if souls ever suffer during the lifetime of the body—is beyond human relief. This is based on the belief that the soul is not identical with the mind, but the spiritual body of which the Bible speaks. As we can't do anything for souls, let us do what we can for the bodies, and in that way, as it seems that every act must be actuated by selfish motives, earn our own salvation.

One dear old brother, who I know lives the life which meets my warmest approbation—one of helpfulness for others—told me that I should go back to the faith that I learned at my mother's knee. I do not know that I have departed so far from it, except that perhaps I do not regard all the things as sinful which she did, and have more faith than she had that the kind of a man that God made is the kind of a man that He wanted. But if I have departed from "the faith of my fathers." have I not had all the means for the foundation of a faith that they had? Has anything in the way of evidence been lost to which they had access and I have not? I think not, except what has been overturned by the discoveries of science, and nothing particularly vital in that way. My dear old brother means his religion—every word of it—and it does not make him an uncomfortable being without faith in human nature and humanity. He knows that the needs of the body many times are deserving of prompter attention than those of the soul, for I have known him to hand a poor, trembling fellow-man, shaking from the effects of a debauch, the price of a drink of whiskey, knowing that that was the one thing which he needed at that moment, and afterward beg him, plead with him, never to get himself in that condition again. That was true Christianity—that was an act, in view of the pharisaism with which too many professing Christians envelop themselves, worthy of the Christ Himself. These words and the act made occasion for them will not meet the approbation of the self-constituted proprietors of salvation.

But I won't preach.

I owe an apology to the Union Veterans' Association of the Government Printing office. I was handed an epitome of the attractions they were to have at their entertainment last Saturday evening at Typographical Temple for the benefit of a member, in ample time for publication last week, but put it in my pocket, never to find it or think of it again until the paper was in the hands of its eager readers. I can only offer as an excuse that my memory is not long enough to reach my hip pocket.

The following was handed to me, I've mercifully forgotten by whom. A year's subscription to THE TRADES UNIONIST will be given to the first to furnish a solution, the key to which must have been in the quotation marks, which I have omitted.

"I'm out of sorts," one day he said.
The following day we found him dead.
His head was very badly mashed,
And all his dupes had just been cashed.
Few of his type can now be found,
If you should hunt the world around.
His frame was broken, form was pied;
We buried him just where he died.

The author is not barred from the competition.

I have received, from the hands of the authoress, who is the wife of Dr. DeWitt C. Chadwick, a copy of "The Rescue of the Princess Sylvia; A Fairy Tale for Children, by Alice Chadwick," published by the Broadway Publishing Company, New York, of which this is the second edition. It was written by Mrs. Chadwick when a girl of 15, and is a delightful story beautifully printed and bound, for the class for whom it was written—the children. The little book received a favorable notice in the "New Books" article of the Evening Star last Saturday,

My good brother Fewsom caught about the regular "orthodox" idea in expressing himself about the "sermons" in THE TRADES UNIONIST as "principally tirades against churches which the writers evidently have not attended enough to know what is done in them," only he does not go far enough. He should speak of their authors as misbegotten sons of Satan, atheists, infidels, defamers, so lost to a sense of decency as to be objects of contempt and deserving to be shunned by all good people. But perhaps the "one says" has not said that much to him yet. I think even Newsom means well.

* * * *

A "down town" man told me the other day that one of the largest job offices in the city charges a customer 25 cents extra for attaching the union lalel to a job of printing. I knew that the Typothetæ discouraged the use of the label wherever possible, but I had no idea that they had inaugurated a system of fines for its use. I have always, vainly perhaps, cherished the hope that the Typothetæ would find it to their interest to work in harmony with the Typographical Union instead of opposing it, but it seems they will never learn that whatever they withhold from labor the customer will withhold from them, because of competition among themselves.

An Important Case.

Arguments and briefs in a case of great interest to railroad employes and the traveling public in general was heard before the United States Supreme Court last Monday, it being the suit of W. O. Johnson, an employe, against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, he having lost an arm while attempting to make a coupling between an engine and a dining car, the engine being equipped with a M. C. B. coupler, and dining car with a Miller hook.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth district handed down a decision in favor of the railroad company, whereupon the Interstate Commerce Commission, in order to establish the validity of the act as passed by Congress in reference to safety appliance equipment on all cars, for the protection of life and limb of employes and the general public, obtained a writ of certiorari, through the Government, hence the removal to the United States Supreme Court.

The case is unusual, from the fact that it is the first of such suits to come to the United States Supreme Court, and the decision will be of much importance to thousands of railroad employes.

Secretary of Interstate Commerce Commission Moseley greatly facilitated the case for the Government by furnishing much useful information and data, while Hugh R. Fuller, of Beaver Falls, Pa., and a member of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, also rendered much assistance to the attorneys.

Mr. Fuller is at present engaged in compiling statistics for the Grand Lodge of Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and has for several years past represented the various railroad organizations during the sessions of Congress in looking after their interests in the way of legislation.

Edwin C. Jones.

The Welsh clipping inserted in THE TRADES UNIONIST recently by H. S. Sutton appeared in Y Drych, printed at Utica, N. Y., under date of Emporia, Kans., and was from the pen of Rev. J. Michael Hughes. For the benefit of Mr. Jones' numerous friends, below will be found a full and accurate translation.—D. T. Lloyd, First Division, G. P. O.

Friday morning, September 23, a daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Edwin C. Jones at the home of Mrs. Jones' sister, Mrs H. W. Hughes, Dry Creek. The following morning I received a cablegram from my old friend, Edwin C. Jones, dated Manila, P. I., announcing the arrival of the new-comer. Although hardly three and a half miles are between me and the scene of the happy occurrence, yet the news had traveled twenty thousand miles before I learned of the event. Mother and baby are getting along nicely.

The many friends of Edwin C. Jones will be pained to learn that lately he has been more or less under the weather. Fourth of July last himself with several friends attended a banquet, and it seems all partook freely of cucumbers, and were taken sick, but I understand they are recuperating. At this writing Mr. Jones is Acting Public Printer of the Government Printing Office at Manila, with several hundred men under him. He was the first man sent out by the United States Government to establish the office and procure a suitable site for the project, and since has been rewarded several times with increased compensation for efficient services. Let us hope for his speedy restoration to health and to winning more laurels.

Polite Conductors in Berlin.

From the New York Press.

One of the beauties of life abroad is the kind attention lavished upon you by public servants. Take, for example, the street car conductors in Berlin. The cars do not pause at every corner, as with us, but make a run of three blocks without stopping. When the conductor sees passengers about to enter his car, he steps off and, removing his cap respectfully, waits till all are seated, when he jumps on and gives the forward signal. With each collected fare he offers a ticket for the passenger to retain and exhibit on demand as evidence that the fare has been paid.

ODE.

BY HELEN NELSON-DOOCY.

Sitting in the twilight, watching
The dying rays of the setting sun;
Thinking of another day
That is done.

Only waiting till the shadows
A little deeper grow,
Only waiting till the gloaming
Of the days last beam has flown.

When the long bright day dies slowly,
And the hour is quiet and holy,
With thoughts of absent loved ones,
Let me be near you in the gloaming.

'Till night with memory have faded
From the heart so full of love,
Till the bright stars of heaven greet you
Through the dark dome above.

Sleeping tired out on your lowly couch,
Tired heart must wait and watch;
When the night is dying slowly,
It may be at the cock-crow, I will come.

I am tired of waiting, yes, waiting,
If the angels would only open wide the mystic gate,
At whose feet I have so long lingered,
Weary and desolate of long waiting.

Iron Ore in the States.

The quantity of iron ore produced in the United States in 1902 amounted to 35,554,135 long tons, valued at $65,412,950, an increase of 23 per cent over the production of 1701, and of 103 per cent over that of 1897. The iron ore produced in the year 1902 was obtained from mining operations carried on in twenty-three States and two Territories. Minnesota, with 15,137,650 tons to her credit, heads the list. Michigan, with 11,135,215 tons, stands second. Alabama, with a tonnage of 3,574,474, is the only other State that passes the million ton mark.

A man's self-respect is often punctured by the suspicions of his neighbors.

A Deserving Tribute.

Charles W. Seaman, for twelve years a compositor on the Star, resigned Monday last to accept a position as Chinese inspector in the immigration service. Mr. Seaman is not only an exceptionally capable compositor, but is possessed of personal characteristics that have won for him a large circle of friends. The position carries a substantial salary and expense account, while this branch of the service also affords chances for advancement out of the ordinary. The Star Chapel, at at a special meeting Tuesday, passed the following resolution, a copy of which was ordered engrossed and handed to Mr. Seaman:

Resolved, That the Evening Star Chapel extends its heartiest congratulations to Mr. Charles W. Seaman on his appointment to an inspectorship in the U. S. Immigration Service; that in the withdrawal of Mr. Seaman from the Chapel, after a continuous membership of twelve years in good standing, the members thereof beg to express their sense of loss at the severance of relations which have uninterruptedly been of a virile and wholesome character, and at the same time mingled with sincere well-wishes and supplications that you may enjoy even greater graces of happiness and riches in the new sphere.

Benefit Concert.

Musicians Union, No. 161, will give a benefit concert at Chase's Theater on Sunday night. The musical program is to be one of a high order of merit, as the best musicians in the city will participate.

From present appearances the differences existing between Musicians Union, No. 161, and two of the local theaters will be amicably settled in the near future.

Two-thirds of the dignity we encounter in our daily walks is merely bluff.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

First Division.

We miss the smiling face of our watchman-friend who has been transferred.

Thos. Burns, laborer in the "Y," began a ten days leave on Wednesday. He goes to his Michigan home to vote.

Chief Clerk Brian returned to his desk on Monday, after a ten days rest at home. He was accorded a hearty reception.

Geo. Albertson has applied for an extension of leave w. p., i. e., without pay. Indicating that he must be enjoying himself.

The committee of one thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine on the plans for the new Union Station, plaza, and approaches thereto, unselfishly watches its daily progress.

Louis Vogt and Winslow Lewis are doing daily stunts on the "Mergs." We learn that McCord and Jones are getting along finely.

Messrs. Bennett and Wilber, disbursing officer and paying teller, receive an ovation in the "middle of the room" when accompanied by the "strong box."

Did you ever think that we must always have an artistic sneezer? The greatest sneezer is the one that imitates Nero. But it enlivens our silent (?) hours and causes us to cheer up and be gay.

John A. Onyun has gone to his Illinois home; Sam Ferrier to his Southern Indiana home; while Messrs. F. O. Jones and Schooley have gone to Iowa. Jno. W. Sherman, of the "Y" force, left for his legal residence in Denver, Colo.

Query? Say, boys, do you think it is the proper thing to assemble at the lunch stand before the whistle blows? I don't; do you? Is it not a breach of the office or chapel rule as well as annoying to the clever people who are the food distributors? Don't do it.

Have you handed your name to Clerk Berger? Hurry up and get next. Do you know that THE TRADES UNIONIST is the only sure enough eight hour office in this city. Then encourage the proprietors in their laudable efforts to furnish a highly creditable paper chuck full of interesting news for the craft.

Us compositors on the Senate side of this Division have a better opportunity to see the visitors than those on the House side. The "fairy" tales that some of the guides impart to the sight-seers would make an angel envious. Everything goes, however, and the chances are that they will never see each other again.

E. M. Root, in charge of leads, slugs, etc., has a pair of boys engaged in the theatrical and show business of which he may well feel proud. His youngest son, who has been connected with Buffalo Bill's Wild West Shows for a number of years, has but recently returned from Europe where they exhibited to large audiences.

Over in the office "cage" there has been temporary changes occasioned by the absence of Foreman Bowen. Geo. R. Boone is acting foreman; B. H. Pratt deals out the copy, and Frank Morgan is the postmaster, checks up pinkarets, and so forth, while the other end men, Berger and Leeds, hold down their jobs good and hard.

"Clean, be clean." So we should all be, do and say. Did you ever in all your experience work in a finer or better equipped office than this? I never did. Then why not be attentive to those little affairs of every-day life which will make it all the more pleasant. The Good Book says—"Cleanliness is next to godliness."

Mrs. Rose F. Sprague, widow of our late fellow-workman, E. R. Sprague, through her counsellor, Charles T. Hendler, filed a petition in the Probate Court during the past week, asking that letters of administration be granted her on the estate. An action necessary that the proper steps might be taken to enter damages against the City and Suburban Railroad. May she receive the entire amount sued for—$25,000.

Among those reporting for work the closing days of last week were R. L. Hollard, John Waller and George A. Robey. Of all the wonderfully descriptive Irishmen that ever signed Uncle Sam's pay-roll, commend us to Waller. Did you ever hear his dog story? I think he believes it. Some one whispers over our shoulder that Col. Wm. H. Fisher, of the Library Division, saved John's life the last time. We can't vouch for it, but we have heard of several gentlemen who made the attempt and failed. We are glad that the dear old hero of two wars is one of us.

It must be a source of gratification to the hosts of friends of Arthur F. Bloomer, who, most excellently writes up "Flotsam and Jetsam" in each issue of THE TRADES UNIONIST, to learn that his daughter, Miss Jessie, who is pursuing the study of music in Leipsic, Germany, not only passed a very creditable examination, but was personally complimented by Mr. Arthur Nikisch, the former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was present. Higher honors, doubtless, await this gifted young lady, which will be pleasant reading for her father. Mrs. Bloomer is in Leipsic with her daughter, where they will remain for for some time.

Second Division.

Hank Allen acted as assistant foreman for a few days.

Foreman Milo Shanks and Postmaster Rowe went home last Saturday to vote.

Henry Taylor and Jas. W. Vanarsdell left last Monday for their home to register and vote.

There are twenty on leave from this room, and next Saturday about as many more leave for their homes for the purpose of exercising their sovereign rights as voters.

Dr. Grant Barnhart, of the Fifth Division proof press, is now practicing medicine. His office is at 1016 I street northwest. His cordial invitation for me to pay him a friendly call at his office I know is generally extended to all.

Owing to the resignation of Chairman Cornish, an extra election was held Monday. J. B. Trudgion was elected chairman over two opponents. F. J. Hodges, a temsorary, was elected secretary over J. H. Swerdfiger by a small margin.

When a referee of a great proof room admits that punctuation is generally a personal whim, surely it is time to draft some kind of rules on the subject. Then the compositor will have redress, because a reader never thinks to ring a pet whim, which to him is the best of authority.

IDEALS.—November 6, The Ideal Young Man; November 13, The Ideal Young Woman; November 20, The Ideal Home; November 27, The Ideal Church. The above sermons will be preached Sunday evenings by Rev. E. B. Bigby at the Ninth Street Christian Church, Ninth and D streets northeast. "The Printer's Church."

Last Saturday Mr. Titus F. Ellis received the following letter from Mr. C. L Nace, of this room, who went up to Brooklyn to attend a convention. The letter was written on a Waldorf-Astoria letter head and inclosed in the same kind of an envelope. He said since that he handed it to a bell boy to mail. Well, the bell boy must have gone over the river to mail it, for it had a Brooklyn post-mark on it:

NEW YORK, October 27, 1904.

FRIEND TITUS: I have just been up and down the subway, and when I got back to the hotel I thought I would drop you a line and let you know that I had done the town of New York today, and will be on the Bowery and Pell and Mott street to-night. My regards to all.

Respectfully yours,
C. L. NACE.

Third Division.

When I went down to the foreman's desk the other day to apply for my certificate of employment in the G. P. O., he laughingly made the remark that he guessed we would "have to shut up shop" on account of the large number of election-day absentees. Fully one-half the division will have taken their departure by next Monday, to be gone all the way from three days to three weeks. As I expect to cast my vote in Lakewood, R. I., I will be unable to furnish items for this column until the week following election, and for reasons connected with my expected absence there will only be a few lines this time.

Joseph E. Goodkey, the pride of the Third Division, started October 31 for Louisville, Ky., to register and vote. He will also visit Cincinnati and St. Louis.

Hoyt Holton will start on the 5th inst. for Crown Point, Ind. On November 22 Hoyt's parents will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding. It is needless to say Hoyt will be there.

Through an oversight, I did not mention in the list of substitutes last week the name of Will A. Morris, who presides at one of the presses during the incumbency of Will E. Soult at the desk. These Willie boys rattle me.

We have the bank statements with us once more. Twenty men have been specially detailed for the work. It is somewhat monotonous, but "phat," hence the jealous persons not among the twenty have named them, in spite, the "old spav" crowd.

On Thursday, October 27, Joseph M. Lenhart, our time-keeper, started for Meadville, Pa. During his absence his desk has been occupied by Wm. H. Duling, who performs his new duties as if he never did anything else. Bill is slug 103 when at home.

The many friends of Wm. H. Bright will be pleased to learn that his wife gave birth to a son and heir on Sunday, October 31, at 4.30 p. m. "Just quitting time; he's a union baby," remarked the proud father, par parenthesis. Mr. and Mrs. Bright have our hearty congratulations.

J. C. Sowers, ring-master of the correcting alley, appeared at his desk Monday morning after an absence of sixty days. On my saying to him that it seemed a long time since he went away, he confided to me that he wished he might be gone for sixty days longer. From which I infer that Sowers must have had an extraordinary good time.

Chairman Piehoff is still in a serious condition. He raises more or less blood every day, and in other ways shows that he is a very sick man. He receives every care from his family and unremitting attention from his physician, who says it would be dangerous to move him to his South Carolina home at this season of the year. We can only hope for the best.

J. W. BELCHER.

Specification Notes.

Proofreader Calkins and Copyholder Stone are off on leave.

On account of the voters going home this division was compelled to work overtime on Monday and Tuesday nights.

Miss May D. White, of Kansas, one of our excellent lady compositors, has been selected to learn the Merg., and works half of each day on that machine.

Miss Alice Trefts has been confined to Sibley Hospital for several days and underwent a slight operation there recently. At present she is much better and will soon be able to leave the hospital.

The head of the Patent Office of the Republic of France was a caller upon the Specification Division on Tuesday. He was inspecting the workings of our Patent Office in all its relations. One of the proofreaders from the main office, who speaks French, was acting as his escort and interpreter.

Some of those who will go home to vote this week are: J. C. Lightcap, Pittsburg. Pa.; S. S. English, Wellsboro, Pa., M. N. Kautenberg, Freeport, Ill.; M. P. Connolly, Bay City, Mich.; Martin Schram, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Jack Edsall, Warwick, N. Y.; J. C. O'Brien, Pottsville, Pa.; C. W. Kelly, Fenton, Mich.; W. F. Walsmith, Sunbury, Pa.; Will M. Edmunds, Terre Haute, Ind.; C. B. Yates, Sedalia, Mo.; Foreman W. R. Ramsey, Columbus, Ohio, and others.

Harry Billings recently sent a friend of his for theater tickets for a certain night. The tickets were secured and stuck away in Harry's vest pocket. One evening after dinner, as he was puffing away upon a well-filled Havana, with his leg thrown over the corner of the table in his room, he thought he would take out his tickets and enjoy a mental reverie of the good time he was to have at the play, but to his utter surprise it was then past time for the curtain to go up and his tickets were for that same night. We were told that he was allowed to select another date for the play.

Miss Edith Hawk recently received a letter from a friend, Mr. W. F. Poland, of Columbus, Ohio, who is now an inmate of the Printers' Home at Colorado Springs. The following extract, taken from this letter, gives a glimpse of the workings of this great institution:

We have a home in every sense of the word. Our every wish is attended to. Fine bedrooms and beds, lavatory and bath rooms on each floor, and there is no finer table any place than we have to sit down to. It is filled with the best the market affords. A doctor and trained nurse to wait on you if sick. No restraint is placed on the residents except that which would be expected in any well-regulated home. We go and come as fancy dictates, from early morn till ten p. m., the specified hour for closing the house, but by notifying the superintendent he cheerfully grants you permission to remain later.

Injured at Work.

E. L. McClelland, an active and ardent worker in the cause of unionism, and a member of Carpenters Union, No. 190, met with a painful and serious accident while at work for W. C. Mooney. A hatchet slipped and struck his hand, nearly severing an artery.

Mr. Mooney gave Mr. McClelland the greatest consideration at the time of his injury and "Mac" fully appreciates the kindness shown him by Mr. Mooney, as it is seldom noted that an employer can evince any great solicitude for a workman while there are so many others to step in the vacant place.

Bindery Notes.

Harry Ashion's hair is getting gray. He claims it is due to a close haircut.

The Bindery looks deserted these days, nearly every one having a vote being desirous of using his franchise this year.

Billy Hyde is noticeable these days for the far-away expression he wears. His real estate deal has made him serious and contemplative.

Charley Benker, the Beau Brummel of the cowboys, has blossomed forth in a new style glove. Joker Donahue will now have to retire for good.

Joker Donahue, formerly the Harry Lehr of the Bindery, is anxious to take lessons from Chesty Boswell, who has him beat a mile among the ladies.

George Smith, who recently returned from a visit to Jersey, is unable to give any forecast of the political situation in this dependency of the United States.

Ed. Ryan has a good appetite. He ate so much at the lunch room the other day that he had to ask the assistance of his neighbor to count up his score.

The sweet little sunflower from Kansas does not eat so much candy since her Minnesota friends have gone home. The Baltimore lad should come to the rescue.

A sigh of relief will go up from W. C. Connor when the campaign closes. He has been holding down a desk at the Riggs every night for two months after his work in the Bindery during the day.

Among the prominent men in the Bindery who have gone to their homes may be mentioned Sanford Warren, private secretary to Foreman Byrne; A. C. Unkefer, time clerk, and W. W. Blake, jacket clerk.

Edward W. Tatum, president of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, has tendered his resignation to the Executive Council to take effect January 1, 1905. He was forced to this action because the locals in Chicago insisted upon him devoting his whole time to their business. He will probably be succeeded by First Vice-President Robert Glockling, of Toronto, Canada.

A representative of the French government, accompanied by Mr. Wilfrid Rouleau, who acted as interpreter, was chaperoned through the Bindery during the week by Assistant Foreman W. C. Connor. They seemed to be greatly interested in our ways of doing the work and were especially pleased to note the many labor-saving machines. The French representative was of large stature, with long flowing black moustache, and would attract attention in any gathering.

Personal Mention.

John Heydler, secretary of the National Base Ball League, returned to Washington Monday for a month's vacation. Prior to taking service with the big league Mr. Heydler held a machine on the Star, where he is held in high esteem, both by executives and employes. He is also well known as an able writer on sporting topics.

George E. Richardson and Fred. W. Peacock, representing the Textile Workers, of Fall River, Mass., are in the city in the interest of that organization, now on strike for nearly four months against a reduction in wages.

Samuel Gompers, Frank Morrison, and other officials connected with the American Federation of Labor, will leave next Sunday for Chicago, en-route to San Francisco, to attend the twenty-fourth annual convention of the A. F. of L. in that city.

How Marbles Are Made.

The ordinary marbles that boys play with are all of foreign make, being manufactured in great quantities in Saxony, out of a peculiar grade of limestone. The stone is broken into square blocks, each of sufficient size to make a sphere the size of the desired marble. The cubes are placed into a mill consisting of a flat, horizontally revolving stone, with numbers of concentric grooves or furrows on its surface. A block of oak of the stone's diameter resting on the cubes, revolves over the cubes in a current of water, the cubes in about fifteen minutes being reduced to rounded form.

Where Colds Are Unknown.

From the New York Press.

In the extremely cold climate of Northern Russia all classes of people wear linen underclothes instead of woolens, and such a malady as a cold is unknown. The Russian of those latitudes does not understand the meaning of rheumatism, bronchitis, catarrh, or consumption. Japan is a country essentially humid and rainy. There are from 180 to 200 rainy days in the year. The changes of temperature are sudden. The winter is cold. The houses are exposed to every wind. The dress of the natives leaves the chest naked, winter and summer, and the legs uncovered. The ordinary folk do not wear hats. The country people pass half their lives with their legs in the water of the rice fields. This war has shown that the Japanese are the hardiest nation on earth.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

Sermonizers, all! whether the Maryland governor, General Corbin, Novelist Meredith, or Private Smith from the Philippines. The governor was eminently correct. The couple who marry prior to maturity speedily realize that they have bitten into a green persimmon and later find an abundance of riper fruit to be had for the taking.

The proposition of the novelist is not devoid of merit. When it is discovered that a woman can not, in exchange for her support, give a measure of cheer, comfort, and consolation—I will not desecrate the holy word love by its use in this connection—it were better that the paths of the couple lie in diverse directions. The ten-year contract would be acceptable but for these three things. Primarily, the children. Then, before five years had expired, the couple realize that they are mismated, and the remainder of the contract period would be devoted to the finding and courtship of No. 2. Third—of greatest importance—the future of the woman and offspring. It is easier to market a man's "leaving" than a man's "refusal." The praises of the little widow are, like old Floyd Ireson's ride to Marblehead, told in story and sung in rhyme. Sonnets to the divorcee are seldom seen. Of a gentleman seeking an introduction for a friend, the imperious Alice Ward inquired, "What's his pedigree?" The "dope sheet" is found upon every other desk. Given the name of any entry on the American turf, the gamin of the street can give you past performances for half a dozen equine generations. The wreck, as he passes his last dollar to the bookmaker, doesn't see the figures upon the blackboard—he doesn't care whether it's raining at Latonia or Brighton Beach; there only filters through his rum-dumb brain the knowledge that in the halcyon days agone the dam carried weight under the wire, and he is betting on the daughter to-day. After the clods have fallen upon the coffin of one of the Meredith couples, some young man in quest of a wife might study the human dope sheet, and ask, "What of th mother?" And in reply he would be told: "She had a ten-year contract with Blank and it was not renewed." Methinks he'd place his affections elsewhere.

General Corbin overlooks the fact that water is not the only thing that finds its level. If the soldier has been reared in a kimona neighborhood he will find its counterpart the second day after he strikes a town; his association, whether Four-and-a-half street or Connectict avenue, is purely an accident of birth.

The young man of the generation to come will not be as quick to marry as the young man of the generation just passed. One reason for this is that each day, week, and month the number of ladies in employment increases. It may not be over remunerative, but it serves to keep them mentally and physically employed. To use the exact words of one of them: "I am not engaged in a man hunt; not this season" Again, many ladies are daily embarking in various lines of business on their own hook, and if moderately successful, would not give three hurrahs for the best man that ever came down the pike. After subtracting this vast number, and I speak of conditions as applied to the cities, still women are over plentiful; they are too "easy." The chick-a-dee bird that blows in the window of the hunter's lodge is not reckoned as game. If the young man is inclined to be convivial he can find a couple of "chair-sweaters" at the nearest gin-mill with a side entrance. If he holds a position of responsibility he makes his evening engagements via the 'phone on his desk. If the operator tells him that "3499" is engaged, he tells her to connect with "2217" or "381," and the fate and fortune of two or more people hang just where "central" happens to stick a peg. The colleges and the fraternal societies have their social side, and even the churches have their guilds and leagues and their base-ball nines—all schools for the facilitation of courtship.

In these "frenzied" days, were I running the show, I would make the fine on a drunken woman about four times as great as that of a man and would throw a number of what are, to my mind, safeguards around the issuance of the marriage license; yet I don't suppose either the innovations of the novelist, the governor or myself will be adopted, the world wag in the same old way, our reliance being in the axiom, "God works in a mysterious way His wonders to perform."

THE TRADES UNIONIST.

OFFICIAL ORGAN CENTRAL LABOR UNION, WASHINGTON BRANCH, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Vol. IX. No. 22. WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1904. Price, 3 Cents.

THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION

Representatives of Textile Workers Address Central Body.

MARBLE CUTTERS ADMITTED

Upholsterers Present Case and Ask for Committee—Unions Still Reporting on the Kernan Case—Elite Laundry Case Unsettled—Appropriation Made for the Textile Workers Strike.

The regular weekly meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8 10 p. m. Monday evening, Vice President Crown in the chair.

The minutes of the last meeting were read, and, after correction, were approved.

Delegate Nolta, of Upholsterers Union, requested that the regular order of business be suspended and that the representatives from that union be heard. They stated that members of their union had been arrested for conspiracy and were now under bond. They asked the appointment of a committee of three to act in conjunction with their organization in considering this matter. The request was granted and the committee was appointed.

The Grievance Committee reported progress.

CREDENTIALS.

Marble Workers Helpers and Polishers No. 33: James Garvey, Jesse Wells.

Interior Marble and Slate Cutters, No. 5: J. Lewis, J. Mobley, and D. Lent.

Bills amounting to $53.25 were read and ordered paid.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From E. J. Ratigan, secretary Council of Allied Building Trades, stating that all differences existing between the Interior Marble and Slate Cutters and Setter, No. 5, and Local No. 33, their helpers, having been adjusted, all objection to these unions being represented in the Central Labor Union had been withdrawn. Report accepted and placed on file.

From Local No. 148, Meat Cutters, stating that they had taken action relative to Kernan's and Lafayette Theater, placing a fine of $2 on any member found patronizing either of those places while they are on the unfair list.

Placed on file.

From Musicians Union, No. 161, inclosing contract, with instructions from their National president in reference to that the status of that union with Lafayette Theater, and stating that No. 161 had approved the contract. The action of Musicians Union was indorsed.

From Wallace Hatch, secretary of Committee on Prevention of Consumption, of Associated Charities, asking for an opportunity to address the central body on securing cooperation of workingmen in the work of the society. Placed on file.

TEXTILE WORKERS.

Messrs. Peacock and Richardson, representing the Textile Workers, of Fall River, Mass., were granted the privilege of the floor. They asked that the delegates call attention of their unions to Textile Workers strike at Fall River, Mass. On motion, $25 was appropriated for the strikers.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Delegates from Carriage and Wagon Workers made a statement relative to Elite Steam Laundry. The Contract Committee stated that the contract submitted had not been signed.

Musicians: That a fine of $2 will be placed on any of its members found patronizing Woodward & Lothrop. Also called attention to Kernan being on unfair list.

Stationary Fireman: Called attention to grievance against the Newspaper Publishers Association.
